The above example is sufficient to illustrate the absolute necessity of a correct knowledge of the truth and implicit obedience to its behests. It also shows the priceless worth of truth when received into the heart and practiced in the life. The apostle is dead, but his works still follow him. The illustrious example of the apostle has sent a thrill through the pulse of time. Thousands of loyal men and women to-day point with pride to the self-denying life of Paul, as a convincing argument of the power of truth. While the devotees of error will eventually meet defeat, "the soldier of the Lord wins no barren victories. Angels wait and watch the mighty struggle between the powers of sin and righteousness; and the victory once gained shall send its influence throughout the rolling years of time to the remotest ages of eternity."

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers;
While error wounded, writhes in pain
And dies amid its worshipers."

"How beautiful is truth! In this world where there is so much falsehood and deceit; where hearts are estranged, and reconciliations, assaults and crimes engendered—how beautiful are the true thoughts, words and deeds. Like the sun smiling out amid the angry storm—like the bright star shining out through the heavy night cloud—like friend clasping the hand of friend—like right rebuking wrong—like the lance of virtue ringing on the shield of Vice—like heaven upon earth, and God in man, is truth! Precious and priceless. Dearer than smile of friends, love of parents, or pomp of fame. Truth is all. By this we know the nature and value of things. Falsehood is craven, a dastard. Truth is bold, noble, and God-given, beyond every other attribute of the soul."

The significant language of Sister Stephenson will bear repetition:

"Since first the light of Revelation flashed upon this planet of ours, throwing its bright rays over the past, gleaming through the long dark corridors, back to the morning of creation, and revealing to the wondering mind of man the grand design of his origin and destiny, has God's Book been an open volume. All through the ages, since that great epoch, has its bright beams shed a light over the future—on through the distant ages yet to be, opening up to the vision of the astonished seers an interminable plan of redemption and glory for earth and her toiling, sorrowing millions. As well might mankind attempt to close the great volume of nature, and deny access to her exhaustless stores of knowledge, as to presume to seal up the Book of Inspiration and forbid its glorious light to shine out and illumine the world. Every attempt to shut out the light of truth, whether revealed through the volume of nature, or by the pen of inspiration, has eventually met defeat and shame. How strange and inconsistent that men should continually persist in their efforts to resist the advancement of light and truth when history is so replete with the monuments of their folly. History, both sacred and profane, abounds with cruel persecutions against those who had dared to assert doctrines, whether scientific or religious, which were contrary to the standard teaching of the day. But truth is mighty and will prevail; and though her march is silent and slow, yet with firm and stately step she strides on through the ages, mid darkness and peril, to the final goal; bearing in her train a host of brave and faithful followers who have staked their all upon her victory. And they will not trust in vain; though the triumph be deferred, yet it is as sure as that God is true, for he hath sworn by his holy name that his word shall not fall nor return void unto him. Why, then, should we tremble in view of investigation? Do we fear lest truth fall, or that crafty men shall take her captive? Though through false reasoning they make error appear to be truth, and thereby deceive the unwary, let us patiently wait and bide the time, for just as sure as God liveth will he vindicate her cause to his honor and glory, and to the everlasting reproach of her enemies. Let us, then, rally around her standard, and move on with her to certain victory, and abundant will be our reward."

"We'll not give up the Bible,
God's holy book of truth,
Blessed staff of hoary age,
The guide of early youth;
The sun that sheds a glorious light
O'er every dreary road,
The voice that speaks the Savior's love,
And leads us back to God.

"We'll not give up the Bible,
For pleasure or for pain,
We'll buy the truth, and sell it not,
For all that we might gain;
Though man should try to take our prize,
By guile or cruel might,
We'll suffer all that man can do,
And God defend the right.

"We'll not give up the Bible,
But spread abroad its light,
Until our absent Lord shall come,
To end this weary night;
We'll bow before its priceless power,
And with one voice and heart,
Resolve that from God's sacred Word,
We'll never, never part."

The Bible is the Christian's repository of truth, furnished by the Giver of every good and perfect gift. It comes from the unwasted and unwasting fulness of the Father of lights. Its central character is the embodiment of truth. Its truths are inexhaustible and eternal, and serve as food for the inner man—the mind; see Rom. vii. 22, 25—which is renewed day by day through its nourishing influence.

None can truthfully claim, during the present age of imperfection, that they have reached the ultima thule of religious truth. It matters not what a person's natural or acquired abilities may be: he may rank as an intellectual giant, and study the Bible from infancy to old age, without exhausting its truths. There will yet be left an unexplored ocean of truth for future generations to unfold. Each successive generation may unfold some glorious truth that has been buried beneath the rubbish of tradition.

"We limit not the Truth of God
To our poor reach of mind,
By notions of our day and sect,—
Crude, partial, and confined.
No! let a higher, holier hope
Within our hearts be stirred!—
The Lord hath yet more light and truth
To break forth from His word.

"Who dares to bind to his dull sense
The counsels of Heaven?—
For all the nations, tongues, and climes,
And all the ages given.
That universe,—how much unknown!
That ocean,—unexplored!—
The Lord hath yet more light and truth
To break forth from His word.

"Darkling, our great forefather's went
The first steps of the way;
'Twas but a dawning, yet to grow
Unto the perfect day.
And, grow it shall,—our glorious Sun
More lavish rays afford;—
The Lord hath yet more light and truth
To break forth from His word.

"The valleys passed—ascending still—
Our souls would higher climb;
And look down, from supernal heights,
O'er all the bygone time,
Upward we press!—the air is clearer
And the sphere more heard;
The Lord hath yet more light and truth
To break forth from His word.

"O Father, Son, and Spirit, send Us increase from above,
Enlarge, expand all Christian souls
To comprehend Thy love;—
And make us to go on to know;
With nobler powers conferred,—
The Lord hath yet more light and truth
To break forth from His word.

In this age of fables those who have chosen the way of truth can pray, as did David of old: "Oh, send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me." Psa. xliii. 3. Our shield and buckler should be God's truth. If we boast of liberty, let it be the liberty that comes through a knowledge of and obedience to the truth. They that worship God acceptably must worship him in spirit and in truth. "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him in truth." Since God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth, you should put away lying, and speak the truth in love; speak it as it is—No lie is of the truth." 1 Jno. ii. 21 Having been established in the present truth, you should walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, lest the truth shall be evil spoken of. "Buy the truth and sell it not." Prov. xxxiii. 23.

"Father of all, to Thee we look,
In this dark world of strife;
Thy Word is our safe resting place,
Our lamp, our guide, our life.

"False lights are gleaming on our path,
And mingle with Thy ray;
Obscuring Thy pure light of truth,
To dazzle us astray.

"Father help, with firm and steady gaze,
To keep Thy Word in view;
And let no fancy dashing blaze,
Allure to hopes untrue."

AUSTIN CURTIS.

Fidelity, O

There is no other country in the world where the people are so ready to receive the Word of God as in Russia in the provinces, if a peddler goes to sell books, those which are not religious are not often bought, whereas anything of a religious character is greatly valued. Last winter in St. Petersburgh a boy heard a New Testament read by an Istvostchik who had just received it. When the Istvostchik went to bed, the boy began to read it at 10 at night, and read on without stopping till 8 the next morning. If you give your sledge driver a few tracts he is as grateful as if you gave him an extra fare, and often if he meets you again he will tell you he has sent them to his family in the country.

DIED.

At Rome City, Noble county, Ind., Dec. 5, 1875, of congestion of the lungs, Sister Mary E. Miller, aged 61 years.

She was sick but one week. Convinced that she would no recover, she carefully arranged life's matters with her family, thus preparing for her departure. She expressed unabated confidence in the faith, and a cheerful hope of an early participation in the resurrection of the just. Sister Miller, with her former husband, brother Sylvanus Rice, helped to make up that little congregation of faithful ones gathered near thirty years ago at Middlebury, Ind. Few congregations have proved more worthy of commendation for steadfast adherence to the truth and its obedience than this, but death is fast gathering them. We hope soon to greet them again, when they shall appear with the redeemed from death.

POETRY.

Charity.

JAMES MONTGOMERY.

Could I command with voice or pen,
The tongues of angels and of men;
A tinkling cymbal, sounding brass,
My speech and preaching would surpass;
Vain were such eloquence to me
Without the grace of charity.

Could I the martyr's flame endure,
Give all my goods to feed the poor—
Had I the faith from Alpine steep
To hurl the mountain to the deep—
What were such zeal, such power to me
Without the grace of charity?

Could I behold with prescient eye
Things future, as the things gone by—
Could I all earthly knowledge scan,
And mete out heaven with a span—
Poor were the chief of gifts to me
Without the chiefest—charity.

Charity suffers long, is kind—
Charity bears a humble mind—
Rejoices not when ill befall,
But glories in the weal of all;
She hopes, believes, and entire not,
Nor vaunts, nor murmurs o'er her lot.

The tongues of teachers shall be dumb,
Prophets discern not things to come;
Knowledge shall vanish out of thought,
And miracles no more be wrought;
But charity shall never fail—
Her anchor is within the veil.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Thoughts on the New Year.

Happy is that people whose God is the Lord. Psa. cxliv. 15.

Happy is he who hath the God of Jacob for his help. Psa. cxlvi. 5.

Happy is the man that findeth wisdom. Prov. iii. 13.

Whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he. Prov. xvi. 20.

Happiness, like being wealthy, is comparative. A man with fifty thousand would be rich alongside of one worth fifty cents, but comparatively poor beside one worth fifty millions. So with happiness: what might tend to make one man happy would render another quite the reverse, as it depends much upon the temperament and surroundings of individuals. The condition is obviously comparative, and hence, there are various grades of happiness; and those gradations are governed and regulated compatibly with the varied conditions of mind, the diversified tastes, aspirations and circumstances of the individual.

We shall notice particularly two kinds of happiness experienced by mankind. One we would call transient, and it has its origin in the world and in the things of the world, termed in Scripture "sensual," that is, the happiness experienced is derived wholly from things pertaining to the flesh, the gratification of the passions and appetites of the "natural man" that has not yet been brought to discern or receive "the things of the spirit of God" which "are foolishness unto him." This is the character and quality of happiness so prevalent today, drawing its inspiration from thoughts no higher than such as devouring a roast turkey or goose with their usual accompaniments, pies and puddings, champagne, sherry, brandy, punch, etc., and then having a good time at some place of amusement in the evening, or dance with the tune "I won't go home till morning," etc.

The highest state of happiness of which the masses have any conception would appear to be that of pampering to their perverted and carnal appetites, and this would seem to be the God of the majority of mankind—their appetites—or as the apostle styles it—their belly—"whose God is their belly" (Phil. iii. 19,) which they so ardently and devotedly serve. And this is the character of all the happiness made up from the things of sight and sense, in which the masses so freely indulge at the time of these so-called holidays. Feasting and frolicing is the watchword.

The common salutation "Happy New Year," with the most of people is but a hollow, empty sound. Observe the inconsistency in it with some men. I give one example: One man of affluence and comfortable circumstances who expects to dine sumptuously today at a table at his own home, borne down with the good things of this world, meets his poor neighbor who, perhaps, has barely enough "to keep soul and body together," as the saying is, he hails him, however, with a happy New Year. O the hollow-heartedness, the consummate selfishness, the inconsiderateness and the inconsistency there is in these things. I hate from my heart such abominable false customs, misuse and misapplications of words and terms. The more I see of the world, and the better I become conversant with it, the more the truth of the prophet is made apparent. "For the customs of the people are vain." Jer. x. 3.

We have said that these were but momentary gratifications, but fleeting pleasures; and such are all that have their foundation in the flesh, and in the things which are seen, which are but temporal; in contradistinction to those which are not seen and which are eternal. 2 Cor. iv. 18. They must finally "perish with the using." Col. ii. 22. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. .. for all that is in the world; the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world, and the world passeth away and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." 1 John ii. 15-17. This is a timely exhortation to Christians and to those who heed it. The happy result is here described; an abiding "forever" so entirely opposite from those who find their pleasures in the things which their senses can recognize, things that they can see, hear, taste and feel, "who mind earthly things," who "glory in their shame," but "whose end is destruction."

It is absolutely certain, then, if we have "set our affections .... on things of the earth," and make the world the seat and source of our happiness we have decided only to "go for" the present, to adopt the sentiment of the sensualist, the god-belly worshipers—"Let us eat, drink and be merry for to-morrow we die," living wholly for the present, without any thought or regard for the future, that our happiness will be circumscribed by the existence of these things which are but of brief duration, hence must necessarily confine the period of that happiness to the same space of time. The nature of the things being perishable, the thing itself upon which it depended for its enjoyment must also perish, or the joy it received therefrom, at least, must cease forever.

This is one kind of happiness which the men of the world enjoy; some with more gusto than others, as that depends, in a great measure, more or less, upon the circumstances which surround them; but it is a cup, "full of mixture," at the best, as every flower in this world has its thorn, even pleasure its pain; every sunshine its shade, and for almost every smile a tear.

But there is another happiness which is as far superior to this which we have just been considering, as the bright splendor of the sun exceeds the dim light of the moon; and that happiness finds its centre and source in that which is of its own essential nature. Imperishable, it has its foundation in him "in whose presence there is fulness of joy, and at whose right hand there are pleasures forever." When our happiness originates from the fact of our reconciliation with God through the Lord Jesus Christ from a sense of our acceptance "in the beloved" from a consciousness of the divine presence, and our fellowship being with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ, we then enjoy a happiness which the world neither gives nor can take from us, and it is not fleeting and of a transient nature as the first, but permanent and everlasting like its ever blessed author. It comes from God, and hence, as durable and lasting as himself. "All my springs are in thee," the Psalmist says. Now, if our joys spring from God, as those springs are inexhaustible, so the joys which are derived from them must run parallel in duration with them, hence never end. This is a happiness then that finds no terminus, and unlike the former, leaves no sting behind. The soul seeking its peace and pleasure in God finds a satisfaction which the worldling does not in the things of the world, for all happiness apart from, and outside of God, is both evanescent and unsatisfying. The sources and avenues of pleasure, however diversified and numerous, that the world offers to the sensual and carnal minded, are after all very limited, but those that open up to the child of God are vast and unlimited; they stretch out into the undefined immensity. So while the capacity to enjoy the things of God enlarges there is an increase of the things themselves ever unfolding to the ever fulness of that joy; as it is said: "The works of the Lord are great, sought out by all them who take pleasure therein."

Again, this happiness is not so changeable as the first, and not so liable to be interrupted and broken in upon. It is a peace like the majestic river, it is a joy forever, a pleasure without the pain, the rose without the thorn. It leaves no pangs of regrets. It is something that gives no room—like the pleasures of the world—for remorse of conscience or for repentings. All happiness that is reaped from the world and has its foundation in the flesh, and the lusts and passions thereof will leave a sting to be experienced sometime or other. But not so with those who seek wisdom, who have "set their affections on things above," who have laid up their treasures in heaven, they have no regrets, no cause of repentings; for the further they have advanced in "spiritual things," the more they have investigated and appropriated these things, the more they have enjoyed, the better prepared they are to go further, every one "until they appear before God in Zion," where and when they shall receive "a great, exceeding and eternal weight of glory," a dazzling crown of righteousness, with which all the diadems of earth would be worthless in comparison. So that "happy (and only happy) is that people whose God is the Lord."

However men may estimate this condition, and from whatever source they may derive it, and where and when they may seek and enjoy it, there is one thing certain, those are only truly happy who are happy in the Lord; who are happy in the consciousness of doing right; happy in the knowledge of their sins forgiven, being justified before God; having the condemnation of death removed; having received the spirit of adoption which enables the soul to look up with confidence to God and cry, "Abba, Father." "Happy is he who (in this sense) hath the God of Jacob for his help." "Whoso trusteth in the Lord (in the sense of believing and obeying the Lord Jesus in the gospel of his grace and doing the will of God from the heart) happy is he." It will then be a happy New Year for him the whole year round, as his happiness will not depend upon the changing and fleeting things of this world, which are so deceptive and delusive, but upon the living God, the God of Jacob who changeth not. Mal. iii. 6; James i. 17.

Again, the New Year is very suggestive. It is an easy matter for men to meet each other and hail them with "A happy New Year." But how many are happy and how many are miserable God only knows of the millions with which the earth is teeming today. That it is not a very happy New Year to thousands whose emaciated forms are wasting away in cellars, garrets, and places of abode not fit for the beasts of the earth; for thousands who are wandering abroad hungry and homeless; for thousands immured in prisons, asylums and poor houses; for thousands lying under the yoke of oppression; for thousands to all outward appearance are comfortable, but in reality, are destitute of the common necessaries of life; yet there are many to-day that the salutation comes to as a mere mockery. The salutation comes to many sad hearts, to many wounded spirits, to many souls bowed down with grief, and offers no relief, brings no deliverance, but a hollow, empty sound.

There is too much inequality existing to-day in this world of sin and woe to make it a day of feasting and frolicing to the thoughtful. There is too much feasting here in this mansion and famine there in that hamlet; too much jollity there in that rich man's palace; too much sorrowing there in that poor man's cabin; too many smiles yonder; too many tears over there. I would rather be excused under existing circumstances. I cannot join with you; too much of a mixture for me. I will wait till God's New Year comes, then will take part, should it please. Yes, God's New Year will be devoid of mixture; no mingling there of want and plenty, of smiles and tears, of joys and sorrows, of pain and pleasures; but all who have made the Lord their God will be especially served. They will all be invited, all set down to the table of the Lord and permitted to partake of the grand banquet prepared by the Great King. Isa. xxv. They will all enjoy the feast; none will go away empty; Jesus will honor with his presence all of those who have honored him; angels will be in attendance there, patriarchs and prophets and apostles of all ages. It will be a blessed season, God's New Year. There will be the songs of the angels mingled with the songs of the white-robed multitude gathered out of every country, kindred, nation, people and tongue, who will sing unto him that loved them and washed them from their sins in his own blood, and made them kings and priests unto God and his Father.

A happy New Year, indeed, the new era, the golden age of promise of which prophets have sung, apostles have spoken of, and St. John has so sublimely delineated. Oh, how I long for that sublime, that glorious year of jubilee to be ushered in, "When the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads, when they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall be done away;" when the saints of every age and clime shall be gathered home; when Jerusalem shall be restored to more than its pristine beauty and splendor; when Zion shall be rebuilded and the Lord shall appear in his brighter than ancient glory; when Christ shall reign in Jerusalem and in Mount Zion and before his ancients gloriously; when he shall reign from sea to sea, and from the rivers unto the ends of the earth; when he shall break in pieces the oppressor, and when he shall stain the pride of all human glory, and bring into utter contempt all the honorable of the earth; when the rich and the mighty, and the great men of earth shall come down from their high places and bow in the dust; when all kings shall fall down before him, delivering up their thrones, their sceptres and their crowns, humbling themselves at his royal presence and acknowledging his right to rule in universal empire.

This will be the day of the Lord, the millennial reign of Messiah, when "the meek shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the holy one of Israel." The day of Christ, "the day which the Lord hath made," when Israel shall say: "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," (Psa. cxviii. 24-26); when "the righteous shall flourish with abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth." "His times when he shall show who is the only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords," the day of one thousand years, God's blessed, holy and happy New Year. Oh, may it soon be ushered in with the loud voices as from heaven, saying the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, with the voices of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, "Saying, (with one unanimous voice,) Alleluia; for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready."

Our Refuge.

If we could always fully realize that the Lord Jesus is our refuge, our sufferings and temptations, our trials and persecutions, and all the lashings of the storm of life would break as harmless at our feet as the ocean on a rock found shore.

He has said, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest." Glorious rest! Behold its author. There he stands on Calvary. The crown of mocking upon his head. See the tender beam of his eye. Look at the cruel nails that rend his flesh. O unthankful mortal, see the precious blood streaming; that inestimable treasure that enables you to flee for refuge and lay hold on the hope set before us. Heb. vi.

Again behold the refuge of the world. See him standing conversing with his disciples about the promised kingdom. Watch the glorious ascension. The form of their beloved Master vanishes from sight. Suddenly two men in shining apparel stand beside the sorrowing watchers. Why stand ye here? Jesus shall come again in like manner as ye see him go up. Why will he return to the scene of his suffering and death? Toil-worn pilgrim, it is because he has promised to give you eternal refuge from the storms now gathering over the world. Christian, are you tempted? Go to Jesus: he was tempted in all points like as we are yet without sin. Are you weary? Christ was weary: he had not where to lay his head. Have you been reviled? Jesus was spit upon, scourged, crucified. He has suffered more than we can feel. Therefore having suffered being tempted he is able to succour those who are tempted.

When a beloved friend leaves us for a long journey, and just before starting, tells us to perform a certain request, how careful are we to obey each minute injunction, how much we talk of him, how anxiously we listen for tidings of his return, and when we think his coming draws nigh how every heart flutters with joy, how often do we strain our eyes in the direction of his approach to catch the first glimpse of his beloved form. So we should be with the Savior. No earthly friend can be compared to him, for if we love and obey him, he will be our refuge and stay in hours of danger. O that we could fully appreciate that he is our refuge. O that we could learn to go to him as little children at a mother's knee pour out their sorrows. He is not distant. He is not deaf to our cries. Then why delay? Young friend, are you not tired of the world? Does its gayety satisfy you? Do you not at times feel surfeited on pleasure? Do you recollect what Solomon says? "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." Obey this injunction, dear youth. Cast away your toys and baubles, and partake of a more lasting joy, a more enduring fame, and a far greater reward than the world can give. Believe that promise in which it was impossible for God to lie. Then will you have strong consolation, and rest on that hope which is an anchor for the soul both sure and steadfast.

Thus will you be enabled to find Jesus a refuge from all alarms.

SELECTIONS.

[C. L. Irvin in the Banner.]

The Restoration of the Jews.

If the Jews are not to be returned or brought back as a people, please explain Zechariah, 8th chapter. J. W. L.

The chapter referred to is as a whole simply inexplicable, if the Jews are never again to be restored to their land. For in words, at least, it presents an unequivocal prophecy of such a return. Three different methods are suggested of explaining this away, none of them to be commended.

1. The fancy that the prophecies of this chapter find a complete fulfillment between the rebuilding of Jerusalem and its destruction by the Romans, is refuted by the chapter itself. It opens with "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I was jealous for Zion with great jealousy, and I was jealous for her with great fury;" ver. 2. In Hebrew, a future act deemed as certain as if already accomplished is often expressed by the verb in the past tense, as in Isa. lx. 1. In the next verse the Lord declares, "I will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; Jerusalem shall be called a city of truth." Certainly this all looks far beyond the return from the first captivity. In that, there was no signal display of the Lord's fury. The overthrow of Babylon by Cyrus brought about a change of rulers, but not then the predicted destruction of that city. Nor from its rebuilding to its destruction was Jerusalem ever "a city of truth." Rather, as our Lord styled it, it was the murderer of the prophets. Matt. xxiii. 37.

No, these unfulfilled statements point forward to something yet future. In Ezek. xxxviii. 18, 19, we read of the future fulfillment of ver. 2: "When God shall come against the land of Israel, ("the land brought back from the sword, gathered out of many people," Ezek. xxxviii. 8,) it shall come to pass, saith the Lord God, my fury shall come up in my face, for in my jealousy," etc. And the earthquake there spoken of is more fully described in Zech. xiv. 4, 5; while in the details of this subsequent millenial period (ver 20, 21) we find an account of the predicted holiness of the city.

The promise next following of aged men living in Jerusalem, and that "the streets of the city shall yet be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof," may apply to the city which was being then rebuilt, although the connection would locate it in the millennial period. But verses 7 and 8 unmistakably refer to what is yet future: "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold I will save my people from the east country, and from the west country, (Heb. in margin, "country of the going down of the sun," and I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem, and they shall be my people. . . in truth and righteousness." From Palestine "the west country" is the isles of the sea, the regions of Europe. Surely, no one will say that from thence the Lord has ever brought his people to dwell in Jerusalem. And yet their dispersion into the west countries, preliminary to the fulfillment of this prediction, has already taken place. Nor were they "in truth and righteousness" his people who killed the prophets and crucified their Lord. So this prophecy yet waits its time. Who these "my people" are, of whom this is prophesied, can be determined from the parallel prophecies of Isa. xi. 11, and Jer. xxxvi. 7-10.

2. Again, a further return of the Jews is ignored by the popular method of "spiritualizing," rather spiritling away, such prophecies. According to this, Zion and Jerusalem are the Christian church of the present and future; the "boys and girls and old men" of this chapter must be its converts, we judge; but what "the streets of Jerusalem," it were difficult to say—hardly the aisles of church buildings in which various detachments of Zion, so-called, now meet. But the language of this chapter is altogether too circumstantial for such allegorizing. The Lord of hosts here (ver. 9) addresses himself to "ye that hear in these days these words." To such "in those days" Zion was Zion, and Jerusalem with its streets a well-known object, which in the same verse is defined as the place where "the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid, that the temple might be built." However plausible this allegorizing may be thought elsewhere, it utterly breaks down on this passage.

3. Still another method of doing away with a future return of the Jews is found in a belief which I formerly accepted, that these prophecies were mere conditional statements to be fulfilled or not according to the future good behavior of the Jews. Undoubtedly, it is a correct principle of all good government that those who refuse obedience are not to receive rewards. But this theory assumes that this exceeding condition is never to be met in the future history of this marvelously preserved people. Are we sure they will never "turn to the Lord?" In the language of Zechariah's prophecy, when "they look upon him whom they pierced, and mourn for him as for an only son," Zech. xii. 10, will not "the fountain opened to them in that day," Zech. xiii. 1, be effectual, so that "they shall say, The Lord is my God, and he shall say, It is my people?" Zech. xiii. 9. Why the needless particularizing of these and other such prophecies, if never to be fulfilled?

But we are told, all these prophecies are done away by that later utterance of our Lord, "The kingdom of God is taken from you." Matt. xxi. 43. But Paul still later tells us, "Blindness in part is happened unto Israel till the fullness of the Gentiles be come in" Rom. xi. 25. And again: "Nevertheless when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away." 2 Cor. iii. 16. Is there a conflict here between our Lord and this apostle taught "by the revelation of Jesus Christ" himself? Gal. i. 12. Certainly not, if we take their statements just as they stand, adding nothing thereto. Israel, as the literal seed of Abraham, has lost the kingdom of God. But they may and will be pardoned and restored to their land when they "turn to the Lord," after that the fullness of the Gentiles, who acknowledge the Anointed in his humiliation, have been gathered in. Then the veil shall be taken from their hearts. We may not forget that God's dealing with us all is by grace—free, unmerited mercy—for we have no standing of ourselves. And as in the prophecy of Ezekiel, after the Lord's declaration that he will gather his people out of all countries, and will bring them into their own land, cleansing them from all their filthiness, giving to them a new heart and a new spirit, and causing them to walk in his statutes, Ezek. xxxvi. 24-27, he adds, verse 32, "Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you; be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel." Through the righteousness of another "he removed our transgressions from us," for "he delighteth in mercy." "For God hath concluded us all in unbelief that he might have mercy on all." Rom. xi. 32. The assumption then, essential to the conclusions of this third theory, that the Jewish nation will never again be included in the mercy of God, seems opposed to the whole tenor of the prophetic writings, as well as to the revealed character of God. And so we are brought back to the natural sense of the prophecy, that the Lord will yet again gather his people from the regions where they are now scattered.

Analyzing the chapter we find its predictions of two kinds; one to be fulfilled in the near, the other in the distant future. Thus, verses 2, 3 are yet unfulfilled; verses 4, 5 we may regard as spoken of the city then building. And that this statement, in view of the city's feebleness, may not, verse 6, be deemed too great for the Lord, he adds, verses 7, 8, a prophecy of a yet more wonderful restoration of Israel, which is yet future. Then, verses 9-19, follow exhortations and promises for those of that day, likewise re-inforced by predictions, verses 20-23, which are yet to be fulfilled.

The term "Old Dominion," which is so expressive and significant to every Virginian, is said to have had its origin as follows: "During the protectorate of Cromwell, the colony of Virginia refused to acknowledge his authority, and declared itself independent. Shortly after, when Cromwell threatened to send a fleet and army to reduce Virginia to subjection, the alarmed Virginians sent a messenger to Charles II., who was then an exile in Flanders, inviting him to return on the ship with the messenger and be king of Virginia. Charles accepted the invitation, and, was on the eve of embarkation, when he was called to the throne of England. As soon as he was fairly seated on his throne, in gratitude for the loyalty of Virginia, he caused her coat of arms to be quartered with those of England, Scotland and Ireland, as an independent member of the empire, a distinct portion of the Old dominion." Hence arose the origin of the term. Copper coins of Virginia, were issued even as late as the reign of George III., which bore on one side the coat of arms of England, Scotland, Ireland and Virginia.

Dew falls but little upon the smooth and brilliant surface of polished steel or burnished gold, while coarser and less costly objects are freely wet. The gentle dew of the heavenly grace often takes effect upon the rude and uncultivated, while the refined, the tasteful, and the critical are left, like frost-work, brilliant and beautiful, but cold and dead.

Let by-gones be by-gones, and good be extracted.
From ill over which it is folly to fret;
The wisest of mortals have foolishly acted -
The kindest are those who forgive and forget.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Holy Types and Antitypes.

WILEY JONES.

Moses brought Aaron and his sons and washed them with water,...And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him, to sanctify him....Aaron went unto the altar, and slew the calf of the sin offering which was for himself. ...And he brought the people's offering, and took the goat, which was the sin offering for the people, and slew it, and offered it for sin, as the first... And Aaron lifted up his hand toward the people, and blessed them, and came down from offering the sin offering and the burnt offering, and the peace offerings. And Moses and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the congregation, and came out, and blessed the people, and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people. And there came a fire out from before the LORD, and consumed upon the altar the burnt offering and the fat, which when all the people saw they shouted, and fell upon their faces. Lev. viii. 6, 10; ix. 8, 15, 22-24.

The law having a shadow of good things to come. ....Consider the apostle and high priest of our profession—Christ Jesus. Heb. x. 1; iii 1.

This induction brings to view the main outline of the Aaronic priesthood, and informs us that it was a shadowy or typical representation of the priesthood of Christ. The shadowy clouds that drift across the sky at night are sombre and uninteresting to look upon: but when the same clouds become lit up by the morning sun, and reflect his glories in richly varied hues they become extremely beautiful. So the types and shadows of the law would be comparatively dull to us but for the fact that they reflect the rays of Christ, the Sun of righteousness, and illustrate gospel truths.

Let me then briefly note the following respects in which the priesthood of Aaron typified the priesthood of Christ:

1. To the office of high priest Christ was "called of God as was Aaron." Christ was called by that divine decree which long before his birth pointed him out as "a Priest forever, after the order of Melchisedec." Heb. v. 4, 10; Psa. cx. 4.

2. The high priest was to be not less than thirty years old—"from thirty years old and upwards." Num. iv. 3. And so at the time of his baptism, "Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age." Luke iii. 23.

3. The high priest was consecrated to his office by being washed with water and anointed with holy oil. Christ also was washed by baptism in the Jordan, and anointed with the Holy Spirit, typified by the holy oil. "Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water; and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him." Mat. iii. 16. "Thy God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." Heb. i. 9. "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit and with power." Acts x. 38.

It was Moses who washed Aaron and introduced him into office; it was John who baptized Christ and proclaimed him as one mightier than himself, even as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." Thus, for the sheepfold of Israel, John acted as "the porter," opening the door to "the good Shepherd." John x. 3, 14. Christ was without spot and without blemish; therefore he needed not, as others, to "be baptized for the remission of sins." 2 Cor. v. 21; 1 Peter i. 19; 1 John iii. 5. Nor can I think his baptism was, as some say, for the remission of our sins; for then what need was there of our being baptized? This, it seems to me, would lead to Quakerism, which repudiates baptism. Evidently he was baptized to fulfill the Aaronic type, and also to set his people an example for all coming time, until his return from heaven. It is utterly preposterous to suppose that it was necessary for the pure and spotless Lamb of God to go down into the water and come up all dripping from its waves, but that people now are good enough without it.

4. Aaron laid aside his common clothing, and put on his new and beautiful garments before entering within the vail. Lev. viii. 7-9. And the Lord Jesus, having lain aside the perishable and mortal nature, was clothed upon with the shining and beautiful supervesture of immortality, that he might appear in the presence of God for us.

5. Aaron, having offered the bleeding sacrifice upon the great altar, lifted up his hand and blessed the people before he went into the holy of holies. Christ, also, having offered himself a bleeding sacrifice on the cross, "lifted up his hand and blessed" his disciples before he ascended to heaven. Luke xxiv. 50.

6. Aaron entered the holy of holies "not without blood, which he offered for himself and for the errors of the people." Heb. ix. 7. Christ has entered heaven pleading the merits of his own blood for our redemption. Heb. ix. 12.

7. Into the holy of holies "went the high priest alone" to make the atonement, and it was unlawful for any one of the congregation to enter it while he was there. "There shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel." Heb. ix. 7; Lev. xvi. 17. During that time, according to custom, "the whole multitude of the people were praying without" and waiting for his return. Luke i. 10, 21. And so while Christ our High Priest is interceding in heaven we are to remain on earth, "continuing instant in prayer," (Rom. xii. 12); "praying without ceasing" (1 Thess. v. 17); watching and waiting for his return "in like manner as" he ascended, for "unto them that look for him shall he appear a second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. ix. 28. "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner." Acts i. 11. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, and the dead in Christ shall rise." 1 Thess. iv. 16. "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Luke xiv. 14. "Ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." 1 Thess. i. 10. "And it shall be said in that day, lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us." Isa. xxv. 9.

Even the righteous dead may be said to wait for him, for Job says: "All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come," and "If I wait, the grave is my house. Job. xiv. 14; xvii. 13. And so they have only, as it were, changed waiting-rooms—they in the grave, we in the world. But some have grown impatient of "waiting for Christ." 2 Thess. iii. 5. When Zacharias was in the temple, they "marvelled that he tarried so long," and when Moses was in the mount the people apostatized, saying, "Make us gods which shall go before us: for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him." And so they sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. But the Scripture has long ago intimated that there would be backsliders who would eat and drink with the drunken, and even bold scoffers who would say, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were." Mat. xxiv. 49; 2 Peter iii. 4. And so bedazed are the mental perceptions of such persons that if one endeavors to teach them the truth on the subject he is ridiculed as "an alarmist." No doubt the same sort of characters in ancient times thought Noah and Lot were "alarmists." Indeed it is expressly said that the latter seemed to his sons-in-law "as one that mocked." Gen. xix. 14. Perhaps real estate was higher in Sodom the day before than it had been for years, and "smart, shrewd business men(!)" were greedily buying for a still further rise. Planting, too, was going on, and perhaps the suburban farmers were expecting large crops, for it was a fertile valley. Luke xvii. 28.

The lesson taught by the law which forbade any one to enter the holy of holies while the high priest was interceding is entirely contrary to the notion that the righteous, immediately at death, enter the presence of their High Priest, not only while he is yet interceding, but even while they are in a "disembodied state," as it is called. Gibbon tells of the time when the impious notion was introduced which "obscured the throne of the Almighty by a cloud of martyrs," etc., who, it was affirmed, had ascended to heaven in a disembodied state and become intercessors. What is this but trying to divest Christ of his priestly office and to divide among those imaginary intercessors the honors of his mediatorship? And hence arose the idolatrous notion of praying to the dead—or "saint worship." Gibbon, however, was not philosopher enough to tell us how "transparent and immaterial" souls could intervene as a cloud and obscure any object from view. According to the ideas which some people have of such souls, almost any quantity of them could come between us and the sun without casting a shadow upon us.

No; the Scriptures abundantly teach that the dead have "not ascended into heaven," Acts ii. 34; that they "know not anything," Eccl. ix. 5; that they "sleep in the dust of the earth," Dan. xii. 2; and that what we in the present life are groaning for and waiting for is, not the dissolution of, but "the redemption of the body," (Rom. viii. 23), when Christ will descend from heaven and fashion it "like unto his own glorious body." Phil. iii. 21.

The not separating the wheat and the tares until the great "time of harvest;" nor the good and bad fish until the net is full and drawn to the shore; and the not paying of laborers until "the evening was come," all prove the same great truth—that men are neither rewarded nor punished until the coming of the Lord. Mat. xiii. 30, 40, 48, 49; xx. 8.

8. When the high priest returned from within the vail he again blessed the people. And our High Priest, at his return, will bless his watching and waiting ones—"Blessed are those servants whom their Lord when he cometh shall find so doing." Luke xii. 36, 37. "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom." Mat. xxv. 34. Countless and inestimable are the blessings "to be brought unto" us at his coming. 1 Peter i. 13. Can the mind imagine or the heart desire any perfect joy which his presence will not give the righteous? "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 4.

9. When Aaron returned and blessed the people "the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people." And Christ will come "in the glory of his Father." Mat. xvi. 27. "They shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Mat. xxiv. 30. It will be "the appearing of the glory of the Great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus ii. 13, A. B. U. version. Christ himself is the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person. Heb. i. 3.

10. Also when Aaron returned "There came a fire out from before the Lord, and consumed upon the altar the burnt offering and the fat." And when our High Priest comes, "The enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall be consumed, into smoke shall they consume away." Psa. xxxvii. 20. He "shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire." 2 Thess. i. 7, 8. "A fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." Psa. l. 3. "A fire goeth before him and burneth up his enemies round about." Psa. xcvii. 3; Dan. vii. 9, 10; Isa. xxxiv. 9.

11. When the people saw the wonders displayed at the return of Aaron "they shouted." Also the Lord Jesus shall descend "with a shout." 1 Thess. iv. 16. "The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance." Psa. lviii. 10. "As it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." Rev. xviii. 20; xix. 6.

12. When Aaron returned and blessed them, and they saw the glory and the burning, they not only shouted, but they also fell on their faces in reverential worship. And so at the return of Christ the four and twenty elders and the four living creatures will fall down and worship him that sitteth on the throne, saying, "Amen; Alleluia." Rev. xix. 4. And not only will the immortalized and glorified saints worship him in this manner at his return, but the terrible judgments of the second advent will spare a remnant of the nations as the nucleus of the millennial population. These are called "the left of the nations," and will go up to Jerusalem from year to year during the thousand years to worship the Lord of hosts, for John's prophecy must be fulfilled which says, "All nations shall come and worship before thee." Rev. xv. 4; Zech. xiv. 16, 17. If, as some Adventists think, there is to be no mortality during the thousand years, but only an immortal population on the earth, wherein would that thousand years differ in one single respect from the great and infinite eternity beyond? And if it will not differ in any respect, why call it "the thousand years"? If it is to be a special thousand years, greatly differing from all that ever went before it, or that shall ever come after it. Why should leaves be provided for the healing of the nations if there shall then be no nations to need healing? And why should there be during the thousand years mediatorship "after the order of Melchisedec," if there shall be no one in the corruptible and mortal state to need mediation? When the Lord came down to Sinai the mortal elders of Israel "saw God and did eat and drink," (Ex. xix. 11; xxiv. 11), that is, they saw the Shekinitic manifestation of Him, I suppose; just as he was said to dwell between the cherubims, by the bright cloud called the shekinah. 1 Sam. iv. 4. I suppose Christ and the immortalized saints will be the antitypical shekinah and cherubims in the millennial manifestation.

If probation, with its consequent liability to sin and death, existed in the Edenic state while the Lord condescended to talk with Adam and Eve, why may it not exist on a much larger scale in the millennial state while Christ and his immortal redeemed are reigning personally on earth?

The Israelites sinned after what they had seen at the Red Sea, at Sinai, in Egypt, and in the wilderness. Adam and Eve sinned after what they had seen in Eden. If then even the Edenic state closed with the rebellion and expulsion, is it unreasonable to suppose that on a much larger scale the millennial state will close with a rebellion of mortals and their destruction? Of course I am not advocating a millennial probation for deceased heathen who never heard the gospel, for their condition is without hope; and they have died in their sins, "being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that was in them." Eph. ii. 12; iv. 18.

But the priesthood of Melchisedec also foreshadowed some things in the work of Christ which could not be represented by Aaron and the other Levitical high priests. Aaron officiated in a movable tabernacle, and was only a priest; but Melchisedec in a settled capital was both "king of Salem, and priest of the Most High God." In this he typified Christ who "shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a Priest upon his throne," reigning "in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Heb. vii. 1, 17; Zech. vi. 13; Isa. xxiv. 23. "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord." Jer. iii. 17. "And the name of the city from that day shall be The Lord is there." Ezek. xlviii. 35.

The Sacred Way has been discovered and traced through the old Roman forum up to the palace of the Cæsars on the Palatine. This discovery, only made while the workmen were digging last month, sets at rest a vexed question among the archæologists who have so long occupied themselves with the topography of the ancient Roman landmarks and thoroughfares.

To Brother J. M. Stephenson.

Dear Brother:—Please, as all our readers are entitled to an understanding of your subject, allow a few facts to weigh on your mind touching your second article January 1st. We need only the truth.

1. The miracles were "limited in their design." But that design was not personal, but dispensational, and so to confirm to us all the Messiahship of Jesus and his mission of the twelve apostles, as "the foundation" for the upbuilding of "the household of God!" The foundation is as nothing, except it is built on these—the miracles belong, like Jesus and his divinely endowed apostles, to the gospel age. Amen. Acts ii. 1-20; 1 Cor. iii. 11; Eph. ii. 19-22; 1 Pet. ii. 5.

This, you now labor hard and long to prove, as if you felt the necessity of reinstating them, after having (in No. 1, December 18,) thrown them off from us! In other words, it seems that you were utterly wrong, in locating the end of gospel ministry (Matt. xxiv, 14; xxviii. 20) over 1800 years ago! Please recall that fundamental and fatal assumption, (or rather, I should say adoption) of error. You may not be aware that it has been held by speculative theorizers, and variously applied in unsettling the faith of about all who cherish it. It is a dense haze. Many are so consistent with this mistake as to connect the second coming, the judgment and kingdom with the end back there! For these events all cluster together.

2. That false view is like the wrong main figure in an arithmetic problem. It deranges the entire process every time, and falsifies the conclusion of whatever argument that employs it. Hence I notice briefly the illogical, irrelevant and misleading illustrations in this article.

3. By what authority do you preach and baptize? I answer, (he says, by) the authority, vested in the church to select a man, apt to teach, etc.

We have here a seeming, though partial and wholly misapplied, truth. The plain truth would refer to the authority of Almighty God, who sent his Son Jesus—the Messiah. Nay, by the authority of Jesus and his commissioned apostles, and the Holy Spirit by which they charged Timothy, Titus, and the faithful men—the elders—who took part in the gospel ministry in unbroken succession after them! Thence, we trace this heavenly ministry of grace on through the mighty power of the spirit in the martyrs, who waded through waves of persecution, by flood and flame! It was a miracle of grace; sing glory to God in songs of triumph over their foes, because they saw the resurrection and the crown of life at the end. Matt. xiii. 43; C. i. iii. 4.

Precious brethren. Do you not know that the cross has been upheld, and that grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life, commensurate with sin that reigns unto death! The gates of hell—the power of darkness that raged against Jesus and his disciples, have not prevailed to crush the authority, or becloud the doctrine of Christ! No, sir! The end is not yet. The proper authority to preach and baptize is then from God in Christ! Faith apprehends it. Amen. Go ye, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway; unto the end of the world! Amen.

There is no room nor occasion for a break—an interregnum of God's grace, or of the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth! We have, then, the same authority for preaching and baptizing believers now, as they had 1800 or 1700 years ago, and will have till the end. Amen.

4. The legate of our government, and all who live under it through all the gradations of office and of citizenship, are bound in their relations to it by one and the same authority; so the humble school teacher, through all the gradations of the school system does act, and must act, under the same authority that originated it. Surely, no one should reason so illogically as to merge and conform all authority in the higher grades of office! It would leave the rest to no authority but a kind of communistic selfishness! To my feeble apprehension, there is in each of these attempted illustrations, an inversion and subversion of the primal facts and truth embraced therein.

5. The subject, when Jesus spoke of the end, determines its import and application. If the subject had related to the Mosaic law, the preaching of the apostles in person, or the more signal miraculous wonders that confirmed their mission, then the end would have so come. But, no. The subject was the gospel, message of grace, through this dispensation. It is the gospel of the kingdom, for a witness to all nations (the Gentiles), and then shall the end come! Matt. xxiv. 30; xxviii. 19-20, and also the kingdom. Matt. xiii. 43.

The parables, prophecies, promises and prayers through all the New Testament take this range through the times of the Gentiles. Acts iii. 19-21; Rom. xi. 25-29; Heb. viii. and ix.; Rev. i. to xx.

The Lord's Supper service also shows his death till he come. 1 Cor. xi. 26. Of course, we must still await the end.

6. The example of Jesus and St. Paul is for us. Hence, it is delusive and dangerous to break its force by any notion of the end of the temple worship in Jerusalem, or the end of apostolic miracles, which were designed to lay the rock of truth on which faith could build up "the house of God, the church of the living God, the pillar and ground (support) of the truth." 1 Tim iii. 15; 1 Pet. ii. 21; v. 1-4. "Lo, I am with you unto the end of the world"—age.

The distinguishing and divine features of these examples lie in their profound humility, their submission to the word of God in life and labor. They never raise a doubt as if to show their skill in dissipating it. No, indeed; and the doubt here should not have been raised.

7. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ!" 1 Cor. iii. 11; Eph. ii.

Of course, there can be no building new with gold and precious stones on this foundation till the day shall declare—by fire—every one's work!—except as the end is, the end of this present evil world! Nay, more, that end must be yet future, or we can have no part or lot in the great reward. It is for our life!

My prayer is, that all notion of the end passed, may be disclaimed, and that our faith and hope may rest on this one firm foundation. Amen.

The Paradise of God.

Where was the paradise of God? The paradise of God was in the first heaven and earth, proof, Gen. ii. 8. And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden (or paradise) and there he put the man whom he had formed. And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, (or paradise.) Is there a paradise now? There is no paradise now; paradise is lost. We look back to paradise lost and forward to paradise restored. For God has promised. But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord. Numb. xiv. 21.

Also Ezek. xlvii. 12; And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed; it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary; and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine. We are now, according to Peter, in the second heaven and earth. "Whereby the world that then was being overflowed with water, perished: But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. . . . . .

"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," 2 Peter iii. 6, 7, 9, 13. Therefore it was impossible for the thief to go to paradise when there was none. But paradise will be restored in the new heavens and earth. The world that then was, the world that now is and the world that is to come, according to Rev. ii. 7. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God. AZORAH M. HATCH.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEB. 5, 1879.

OUR receipts for the week past have been quite encouraging. We hope our subscribers will all renew as we need the help of every one. And all our subscribers need the paper, for we are in a fearfully grand crisis of the world's history, and we shall endeavor to carefully chronicle passing events.

WE are perfectly flooded with long manuscript articles. We give up almost the entire paper this time to correspondents. Will our friends please write some short, pithy and practical articles. For our regular contributors we shall try to find room and for as many others as we possibly can.

WE can give no place in the paper to correspondence concerning personal matters of wrong or of individual grievance. All such affairs must be settled by the parties themselves, or go over to the arbitrament of the soon coming Judge. As far as in us lies, we wish to live peaceably with all men.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Is the Gospel of the Kingdom of God the Gospel of the Grace of God, and is Belief in the Immortality of the Soul Compatible with Faith in the Gospel?

Some, styling themselves The Brethren, known generally as Plymouth Brethren, make a distinction between the gospel of the grace of God, and the gospel of the kingdom of God, and say the latter was preached particularly to the Jews, and those who now contend for the same are on Jewish ground.

These Plymouth Brethren also strenuously advocate the inherent immortality of the whole human race. In this respect they are in harmony with the sects.

But is there more than one gospel under the present dispensation? What saith the Scriptures? "So far as in me lies," says Paul, "I am ready to preach the gospel to you also who are at Rome. For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." John testifies that grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. Does it not then follow that the gospel of Christ is the gospel of God's grace? Jesus preached the glad tidings of the kingdom of God; he was sent of God for this very purpose, as we read in Luke iv. 43. So we see that the kingdom of God and the gospel are used synonymously in the New Testament. Whatever may be understood by the phrase, "the kingdom of God," it was the subject matter of the preaching of Jesus for three and a half years previous to his crucifixion, and it was a theme of sufficient importance to be a matter of conversation for forty days after he rose from the dead, and before he ascended to the right hand of the Father.

We believe that the kingdom Jesus and the apostles preached was the same kingdom spoken of by Daniel the prophet: "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed," etc. If we read Dan. vii., we will find the Messiah and the saints brought into view in connection with this kingdom.

If there are two gospels, it follows that there must be two kingdoms. Did Paul preach a different gospel and a different kingdom to the Gentiles from what our Savior did to the Jews? It is true there was connected with the gospel a mystery, or secret, which had been hid from former ages and generations; but now made manifest, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the command of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith. The revelation of this mystery—that is, the full development of it—was entrusted to Paul. This element of the good news, he calls "my gospel," (see Rom. xvi. 25, 26,) and is made up of the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ—that name as a name of salvation—embracing Jesus in his sacrificial character, death, burial and resurrection, his offices also as a Prophet, Priest and King, and also the conditions of salvation, are comprehended in the same, or how we become united to that sin-covering name. See Acts iv. 12; x. 43; ii. 37, 38. Is not the free, unmerited love and favor of God most wonderfully displayed in the gift of God's Son—in our high, holy and heavenly calling through him, which is no more nor less than a calling to his kingdom and glory.

Grace is a thread of gold appearing everywhere in the doctrine of the Old and New Testaments; the whole system of redemption displays it; and every one truly enlightened by the gospel must see and admit it. Grace is used in the Scripture in relation to the whole and every part of the work of redemption, from the foundation to the top stone. "The grace of God which bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared." Titus ii. 11-14. "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; he lived a life of poverty, being rich as the appointed heir of all things, having the wealth of the world at his command, but he denied himself, that we through his poverty might be enriched." The work of redemption is grace! grace! the manifold grace of God!

The Father, of his good pleasure, gave to us his Son, and with him he has given us the kingdom—"He has freely given us all things." "In the ages to come the exceeding riches of his grace will still be more fully shown in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." Then will be consummated the divine favor in bringing the many sons unto glory, who will have the high honor of being associate rulers with Christ in administering the world's affairs in righteousness—in that day when all things will be gathered under one head, even Christ—the dispensation of the fulness of times.

Will not this be the most signal manifestation of God's grace the world has ever witnessed? "For all the ends of the world shall remember and turn to the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee; for the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is Governor among the nations." When we contemplate what the kingdom of God is to accomplish in its manifestation at the appearing of Christ, surely the present glad tidings of the same which we are required to understand and believe in order to a joint inheritance with Christ, must be found in God's grace or favor toward "the called, the chosen, and the faithful ones" of this dispensation, and which will constitute the body or bride of Christ, "the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." These will be "the first fruits unto God and the Lamb."

Let us be careful and not pervert the gospel of Christ by making a distinction between the gospel of the kingdom of God and the gospel of the grace of God, and that the former was preached to the Jews and the latter to the Gentiles in order to salvation. This is a very serious mistake; and this might indeed be suspected from such statements as are found the first chapter of Paul's letter to the Galatians: "But though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." This letter was written to a church composed of both Jews and Gentiles.

Jesus says: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." See, also, how the Apostle Paul characterizes the subject of his preaching, in that touching scene where he addresses the elders of the church at Ephesus, and rehearses the character of his labors among them publicly and from house to house: "Now behold I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things which shall befall me there, save that the Holy Spirit witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me. But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus to testify the gospel of the grace of God. And now behold I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more. Wherefore, I take you to record this day, that I am free from the blood of all men; for I have not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God." Acts xx. 17-27.

If the finishing of the ministry which he had received of the Lord Jesus was dearer than life itself, to be fulfilling that ministry of testifying the gospel of the grace of God surely was none other than to preach the kingdom of God among them.

Again, if you refer to the history of his labors at Ephesus, recorded in Acts xix. 8-20, you will find that for the space of three months he spake boldly in the synagogues, "disputing and persuading regarding the kingdom of God." "Through the obduracy of the unbelieving Jews he removed the scene of his labors to the school of Tyrannus, and there disputed daily for the space of two years, so that all they who dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks."

So we see that the message delivered by the apostle was the same to both Jews and Greeks. This fact is beautifully illustrated in Eph. ii. 19-20, and Gal. iii. 26-29.

When Paul was a prisoner at Rome, we are informed that by appointment the chief of the Jews came to his lodgings to hear his testimony regarding that faith which he held and preached; and the informs us that "he expounded and testified the kingdom of God," persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses and out of the prophets from morning till evening, and that seeing that his audience agreed not among themselves regarding the truth of his testimony, he assured them that the message of salvation which they had rejected had been sent to the Gentiles, and that they would hear it—that is, the testimony which these Jews had rejected or disbelieved. "And so Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house and received all who came to him, preaching the kingdom of God, and those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ."

We learn from the Scriptures cited, two things:

1. That the same message was delivered alike to Jew and Gentile in order to their salvation.

2. That the message delivered was concerning the kingdom of God.

We therefore conclude that the two phrases, "gospel of the kingdom of God," and "the gospel of the grace of God," relate to the same glad tidings preached for the salvation of men, whether Jew or Gentile.

But why should the glad tidings of the kingdom of God be thought unworthy of the title, "The gospel of the grace of God"? Tell me what is the subject matter of the good news concerning the kingdom of God, and then give me your reasons for not regarding them as matters of the divine favor toward man. Why, the very purpose to establish such a kingdom upon earth is a striking evidence of God's favor toward the human race. Nothing less than the establishment of righteousness, and the utter destruction and overthrow of all wrong doing all over the world, "is what is involved in it." Imagine all the crimes, the vices, misery, cruelty, oppression, injustice and ungodliness now in the world, swept away forever, and God's will be done on earth as it is in heaven! Such is the glorious and gladsome character of that kingdom which God has purposed to establish under the whole heaven. Will not this consummation be emphatically the manifestation of God's grace? How can it be otherwise when the Lord Jesus is to be its King, armed with all the power and authority of the Almighty. Is not this the outcome of God's favor toward man? Yes, indeed, and more favor still. The gospel of the grace of God is the everlasting inheritance of all who believe and obey, be they Jews or Gentiles. This kingdom has been brought near through the gladsome message and is now pressed on your acceptance. By believing the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and the putting on that saving name by immersion, you become a child of God; and if a child, then an heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ.

Verily, the glad tidings which the apostles and prophets have announced regarding the kingdom of God is the gospel of God's grace.

But while we claim that the kingdom of God formed the subject of the glad tidings preached alike to both Jew and Gentile, we do not forget that the same message told of forgiveness of sins in the name of Jesus. Not more distinctly did Jesus declare that "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world," than that "Repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Luke iv. 47. And so we find from the record of the preaching of the apostles in the book of Acts, as well as from the apostolic epistles, that the forgiveness of sins and justification through faith in his blood was an important and essential element in the apostles' preaching, and the ground of the believer's confidence toward God. As we have before said, this element of the gospel is embraced in the things concerning the name.

Surely, then, we are right in maintaining that the sufferings of Christ and the glories to follow, the proclamation of full and free forgiveness of sins through faith in the blood of the Lamb of God, and the blessing of all nations by the establishment of his everlasting kingdom of righteousness upon the earth, formed the subject of the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which the apostles were commanded to go into all the world and preach to every creature, with the assurance that "he that believeth (this gospel) and is immersed shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be condemned." Paul calls it the gospel of your salvation.

The gospel! To me how precious the sound! In it God has placed a power for salvation, understood, believed and obeyed. O how necessary to know what this gospel comprehends! It has been clearly shown to be a compound of two elements—the one relating to the kingdom of God, and the other to the doctrinal import of the name of Jesus as affecting our individual salvation. Both of these must be known, and each must be understood before saving faith is possible; or, in other words, before we can believe the gospel.

It is a great mistake to suppose that the belief in the sacrificial part of the name of Jesus Christ is sufficient for salvation. Salvation in the kingdom is not promised to those who only believe that Jesus is the Son of God, and died and rose again for sin. It is equally necessary to believe in the promises of the covenants. The gospel must be taken as a whole, and not cut up in pieces and one or two selected to suit the taste, and the rest set aside as unimportant and non-essential. Without the sacrificial ingredient of the name there would be no means of justification by the name; but then Jesus as a sin offering is not the end of faith, but a means to the end, which is the inheritance of the kingdom with him in all his glory. A man may be well acquainted with the historical fact of Christ's crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension; but unless he understands them in their true doctrinal significance, and in their connection with "the glory that shall follow," his knowledge of the mere fact of them is of no avail for salvation, and conveys to him no enlightenment as to God's purposes.

This is particularly the case where the knowledge in question is associated with the belief of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul; for then it ceases to have any Scriptural significance or efficacy whatever, because of the perverting influence of that dogma. Christ died to purchase life. "He brought life and immortality to light by the gospel," which embraced the sacrifice he submitted to. "By the grace of God he tasted death in behalf of every one." But if we regard immortality as the essential attribute of human nature, we displace the sacrifice of Christ from its Scriptural position. We destroy its character as a means of securing life, and are compelled to transform it into that barbarous doctrine of Orthodoxy which regards it as substitutionary suffering of divine wrath in order to save immortal souls from the eternal tortures of hell! a suffering which, after all, according to Orthodox teaching, was awfully inadequate; for countless myriads of immortal souls, according to that system of teaching, still continue unreconciled to God, and are fated to spend an eternity of existence in raging, blasphemous torture!

The doctrine of the immortality of the soul, then, must be removed from the mind before we can understand the character of that salvation offered to us in the gospel, or before Christian truth can obtain a proper entrance; for it nullifies the whole system, by obliterating its foundation doctrine that by one man came death, and destroys its efficacy by entirely diverting attention from the salvation which it offers, and directing it to a reward which God has never promised. In fact, its effect is to pervert, poison, nullify and destroy everything pertaining to God's truth. It sends its jarring vibrations through the entire system of revelation, introducing confusion and absurdity where otherwise reign peace, order, harmony, beauty and consistency.

Theologically, it is an unclean spirit of which a man must be exorcised before he can become clothed and in his right mind in relation to divine truth. Hardly a single ray of the gospel can pierce the mind of a person who is intoxicated with this heathen dogma, this truth-neutralizing doctrine. It robs Christ of the glory of being the depository of life, or life-giver. It makes the resurrection a farce, by perpetuating the serpent's lie, "Thou shalt not surely die."

It destroys the meaning of language—making death mean a death that never dies! or eternal torment: and the opposite, life, (by a parity of reasoning) of course, must mean a life that never lives! "O consistency, thou art a jewel!" But this is not the worst; it virtually makes God a liar, by not believing the record he gave of his Son. See 1 John v. "Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven." Psa. cxix. 89. It needs not human improvement; God means what he says. The Bible contains no such expressions as immortal soul, deathless spirit, never dying soul, etc.: such language is the word of man. God's word teaches that man is mortal. "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return,"—is the fiat of heaven; "Thou turnest man to destruction and sayest return (to dust) ye children of men." "All are of the dust and all return to dust again." God's account of the formation of man, and of his fall, as recorded in the first three chapters of the Bible, is very simple; a child ought to understand it. The second says that God formed man of the dust of the ground (not a something to put man in). He became (that is the man formed of the dust) a living creature or soul, by the inbreathing of the breath of lives: the same animating principle which animates all creatures that live by breathing. We do not find anything like immortal soulism taught here, but the contrary; for after man became disobedient, God took particular pains to prevent him from living forever by guarding the tree of life. In view of this plain and simple testimony regarding the nature and origin of man, may we not safely affirm that the immortality of the soul, and the necessary departure from the plain sense of Scripture which this belief requires, is the basis of all sectarianism?

But blessed be God, this heavenly gift is attainable, viz: Immortality. God only hath immortality, that is, he is the only one in which the death principle never existed. In its relation to man it is a gift, offered as a part of the recompense of reward for pleasing God; hence, immortality is only for those who believe what God promises and do what he commands, and is attainable only in one of two ways: By rising from the dead, or by being transformed without tasting death, as Paul says the living saints will be who are coemporary with the appearing of Christ in power and great glory. So we see that immortality, as promised in the Scriptures, is an investment (not a thing invested). It is to be put on when death is swallowed up in victory! and that will be when the dead ones in Christ will be raised incorruptible. Who would not wish to possess such a boon? We may become heirs of the same by seeking for it in God's way, and a patient continuance in well doing. "Jesus becomes the author of eternal life to all them that obey him." Yes, we must receive the good message from him who is the way, the truth and the life.

The Scriptures testify concerning the priesthood of Christ that, "He was not made after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life." God has made him the depository of life. Proof: "As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given the Son to have life in himself." Again, "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me shall live by me." "Because I live you shall live also." "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever." These passages, among many others, are sufficient to show that the words life and live forever, must be understood literally. If all men promiscuously and unconditionally are to live forever, there is no meaning in the language, but all is plain when we make Christ the life-giver. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Christ our Lord." As the second Adam, he suffered the just for the unjust. He bore the punishment due to our sins, namely: Death, plainly showing that death was God's penalty for sin. The future state of the righteous and the wicked is almost in every case described by the words life and death. Such expressions as endless bliss or woe, everlasting happiness or misery, and others of like import, never once occur in the Scriptures. Is not this fact very suggestive, to say the least? The whole tenor of Bible teaching plainly proves that sin, suffering and death will eventually be among the things that were: that evil is not eternal. We rejoice in the near coming of the Lord to restore all things to more than their primeval beauty, order and glory, "when the hidden things of darkness will be brought to light, the counsels of the heart be made manifest and every man have due praise of God."

The World—Past, Present and Future.

J. P. WEETHEE.

The world's history has established the following propositions:

Prop. I. Ignorance tends to centralization of power.

Prop. II. Intelligence tends to equalization of power.

Illustrations: Every positive principle has its negative.

Natural World: Heat is positive, cold is negative; light is positive, darkness is negative; electricity has its positive and negative poles.

In the moral world we have the same: Intelligence is positive, ignorance is negative; action is positive, rest is negative.

Every despotism has had its origin and growth in ignorance.

Every free government sprang out of intelligence.

The same is equally true in the religious world.

Examine the three great systems, Paganism, Mohammedanism and Christianity. The Grand Lama, of Thibet, was born in darkness and has flourished through a long night of ignorance: so of all Pagan systems. The dark ages centralized the papal despotism and produced a growth of power such as the world had never before experienced.

The intelligence or moral light of the reformation has scattered its centralized power and is rapidly equalizing it. The intelligence of this age is consuming all the old despotisms, both of church and state.

The world's civil power is being equalized among the most intelligent nations. Look at India, China, Japan, Russia and Turkey. Equalization is superseding centralization throughout every political organization. Such is the tendency of the national system as a whole. As nations are the aggregate of individuals, it proves that modern intellect is moving toward an equalization of civil power.

The same is true of the social and religious systems. Knowledge is equalizing the religious centralizations of former ages. The greater the intelligence (general) the less the chance of imposition. Among nations this equalization is called the balance of power. False Christs were the most numerous in the dark ages. Of the twenty-four false prophets and false Messiahs that have appeared among the Jews since their national overthrow, ten belonged to the twelfth century.

The world's future will be no exception to the general principle above stated. Christ does not return to establish a great centralized despotism over the earth. Though he meets a world full of nations, jealous of their rights and hostile to his claims, he will subdue them, and fill the world with a loving, peaceful brotherhood of kings and priests ruling in righteousness.

Corollary I. From the truth of the preceding principle we draw the following conclusions: no human being, be he ever so good or bad, can, in this age, or in the age to come, so impose upon and get the start of his fellow beings, as to be able to establish any great centralized despotism, either in church or state.

Corollary II. The approaching contest—the battle of Armageddon—is no exception to the general principle; for the elements under the opposing standards are gathered by a double trinity of agents (Rev. xiv. 6-12; xvi. 13-15), each number of the double trinity made up of many individuals collected, not by any great human chieftain, but by principles and by constitutions.

NEWS ITEMS.

M. Grevy was accordingly declared elected, and was proclaimed President of the Republic for the term of seven years. Forty-three blank voting papers were deposited.

VERSAILLES, January 30.—The proceedings in the Congress of the two Chambers were opened by M. Martel, who again read MacMahon's letter of resignation and articles of the constitution.

The Congress, after appointing tellers, proceeded to vote for President of the Republic. Seven hundred and thirteen Senators and Deputies were present, of whom 670 voted. The absolute majority required was 336. M. Jules Grevy obtained 339 votes and General De Chanzy 99.

Vigorous measures are being adopted by the German government to prevent an invasion of Germany by the plague from Russia. The Russian authorities seem to be thoroughly alarmed at the spread of the disease, and the recommendation of a physician that infected villages be burned is favored by the czar.

The weekly report, of the Surgeon General at Washington states that the death-rate in Dublin, Ireland, has risen with great rapidity, and that small-pox prevails there among all classes of people, seventy-two new cases being received into the hospital last week. Last week the deaths were at the rate of 51 per 1,000 per annum. In St. Petersburg, last week, there were thirty-seven deaths from small-pox. The disease prevailing in Southern Russia has been definitely recognized by the Russian health authorities as the plague. At Astrakhan there were 195 cases, of which 143 proved fatal during the first two days of January. Precautions are being taken by most of the European governments against its introduction into their respective countries.

In the bureau of vital statistics of New York city during the past year, the deaths were recorded of the following persons whose ages reached 100 years and over: Fanny Wood, 102 years, Irish; Mary A. Maroney, 100 years, Irish; Mary Connors, 101 years, Irish; Wm. Moan, 100 years, Irish; Rosa Oliver, New York; Mary Davis, 104 years, Irish; Patrick Corrigan, 186 years, Irish; Mary Birmingham, 100 years, Irish; Ellen Howard, 100 years, Irish; Mary Merneane, 100 years, Irish; Catherine Cosgrove, 105 years, Irish; and Catherine Buckley, 104 years, Irish.

(The Witness.)

And They Shall See His Face.

ELIZABETH BECKET.

And so shall we ever be with the Lord. 1 Thess. iv. 17.

In thy presence is fulness of joy. Psa. xvi. 11.

Oh, the glorious consummation
That awaits the saint when he,
Having finished earth's probation
Lives with God eternally!
Oh, the joyous, holy rapture
When he joins the white-robed throng,
As they welcome him to glory,
Singing grace's triumphant song!

This the crowning of his transport,
This the highest height of bliss,
When he meets the dear Lord Jesus,
And beholds Him as he is.
Freed from every imperfection,
Faults will rend his heart no more,
But with love made perfect, ever
Will his risen Lord adore.

And when souls he brought to Jesus
Shall each shine a polish'd gem,
To irradiate forever
His unfading diadem;
And amid the gratulations
Of the better world, he will
Haste with eager steps, the mandates
Of Immanuel to fulfil.

Yes, as pilgrims we are longing
For the messenger to come,
To convey us to the mansions
Of our blest, eternal home;
But we wait our Father's pleasure,
Willing stand to work below,
Knowing 'tis for Christ, and feeling
'Twill be gain when call'd to go.

Only we would seek to lighten
By a glimpse from heaven our way,
Till life's night bursts in the brightness
Of unending, bliss-ful day.
Still this echo of His coming
In our hearts shall ever be;
"Even so," oh, "come Lord Jesus,"
May we soon Thy glory see.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Triune Immersion.

Editor Restitution:—Having read your articles on "Triune Immersion" with great interest, but seeing the subject is still not yet exhausted, I thought of adding my mite also, though small as it might seem, it might perhaps add a little light to the subject. The time was, and that not very many years ago, as I recollect the time very well, when our German Baptist friends gloried very much in their ignorance, claiming that any degree of education beyond cleverly reading and writing, with a little smattering knowledge in figures, was dangerous, and lead to infidelity rather than to favor Christianity. But of later years, since they are having some accessions to their ranks from other sects, who make some pretensions to scholarship, they have changed the programme, and now make it a point of boasting that they have the grammatical argument in favor of triune immersion, claiming that the commission, as given by Matthew, cannot be analyzed without implying triune immersion. They claim that the expression "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," is an elliptical form of speech, and that if the ellipsis were filled out it would read as follows: "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and baptizing them in the name of the Son, and baptizing them in the name of the Holy Spirit."

Now, if that be true, they undoubtedly, have the argument; but if false, their argument must fall to the ground.

I was anxiously waiting for you to take up that point and show the fallacy of their argument, but it seems that you overlooked it. And so, by your permission, I will venture an analysis of the text, but, before doing so, I will present your readers with a few of the best standard authorities on the subject of ellipsis.

Ellipsis is the omission of a word, or words necessary to complete the construction, but not necessary to the meaning of a sentence. A. Holbrook's English Grammar, p. 131.

Hence, Pinneo's rule for ellipsis: No word should be left out, the omission of which would obscure the sense or weaken the force of the expression. Pinneo's Analytical Grammar, p. 130.

Ellipsis allows the omission of one or more words which are necessary to complete the grammatical construction when custom has rendered them unnecessary to complete the sense. S. W. Clark's Practical Grammar, p. 204.

Ellipsis is the omission of a word, phrase or clause, which is necessary to complete the (graminatical) construction, and which as truly belong to the sentence, grammatically considered, as those that are expressed, but are omitted to render the sentence more agreeable and forcible. S. S. Greene's English Grammar, p. 291.

According to the above authorities there can be no ellipsis where the grammatical construction is complete.

1. No words are allowed to be omitted that would obscure the sense or weaken the force of the expression.

2. This figure of speech expresses an idea with more clearness and greater force than if all the words necessary for the completion of the grammatical construction were expressed. Hence,

3. The addition of any words to a proper ellipsis could not express an idea with more clearness or greater force than the ellipsis would express it, much less an idea that is not at all contained in the ellipsis.

In order then, to ascertain whether any given sentence is an ellipsis, or whether a complete construction, we have only to analyze it, and thus ascertain the fact. Then, with these introductory remarks I will proceed to analyze the text under consideration, viz.: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Matt. xxviii. 19.

ANALYSIS.

This is a compound, complex imperative sentence, composed of two principal members and an abridged subordinate clause. "Go ye," is the first principal member, of which "ye" is the subject and "go" the predicate. "Therefore" is a conjunctive adverb joining the sentence to the foregoing: ("All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," verse 18,) expressing the reason why he gave this command to his disciples: "Therefore, (for this reason,) go ye," etc. "Teach all nations" is the second member, of which "ye" is the subject, "teach" the predicate, which is modified by "all nations," an objective element of the first class, of which "nations" is the basis and is modified by "all," an adjective element of the first class, thus extending its application to every nation.

"Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." This is an abridged subordinate clause, equivalent to "baptize ye them," etc. The predicate "baptize," being changed into a participle, and the connective omitted, renders it an abridged subordinate clause having no subject; but, as all present participles derived from transitive verbs, "baptizing" refers to the subject of the preceding member as the agent. It has "them" for its object as participles derived from transitive verbs have the same government as the verbs from which they are derived. Hence, "baptizing" is modified by "them," an objective element of the first class, confining its application to those that have been taught. "Baptizing" is also modified by "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," a complex adverbial element of the second class, of which the noun "name" is the basis; "name" is also modified by the complex adjective element of the second class, viz: "Of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," showing by whose authority baptism was enjoined.

From the foregoing analysis it is very obvious that the expression "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," is not an elliptical figure of speech, as so very erroneously claimed by our German Baptist friends; but that it is a full and complete grammatical construction, not wanting a single word added for the completion of such construction. And he who would dare add anything thereto would not only do violence to the principles of language, but also to God's holy word. The fact that the noun "name" occurs in the singular number, and is not repeated, alone is conclusive evidence that there are no three actions to be performed in three names, respectively, but a single immersion, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. But, again, if, according to the above authorities, an ellipsis expresses an idea with greater force than the complete construction, why is it that our Tunker friends want to add to this text in order to read triune immersion from it? The answer is obvious. It is simply because the idea is not in the text as it stands in the book.

When Peter, in Acts iii. 13, in speaking of God, calls him the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, does he mean to say that there are three separate and distinct Gods, one for each of those persons respectively? Most assuredly not. Then why contend for three immersions when the command to baptize is followed by the same kind of phraseology? But the same idea is expressed elliptically thus: "The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob." So also in the commission. "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit," expresses the same idea really more forcibly than the full and complete grammatical construction. The foregoing is candidly submitted in behalf of the truth. PHILOS.

J. P. WEETHER.

A few points in this chart we do well to notice. Its origin, extent and order.

1. What originated the chart?

The question of the disciples: "When shall these things be? And what the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world (age)." They associated the overthrow of the temple with the coming of the Savior.

2. How much historic space is covered by the chart?

It extends to the second personal coming of Christ. Few deny this that believe in his personal return to the earth.

3. Are the events on the chart recorded in their true chronological order.

It will be admitted that Christ knew their order as well as the events. Did he utter them in their chronological order and are they recorded in that order by the two above-named evangelists?

That Christ would narrate great events as they were to take place in time seems to be necessary, in order to make it a reliable and useful chart. A sea-chart must have all its points correctly located to be of any service to the navigator; and how could the disciples use a chart that had no order in its delineations?

We, as a people, have, in many particulars, admitted such an order to exist, and think that we have passed nearly all the noted events on the chart, and that they have been found in the exact order delineated in the chart.

It is true that some events named early in the chart extend through. They are introduced, however, in their proper places.

That chronological order is followed will appear from Luke xxi. 11, 12: "And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven. But before all these they shall lay hands on you, and persecute, delivering up to synagogues." So also verse 20 gives the sign of the fall of Jerusalem. "Days of vengeance" mark a series of calamities that run from the overthrow of the city nearly through the chart. So also the "times of the Gentiles," verse 24.

Where on this chart are located the false Christs and false prophets? Whom did they deceive? Were not the Jews deceived by many false Messiahs. Josephus says, "Impostors, who spake lies in the name of God, deceived this miserable people." On which Dr. Lardner remarks: "So truly did our Lord say, 'I am come in my Father's name and ye receive me not. If another come in his own name, him ye (Jews) will receive.' John v. 43." The passages of Josephus bear witness to the fulfillment of our Lord's prediction "that many false prophets would arise and deceive many." Matt. xxiv. 11. "Some of these (says archbishop Tillotson on Josephus) undertook to rescue the Jews from the Roman yoke, which the Jews expected to be accomplished by their Messiah." The Jews when overthrown by the Romans were ready to follow any impostor that promised to redeem Israel.

If any person will be so kind as to mark out distinctly, on Christ's chart, the Jewish and Gentile histories it would oblige many. Has Christ delineated two desolations and two desolators, or only one of each? Does Luke follow the Jewish or Gentile history? Where are we located on this chart? If among the signs, what signs named by Christ are beyond us? Are "tribulation," and "vengeance," the same?

"Before Abraham Was I Am."

Jesus our Lord has the precedence. Melchisidek, the type, was greater than Abraham, how much greater the antitype? Is there not danger in magnifying the Abrahamic faith above the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ? See James' epistle. The faith of Jesus is a personal faith. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved.

"If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in thine heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart (or affections) man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made to salvation."

"For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received—how that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried; and that he rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures, by which also ye are saved if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you." Then, leaving the rudiments, let us go on to perfection. C. BOARDMAN.

Hartford, Conn.

The proportion of land covered with forest throughout Europe is 29 per cent., of which Russia and Sweden furnish the greatest part. In Russia, 40 per cent of territory is covered with pines and other cone-bearing trees. Sweden and Norway have 34 per cent, chiefly birch, maple, pine, fir and willow. Austria has 20 per cent. and France 17. Far below these comes Spain, with its cork woods and evergreen oak forests, covering 7 per cent. of the land, and Holland and Belgium with the same. Portugal comes next with 5 per cent., and Great Britain follows with 4 per cent. The percentage annually decreases in all countries rapidly.

BREVITIES.

Mrs. Lucy Nichols, who was 100 years old Feb. 17, 1878, died at Hopeville, near Waterbury, Conn., January 15th. She was born near New Haven, and her age is said to be well established.

A college for Oriental languages is to be established by the Russian Gen. Kaufmann, at Tashkend, at which all those Indian languages will be taught, the acquisition of which is obligatory upon persons entering the Indian civil service.

Most of the English cathedrals still bear marks of ill usage in "the troubles." Almost the only one which did not suffer at the hands of Cromwell's army was York Minster. The famous Fairfax was in command there, and would not hear of the desecration of the pride of his native county, deeply to the chagrin of those who had vowed its destruction.

Many years ago, in Clinton county, N. Y., a French Roman Catholic priest from Canada instigated a mob and burned a quantity of Bibles and Testaments in the French language which had been sent into that county to supply the destitute among this class of our population. At the anniversary of the Clinton County Bible Society, held in Plattsburgh, September 24, the agent of that society reported that he had recently visited the place where the Bibles had been burned, and found on either side of the Catholic church, French families who requested him to rank them as Protestants, as they no longer had anything to do with the Catholic church. The church itself has no longer a priest, nor even occasional services.

The Newburyport (Mass.) Herald gives the following facts in regard to the ancestors of the late Caleb Cushing: "The Rev. James Alling, a minister of Salisbury, was settled in 1687 and died in 1696, leaving a widow still young. He was succeded by the Rev. Caleb Cushing, who was settled in 1698. Mr. Cushing was unmarried, and the widow called upon him, told him that a minister ought to be a married man, and proposed herself as his wife. After some little consideration the proposition struck him favorably and they were married. Mrs. Alling brought with her some property, among which was a ten-acre lot, which is still owned by the Cushing family of this city, who are descended from the Rev. Caleb and the Mrs. Alling whom he married."

Lord Beaconsfield has always made a boast of his Jewish origin, and has, in season and out of season, proclaimed the superiority of the Jewish race to all others. It is he who said, "The Jews might well be satisfied with their position in the Christian world, for one half of that world worshiped a Jew and the other half a Jewess;" and in a passage recently quoted by a London paper he says: "In this enlightened age the pupil of Moses may ask himself whether all the princes of the house of David have done so much for the Jews as that Prince who was crucified on Calvary. Had it not been for him the Jews would have been comparatively unknown. Has not he made their history the most famous of the world? What successes did they anticipate from their Messiah? The wildest dreams of their rabbins have been far exceeded. Has not Jesus conquered Europe, and changed its name into Christendom? All countries that refuse the cross, wither; while the whole of the New World is devoted to the Semitic principle and its most glorious offspring, the Jewish faith; and the time will come when the vast communities and countless myriads of America and Australia, looking upon Europe as Europe now looks upon Greece, and wondering how so small a space could have achieved such great deeds, will still find music to the songs of Zion, and still seek solace in the parables of Galilee."

Russia Going Ahead.

1. The acquisitions Russia has made since Waterloo are equal in extent to all the empire she had in Europe before.

2. She has taken more from Sweden than what remains.

3. She has taken from Poland territory equal to the whole of Austria.

4. She has taken from Turkey in Europe equal to the whole of Prussia.

5. She has taken from Persia equal to the whole of England.

6. She has taken from Tartary an area equal to Greece, Spain, Italy, and Turkey in Europe.

7. She is 840 miles nearer Berlin, Vienna, Dresden, Munich, and Paris.

8. She is 450 miles nearer Constantinople.

9. She has taken the capital of Poland, and gone near the capital of Sweden, from which she was 300 miles in the days of Peter the Great.

10. Since that time she has advanced 1,000 miles nearer India.

Longfellow: I venerate old age; and I love not the man who can look without emotion upon the sunset of life when the dusk of evening begins to gather over the watery eye, and the shadows of twilight grow broader and deeper upon the understanding.

Human strength and human greatness,
Spring not from life's sunny side;

Olive A. Wadsworth: Gentleness—Oh! beautiful, wonderful word—almost more a flower than a fruit of Christian life, in its grace and beauty adorning the rough places of the road, leading little children, lifting sad hearts, wiping away tears, and winging wayward souls. Paul, with all his great and eloquent words, never melts the heart so truly as when he says, with an irresistible appeal, "I Paul beseech you by the gentleness of Christ."

Morning is holy, but a holier charm
Lies folded close in evening's robes of balm,
And weary man must ever love her best,
For morning calls to toil, but night to rest.
Until the evening one must weep and toil,
Plough life's stern furrow, dig the weedy soil,
Tread with sad feet our rough and thorny way,
And bear the heat and burden of the day.
O! when the sun kissing may we glide
Like summer evening down the golden tide;
And leave behind us, as we pass away,
Sweet starry twilight round our sleeping day.

Errata.

In my article in RESTITUTION of Nov. 27th, on first page, where the sentence reads—"They, the Plymouth brethren, the Catholic apostolic church, and others, have built of ground trucks," read "ground trucks." In the paper of Dec. 18th, first page, in the article "A reason wonders is France," where the word says, "A peace meeting was held in Winchester Town Hall" &c., read Manchester Town Hall. I may add that this building for eminently and elegance has scarcely an equal on earth. H. HUTH.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOTICE.

I expect to spend the remainder of the winter in Kansas. Brethren wishing my labors may write me at Morrill, Brown county, Kansas.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

The conference of brethren in Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin will convene at the School House near Simon Benner's, in Carroll county, Ill., Feb. 7, 1879, and continue over Sunday. Those coming by rail will step at Lanark, and let the brethren know, Reuben, Elliot, Stoudley, Gleckley. There will be conveyances to carry those who come on Friday to the place of meeting. A general invitation is extended to all, and a good time is expected in the way of encouragement to continue us in the good cause of truth.

By order of the brethren,

J. S. ARNOLD.

Wanted.

The address of R. S. (or L.) Clark will greatly oblige D. A. WARNER, Junior, Plymouth Co., Iowa. Jan2tf

Notice.

To the Brethren in the West.—Will you please write me, or address me through THE RESTITUTION where you will be next week? I would get letters for the future? Address H. O. Stone, Empire, McPherson county, Kansas.

POETRY.

Then.

L. M. BURGESS.

There comes a great and awful day,
A dreadful morn, when men shall pray
The rocks to hide them from its ray.

When the great Lord of earth and skies
Shall in His righteous wrath arise
And smite us with his stormy eyes!

Eyes that with tenderness once shone,
That more than once were overrun
With tears for sins that men had done.

Eyes that grew dark with bitter woe,
Filled with a grief we cannot know,
What marvel they should smite us so?

Yet if they smite, they smite to heal,
And to our wounded hearts reveal
Himself, with tenderest appeal.

And in that great and awful hour
When men shall see and own His power,
A marvelous and radiant flower

Will burst into a glorious bloom,
And all abroad its sweet perfume
Will lighten places filled with gloom.

The Rose of Sharon fair and bright
Will fill the earth with fragrant light,
And banish death, and grief, and night.

Then shall there be but sweet amaze
To fill the long and happy days,
Each day a note in life's song of praise.

Were Miracles Designed to be Perpetual?

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Surely the many plain Bible statements I quoted to sustain the position I took in my first article, were entitled to a more candid notice than the charge of speculation. This charge is urged against our views in reference to the mortality of man, the unconsciousness of the dead, and nearly all the positions we, as a people, believe. I had a right to expect a critical exegesis of these texts, giving cogent reasons why I had misapplied them. The design of this long list of questions seems to be to divert the attention of the reader or to prejudice his mind against the first of a series of articles. No plainer Bible statements or logical conclusions can be drawn to sustain any Bible doctrine. The minds of the readers should be free from prejudice to read a connected chain of evidence instead of a lot of questions diverting and confusing his mind. The readers are capable of weighing the arguments pro and con without the aid of prejudice or prepossessions involved in the charge of speculation. Truth needs no foreign allies.

Having completed my articles, I shall be happy to answer any pertinent questions. The question as to what the design of miracles to what may very appropriately be called the apostolic age. Meet and confute these arguments with plainer Bible evidence and more cogent and logical conclusions, or leave them intact with their strength and symmetry to be investigated by the unprejudiced reader, without the charge of "speculative," the weakest of all weapons, or loading them with questions piled upon the head before the body of argument had been even introduced. Let patience have her perfect work.

But, says one, the phrase "apostolic age," is not in the Bible. True, nor is the phrase "Christian age.' They may, however, represent Bible ideas if correctly applied. In confirmation of this, I quote the language of our very careful and intelligent editor. Speaking of trine immersion, he says: "There is an interim of about a century between the apostolic age and the first century between the age of the earliest of the church fathers, as they are termed." Subtracting the lives of the apostles, or era in which they were personal actors, from the beginning of the age of the reputed fathers, in the article from which I clipped the above heading, he terminates the apostolic age with the lives of the apostles. The doctrinal import of the context of the texts in which the word age occurs, must determine its relative position, whether relating to past, present, or future events. With this simple rule I find no difficulty in arranging the ages past, present, or future. But, if it has a stereotyped meaning, and always relates to the present or future age, I find insuperable difficulties.

To resume the thread of argument where I left off in my last article, I would invite careful attention to 1 Cor. xii. 7, which is adduced by the advocates of the perpetuity of miracles to prove that the miraculous gifts of the spirit were designed for all Christians. It reads, "But the manifestations of the spirit is given to every man to profit withal."

1. It does not follow because the operations of the spirit were manifested to every man, that therefore, every man worked miracles, or was invested with miraculous power. The miraculous power of the spirit was manifested through Philip at Samaria, and yet none except Philip could work miracles. The manifestation of the spirit through the word of faith which will make a man wise unto salvation is one thing, and the gift of prophecy, or power to work miracles, is quite another. Miraculous power was given to the fourth class named, to confirm the word of wisdom, knowledge and faith as plainly stated.

2. In the enumeration of the subjects to whom was given the manifestation of the spirit no miracles are named in reference to the first three classes mentioned. It reads: "For to one is given the spirit of the word of wisdom; to another the spirit of knowledge by the same spirit; to another faith by the same spirit." Verses 8, 9.

In these three promises nothing is said about miracles, or necessitating miraculous power any more than it is necessary to-day that, through the word knowledge, wisdom and faith, should be produced. The knowledge and wisdom of the word of the spirit produces faith; "So then, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Rom. x. 17. It is called the word of knowledge because it produces knowledge the same as it produces faith. "The word of faith which we preach," Paul says, in Rom. x. 8. Again, he says, the gospel "is the power and wisdom of God." Rom. i. 16; 1 Cor. i. 24.

3. When miraculous gifts are referred to they are mentioned in unmistakable language. The apostle continues his enumeration, saying: "To another the gift of healing by the same spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another diverse kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues. But all these worketh that one and self-same spirit dividing to every man severally as he will." Verses 9-11. It does not follow because the same spirit was manifested to all, that, therefore, all were clothed with miraculous power.

In the first enumerator of miraculous gifts there is a marked difference between those through whom the spirit operated and those to whom these operations were manifested. The only instrumentality named through which knowledge, wisdom and faith were produced is the word. The same apostles, according to the foregoing testimony, refer the same effects to the same cause, viz: "The word of God—the word of faith which the apostles preached—the Gospel of Christ."

Thus are removed the strongest texts to prove that the miraculous gift of the spirit was to every Christian; and thus array one part of the word against another, and raise the floodgate for the wildest speculation and utopian views, in which Mormons and Spiritualists will come for their share of confidence. The moment we leave the word of truth we are at sea without compass or chart.

At the 28th verse Paul enumerates these gifts which God had placed in his church, and asks questions to be answered negatively, showing that all did not receive the lowest grades of miraculous gifts. He says, "And God hath set some (not all) in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." Some of these qualifications certainly do not involve miraculous power, such as teachers, helpers, &c. Then he asks questions, showing that all the brethren in that church were not included in the enumeration of miraculous gifts. He asks the questions, are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? But covet earnestly the best gifts! In contrast with the aggregation of those to whom the gifts were promised, there were some who had none of these gifts.

The apostle climaxes with offering to show those brethren a more excellent way. The more excellent way he showed them was "faith, hope and love," which survived the passing away of all these splendid gifts. He shows that a man may possess the best of all these gifts and yet be nothing—and yet not be in the more excellent way—and yet with all these wonderful gifts be nothing. But he cannot possess these cardinal virtues which survive the passing away of all these miraculous gifts without being a Christian and heir of the kingdom of God. The apostle adds, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains, and have not love I am nothing." 1 Cor. xiii. 1, 2.

According to the foregoing declarations of the apostle, a man may possess the most important of all the miraculous gifts of the spirit and yet not possess this crowning virtue of Christian character—and yet be nothing. These miraculous gifts, therefore, were not essential to salvation even in the days of their manifestation. They were only designed to confirm the word by which that faith, without which it is impossible to please God, is produced. Rom. x. 17; Heb. xi. 6.

A man could not be a Christian without love, but he could have power to work all the most wonderful miracles ever wrought, and yet not have love; therefore a man may be a Christian and please God and yet not have any miraculous power.

Thus the perpetuity of miracles is not necessary to the perpetuity of Christianity, or to the existence of the Christian church.

Having thus prepared the way, he taught in language just as plain as that in which he taught that these gifts had been placed in the church that they should pass away. Thus he said, "Love never faileth; but whither there be prophecies they shall fail; whither there be tongues they shall cease; whither there be knowledge it shall vanish away." verse 8. Thus teaching that just as certainly as love never faileth, so certainly all these splendid gifts shall fail. Why this contrast between those miraculous gifts that should cease, vanish suddenly, or disappear, and that faith, hope and love should remain? Thus he says in conclusion, "And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love." verse 13.

1. The most wonderful gifts or miracles were of no use except to confirm the work.

2. A man may possess all these miraculous gifts, and not be a Christian.

3. It is positively affirmed that these marvelous gifts shall fail, cease and vanish away, in direct contrast with love which never faileth.

4. Faith, hope and love were to remain in contrast with the most wonderful gifts, which should pass away.

The apostle continues, "For partitively we know and partitively we prophecy, but when the perfect thing comes, that which is partive will be done away. For now we see through a dim glass obscurely; but then we shall see face to face. Now I know partitively but then I shall know fully as I have been fully known. But now these three remain, faith, hope, love; but of these the greatest is love." 1 Cor. xiii. 9, 10, 12, 13. Please observe: Revelation was not given all at one time, but distributed little by little, here a little, there a little, thus they only knew partitively. But when the perfect thing had come, which was the complete system of truth, all these parts having been united into one perfect whole,—then they understand fully.

Or, according to the simile of an obscure glass, in which they could only reflect an imperfect likeness of themselves; but when this obscure mirror had become perfectly crystalized they could see themselves face to face as others saw them; and know themselves as others knew them; unless some should be so foolish as to behold their face in this perfect mirror and then forget their true likeness and thus not see themselves as others see them. Thus, the poet would invoke this perfect detector when he exclaimed:

"Would some power the gift would give me,
To see myself as others see me."

The perfect thing is the perfect mirror in which every man can read his character with unerring accuracy. The perfect law of liberty, in which we find revealed the perfect character of Christ with which by comparing our characters we may see all the defects in our imperfect characters. The complete rule of faith and conduct! A perfect revelation—so perfect that another word would have marred its symmetry and perfection. It is absolutely perfect in its evidence—so much so, that one additional evidence would be not only superfluous, but brand it with imperfection.

Thus it closes with the denunciations of judgment upon any man who shall add another word to its prophecies or miraculous evidence.

SELECTIONS.

[Sophia Bomplant to New York Observer.]

An Italian in Palestine.

Signor Pierotti, an Italian who has spent twenty-four years in the Holy Land, has recently given several lectures in Rome under the auspices of the Geographical Society. He is an old man, with a long, white beard, but his form is erect and his eye bright. The courage, perseverance and intelligence with which he has prosecuted his researches in Palestine still animate him, and it is rare to hear a more interesting lecture. He was one of the Italian patriots of 1848-9, and took part in all the battles of that period. He then went to Palestine, where he was appointed Colonel of a Turkish regiment, and he was also an engineer and architect in the city of Jerusalem. Thus he combined all the requisites for an intelligent examination of that ancient country.

His military position, as well as his quality of engineer, gave him access to all parts of the country, while the soldiers he commanded were a protection in desolate places.

During a long series of years he has studied the localities and the ruins of that interesting country. With the Bible in his hand, he has compared its names and its histories with the names of the places and with the traditions of the inhabitants. The result of this patient investigation is a conviction of the truth of the Bible histories and of the literal fulfilment of prophecy. He believes that the desert shall again rejoice and blossom as the rose, and that the Jewish people will be restored to the land promised four thousand years ago to Abraham and his children forever. He draws this conviction from the great exactness with which some of the prophecies have already been fulfilled, the words of Isaiah and the prophets being an exact picture of the actual facts.

During Signor Pierotti's long residence in Palestine he has made excavations at Hebron, at the five cities of the dead Sea, at Jerusalem, and many other localities. The results of these excavations are a rich collection of antique objects, which he desires to sell to the Italian government. I suggested to him that he could dispose of it more easily in England or the United States, where the interest in Palestine is greater than it is in Italy; but as he is an Italian he would prefer to sell it to his own nation. This idea is very patriotic, but I doubt whether Italy, will be disposed to spend money for another.

The collection consists of ancient sarcophaghi in verd-antique prophyry, alabaster and other marbles; of vases; of bronze and marble statues; arms and armor, and gold, silver, bronze, iron and glass coins. Some of these objects date back three or four thousand years and the inscriptions are written in all known and in several unknown languages.

He lives in a tower built by Godfrey de Bouillon on the Mount of Olives, from whence he looks down on the city of Jerusalem. This tower only cost him twelve gold napoleons, but he has added fields to it, where he cultivates olives and vines. But he often makes expeditions of three or four days with his Arabs, to examine the country, to compare the traditions of the people with the Bible, and to make excavations. On these expeditions he never makes a fire, which would be seen by wandering enemies, but carries with him eggs, dried beef, cheese and other similar articles of food.

THE CITY OF HEBRON.

The city of Hebron, where Signor Pierotti excavated, is divided into four parts, and the modern name given to it by the Arabs signifies "four cities." These are the cities of David, Abner, Abraham and Absalom, and he found ancient walls in the city of David which he thinks are the ruins of the house of David. In the second part he found a sepulchre called by the Arabs "the sepulchre of Abner." In the city of Abraham he found the cavern of Machpelah, where the tombs of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Sarah, Leah and Rebecca, still exist. They are hollowed out of the solid rock of the cavern, a stone is laid over them, and on the stone is placed the sarcophagus. These sarcophaghi still bear the names of the patriarchs, and he believes that their bodies are still there, as the ancient Jews, the Crusaders, the Turks and the Arabs have all respected this tomb. No Christian even now is permitted to descend into it. The first time he went, the Arabs would not let him enter, but six years afterwards, the water having filled the cavern, he was sent by the authorities, in his capacity of an architect, to remove it, and thus was able to examine this ancient historical spot.

The word Machpelah means "double cavern," which he found to be true, as the cavern has two stories, one above the other.

The same customs prevail there as are recorded in the Bible history. Abraham offered to buy this cavern of its owner, who at first refused to receive any recompense for it, but when he was pressed, fixed a price which was three times its real value. This is precisely the custom of the Arabs at the present day.

The fertility of the country is remarkable, a bunch of grapes often weighing three kilogrammes, and requiring to be carried by two men. No other country in the world yields as rich a harvest of fruit or grain, and the plains of Jordan and of Esdraelon are wonderfully fertile. Signor Pierotti excavated in the Valley of Eskelon, and found many instruments of the era of the Canaanites and Philistines. Some of these were knives of the stone period, and stones, three or four meters long, engraved with strange letters, which no European archæologist has been able to decipher.

JERUSALEM.

The old Jebusite city of Jerusalem was so well defended by precipices that the blind and lame were able to protect it.

The ancient fortress of this part of the city contains more different kinds of construction perhaps than any other wall in the world. The Protestant congregation in this locality, in digging to build a church, found the ancient walls of the Jebusites, which are made of small irregular stones. The walls of the part added by King David, on the contrary, are composed of large stones, solidly put together; those of Solomon are made of immense stones, worthy of the greatness of his kingdom, while those built by Hezekiah are neither as grand as the walls of Solomon, nor as solid as those of David. Lead and iron begin to appear in the part of the city added by Solomon, and the wells filled with water, brought from without the city by Hezekiah, still exist. The modern city of Jerusalem includes only that portion marked off by the Emperor Hadrian, and called by him Ælia Capitolina. There are thirty thousand inhabitants, and as all nations and all religions are represented there, it is the city of the greatest disunion in the world. Even the Protestant missions sent there by different denominations are divided among themselves, and it would almost seem that they have neither a common faith, nor one "God and Father of all." It was the chief desire of the Rev. Somerset Burchael, who went from Rome two years ago to a mission in Jerusalem to draw the Christians of Jerusalem together in a common bond of charity and love. His death, from over-work which brought on one of the fevers of the country, seemed to accomplish his desire, for all denominations—Jews, Greeks, Latins, and Protestants—united in mourning the loss of this excellent and devoted man.

THE DEAD SEA.

The Dead Sea is fourteen hundred feet below the level of the Mediterranean. It is a deserted spot, where neither animals nor vegetables can exist. No flowers nor verdure are found there, and the only animals are ferocious beasts that wander from the outer world of vegetation, and soon return to their forests and cool streams. It is a place of malediction, without water, with wells of petroleum, deserts and mountains of salt, and the bottom of the lake itself filled with bitumen.

When a tempest arises, and the salt and bitumen are disturbed, no battle, no petroleum days of the Paris Commune, no fire in the cedar forest of Lebanon, nothing is so terrible. The air is filled with salt which blinds the eyes and cuts the skin, and neither men nor animals can walk with ease in the uncertain and yielding ground. Here are grottoes and mountains of salt. The latter are eighteen hundred feet high, two hundred and forty wide, and three hundred feet long. All the Arab legends are located here, and one large stalactite is called by them "the wife of Lot," while the sea itself is called the "sea of Lot." The name which they give to the five clusters of ruins, supposed to be the remains of the five cities of the plain, are similar to those of the Bible. Even now the air is so impregnated with salt, that if a man or an animal remains still for a short time he is soon covered with a thick crust. Often when a mass of salt is opened it is found to contain the skeleton of a a horse; and a little lamb, which was with Mr. Pierotti, having died over night, was found next morning covered with a thick coating of salt.

The Dead Sea now begins to be an industrial centre. The bitumen, petroleum, sulphur and salt, which make a visit there so terrible, are a fountain of wealth, and certain English capitalists have discovered that they can easily transport it to other countries. They are building a railroad over the twenty-five miles from Jaffa to Jerusalem, which will be completed in eighteen months.

This stormy and deserted road has until now made the access to Jerusalem difficult. A railroad there will entirely alter the aspect of the country, and make a journey to the Holy City practicable for all. The Arabs have been in the habit of selling the salt as ballast for the return voyage to American vessels, but this commerce will now be transacted on a large scale. The salt is said to be eight centimetres deep on the ground there and the air is so full of it that travellers are obliged to wear spectacles with double glasses.

Mr. Pierotti excavated at the points indicated by the Arabs as the sites of Sodom and Gomorrah and found stones fifty or sixty centimetres long, which dovetailed into each other originally, but have now become compact on account of the bitumen. He found traces of four of the cities, but not of the fifth. Chateaubriand and Lamartine say that they saw fish and shells there, but this Italian traveler, who is no doubt a better authority than they, asserts that no animals can live in the waters of the Dead Sea. The waters of the Jordan enter the sea, a distance of nine hundred feet, and there are found the fishes, but as soon as they touch the bituminous water they die.

There is a manifest increase of late, not only in the commerce but in the population of Palestine. The Jewish population of Jerusalem has increased within a few years, and three American colonies, in various parts of Palestine, have grown rich and give work to the inhabitants. The rainy season lasts from the first to the twentieth of November, and after that the weather for several months is lovely. The rains cease but the dews fall in such abundance as to answer the same beneficent purpose. Signor Pierotti remembered the visits of several Americans to Jerusalem, and among them that of Dr. Prime.

Sectarianism.

Sectarianism has done more to injure the truth of God than all the writings of Hume, Gibbon, Voltaire and Paine. Human creeds prevent man from studying the Bible, as they are supposed to be a sufficient guide without it. Men who subscribe to certain articles of faith, are accepted as church members, whether they have ever experienced that deep and abiding faith in God or not.

Sectarianism leads to alienate men from each other, and makes them clannish and exclusive in their feelings, their sympathies become contracted, and they only feel an interest in those who are of their view, or pronounce their shibboleth.

Sectarianism leads to persecution. Men who cannot religiously subscribe to certain articles of faith, have been burnt at the stake, and made to suffer all kinds of death, simply because they would not sell their souls to the blind and bewildering creeds made by synods and councils. Woe unto that man or body of men who dare claim a free spirit not bound to some formula of faith forged in the conventions of finite man.

The Divine Father has given us our guide, and we should not seek to supersede it by inventing systems of our own, lest we go beyond the power given us, and shut out the only light which shines across our path. The resolutions and creeds of men will all perish, but the Word of God "liveth and abideth forever." Happy is he who accepts it as his chart, hopes in its promises, obeys its instructions, and has an abiding faith in its Author, who will bless us forevermore.

H. V. REED.

THE RESTITUTION.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His Holy Prophets since the world began. Believing that the Bible is the only infallible rule, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings and Lord of lords, the gathering of the living to the gratification of the fathers, the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked, eternal life only Patmos, Christ and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a loyalty to all the divine requirements, as interpreted by reason, subject to the supremacy of the Holy Bible as a rule of life.

GREAT IMPENDING CRISIS.

Progress of the Apostasy.

Transition Age.—The church and the empire were so intimately associated from Constantine the Great, A. D. 313, to Justinian, A. D. 530, or, as others reckon, to the decrees of Phocas, A. D. 606, making Boniface III. universal bishop, that the history of the one, to be properly understood, must include that of the other.

1. Sketch of the empire—A. D. 313 to A. D. 600

The Roman empire had, for a century, given evidence of growing weakness. While the pure Roman family was under the domination of a single imperial head, its power was irresistible. A new element, however, had been gradually approaching. The North-men, Gor-men, or Germans, out of the great northern hive, formed a large body of slaves among the nobility. These tended to undermine the unity of the empire. Two races, two capitals, (Old and New Rome) two languages, (Latin and Greek), and two emperors, were beginning to show their effects. These agencies, combined with the two national religions, (Christian and Pagan), were fusing the iron empire.

As in the natural world, solutions are required that the primary elements may be free to enter into new combinations, so in the moral world, the same process is required to form new political and religious combinations.

The time was coming when, on the territory occupied, over a thousand years, by the Roman dominion, was to bring forth ten or more lesser kingdoms. That these nations might arise it was necessary that the empire be dissolved, that the Roman elements might freely mix with the German elements in forming these new elements forming these new kingdoms. Before the conversion of Constantine, at the beginning of his reign, there were two emperors and two Cæsars. They were subdued, and soon after he became a Christian he was sole emperor.

The great civil events of this period were the four invasions of the northern barbarians. They resulted in the overthrow of the imperial dynasty, and the establishment of the ten kingdoms. We call it the transition age because the supreme power passed from the imperial dynasty to the regal or decem-regal dynasty.

1. The first invasion was under Alaric, king of the Goths and of the Visigoths, associated with the Sarmatians, Quadi, Alans, and Marcomani—German tribes. The western empire was devastated and, in parts, depopulated.

2. The Vandals, under Genseric, forced from their original locations by the Huns, precipitated themselves like a burning mountain on the Roman empire, by whom the naval power of Rome was annihilated.

3. The third invasion was by Attila, "The scourge of God." His mighty hosts were opposed on the plains of Chalons, A. D. 451, by the Visigoths, Alans, Franks and Romans, who defeated him.

Meeting with another overthrow at the same place, he retired beyond the Danube.

4. The fourth invasion was by the Heruli, under Odoacer, A. D. 476. He was the first of the barbarian kings of Italy. This king overthrew the Roman imperial dynasty.

Such is a brief sketch of the political revolutions of this era. The Eastern empire fell under Totila, king of the Goths, A. D. 546.

II. The apostasy during the transition age.

When we speak of the apostate church we do not include all Christians, since Christ has had a true church in every century of the Christian era; we mean the majority; for the many have always claimed to be Orthodox, and to be the true church of Christ, whether Arian or Trinitarian, Arminian or Calvinistic.

The transition age was the era marked by the supremacy of councils. The first act of Constantine, after his conversion, was to convene a general council of bishops at Nice. There were 318 bishops present; some reckon 378. The council framed a creed, excommunicated Arius, and fixed the time for Easter. They assumed the power to legislate and to judge.

Constantine made the Christian the popular religion of the empire, though paganism still existed. The first seven Christian emperors were high priests of paganism. Polytheism continued to be the religion of the Roman senate till A. D. 381. Heathen temples were either destroyed or converted into Christian churches. Christians retained for the persecution of former ages. The apostasy was struggling against two minorities—heathen without, Moses of the heathen, rather than suffer, entered the popular church, and the Christian church was heathenized. Christians worshiped the officers of church and state. Pomp and show took the place of piety, and true Christianity fled into solitude.

As the empire dissolved, its elements of power were taken up and utilized by the church. The episcopacy, or the one-man power that began to work in the days of the apostles, now that all restraint was removed, began rapidly to develop itself. Centralization was advocated to become Christian unity.

In these great councils metropolitan bishops governed. They ranked in power according to the civil position of their province or city.

The church in its organization conformed to the empire in its divisions and modes of government. The contest finally rested between the bishops of the two rival capitals, Rome and Constantinople. For many years the Eastern bishop had the ascendancy.

Baronius, A. D. 590, says: "Phocas, (Eastern emperor), being incensed Cirinacus, bi-shopric Constantinople, who had assumed the title, granted the title 'Sovereign Pontiff,' to the Roman bishop, Boniface III."

That our readers may understand how this title was viewed by the earlier bishops of Rome, I give extracts from a letter from St. Gregory the Great, pope of Rome A. D. 594. The letter was directed to John, bishop of Constantinople, who desired the supremacy, and to the emperor Maurilius and his empress:

"Gregory to John, bishop of Constantinople: Let your holiness acknowledge. Our Lord says to his disciples, 'Be not ye called rabbi, for one is your Master, and all ye are brethren.' Who, therefore, most dear brother, are you in the terrible examination of the coming Judge to say who desire to be called not rather only, but the general father of the world?

"Because of the sinful suggestions of the wicked. 'Offences must indeed come, but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh.' Behold, the church is rent by this wicked word of pride; the limbs of the brethren are offended. Have you forgotten what truth said? 'Whoso offendeth one of these little ones who believes in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he plunged into the depths of the sea.' Behold, you, our brother, arrogate to yourself the names of others. Again, it is written, 'Pertaining one another in love;' and you endeavor to take away from us that charity in which we are all joined, against reason and right. I beg, I entreat, and I beseech, with all possible suavity, that your brotherhood resist all these flatteries whosoever you think this name of error, and that you refuse to be designated by so foolish and so proud an appellation.

"Consider, I entreat, you, that by this rash presumption is the peace of the whole church disturbed, and the grace poured out upon all contrariwise; in which you can increase only in proportion as you carefully decrease in self-esteem, and become the greater the more you restrain yourself from this name of proud and foolish usurpations. Love humility, therefore, my dearest brother, with your whole heart, by which concord among all the brethren and the unity of the holy universal church may be preserved.

"Truly, when Paul the apostle heard some say, 'I am of Paul, I am of Apollos, I am of Cephas,' he, vehemently abhorring this tearing asunder of the Lord's body, by which they in some sense united his members to other heads, cries out, 'Was Paul crucified for you, or were you baptized in the name of Paul?' Then he would not suffer the members of the Lord's body to be, as it were, particularly subject to certain heads beyond Christ, and they apostles, too, what will you say to Christ, the head of the universal holy church, in the trial of the Last Judgment, who endeavor to subject all his members under the title of universal? Whom, pray, do you presume to imitate by this perverse name, but him who, despising the legions of angels, his companions, endeavored to break forth and ascend to an elevation peculiar to himself, that he might seem to be subject to none, and to be above all of them? who also said, 'I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt myself above the stars of heaven; I will be like the Most High.'

"And that I may sum all up in one word: the saints before the law, the saints under the law, and the saints under grace, the gospel—all these making up the perfect body of our Lord, are constituted but members of the church; none would ever have himself called universal. Let your holiness, then, acknowledge how he must swell with pride who covets to be called by this name, which no true saint would pretend to accept. Were not, as your brotherhood knows, my predecessors in this apostolical see (Rome) which I now serve, by God's providence, called by the council of Chalcedon to this offered honor? but none of them would ever allow himself to be named by such a title—none snatched at this rash name, lest if he should seize on this singular glory of the pontificate he should seem to deny it to all his brethren.

"But all things which are foretold are come to pass; the king of pride approaches, and oh, horrid to tell! the going forth of the army of priests is ready for him who fight with the neck of pride, though appointed to lead to humility."

To the emperor Mauritius and the empress he writes:

"Now this brother, by a presumption never before known, contrary to the precepts of the gospel, and to the decrees of the canons, usurping a new name, glorying in new and profane titles, which blasphemy be far from every Christian heart, would be called universal bishop; but in this his pride what doth he but show the time of antichrist approaches, because he imitates him who, despising his brother angels, would rise to a height peculiar to himself, that he might be subject to none. When he that is called universal falls, the church that hath consented to that profane name hath rushed headlong from its state; but far be that blasphemous name from the hearts of Christians. To consent to that wicked word universal, is nothing else but to destroy the faith."

And yet Boniface III., his successor to the Roman see, A. D. 606, accepted that "blasphemous name" which every pope has held to the present moment. This letter of Gregory the Great is full of meaning. It shows the growth of the apostasy relative to the proud aspiring head. It delineates most distinctly the progress of the centralization of episcopal power. As early, then, as A. D. 606, after the removal of the imperial power of paganism, there was seated in the chair of St. Peter, in the Roman see, a man with the blasphemous title of universal bishop of the holy catholic church, which title descended to every pope filling that chair to the present time. Under Justinian the power of the Roman see was very considerably augmented. The Roman bishop was constituted the rightful corrector of heretics. This took place about A. D. 528. Still the full power and title belong to the decree of Phocas, A. D. 606.

We have followed the apostasy, as to its proud head, to A. D. 606. Some notice relative to the church general over which the pope, from the above date, A. D. 606, onward, for 1260 years, presided, will close this article. We should expect to see changes in the church to correspond with the altered character and position of its chieftain. Some of these changes we have already noticed. Others will now be in place.

The ten kingdoms embraced the Roman Catholic faith, between A. D. 499, and A. D. 605, by their conversion they were prepared to sustain the Roman hierarchy.

Two innovations in the objects of religious veneration originated in this period, though not fully developed as in after ages—image worship, and that of relics.

"Relics, in the Roman church, were the remains of the bodies or clothes of saints or martyrs, and the instruments by which they were put to death, devoutly preserved in honor of their memory; kissed, revered, and carried in procession."

During the transition age, stately churches were built over sepulchres. The remains of martyrs were deposited under church altars. St. Ambrose would not consecrate a church that had no relics. Altars without relics were demolished. In A. D. 380 the emperor, Theodosius the Great, passed a law forbidding the people to dig up the bodies of the martyrs, and to traffic in their relics. This traffic was afterward made a source of great revenue to the Roman hierarchy.

Many went on pilgrimage to the Holy land to search the localities visited by Christ and his apostles to gather relics. They were imposed upon by the crafty Greeks, who sold to those relic-hunters, legs, arms, skulls, jaw bones—some pagan and some not human. Thus the Latin churches were honored with the bones of Paul, Mark, Luke, parts of the cross, and of the seamless garment of our Savior.

The temporal or civil power of the pope originated at the commencement of this period also. The edict of Milan, A. D. 313, secured the revenue as well as the peace of the church.

The Christians acquired a perfect title to the property which they had lost under the persecutions of Diocletian.

In 321 Constantine permitted his subjects to donate their property to the holy Catholic church; and in the hour of death deeds of a covetous life were expiated in streams of bountiful liberality.

Donations of farms and other property constituted the embryotic state of the central kingdom of Italy, afterwards called the states of the church, or the pope's parsonage. The property of this parsonage continued to grow until it covered the territory of three of the ten kingdoms.

From this time (606) onward, our narration will be confined to the words and deeds of this apostate chieftain as seated at the head of what claimed to be the holy Catholic church, the only true Christian temple of God on earth.

This sketch will include 1200 years, or at least extend to A. D. 1708. It includes what is called the dark ages, when science and true piety had given way to ignorance and superstition, and midnight gloom hung like a black pall over the Christian world.

If the banks and bed of a river are formed of black mud, the stream which flows through them, though it may have been very clear and bright when it first bubbled up at the fountain, will soon become thick, and dark, and muddy. So the thoughts which pass through an impure mind, a mind loving what is vile and evil, become unholy and impure.

The rich and the poor, the king and the beggar, must alike lie down in the grave, at last. All other distinctions fade into insignificance at the gate of the tomb, and princely dust perishes as soon as pauper's clay. That only is the true glory of man which outlives death, and outlasts the grave.

SELECTIONS.

[New York Herald]

The Resurrection of the Ancient East—The Mission of Modern Civilization from the West.

1. The wilderness and the solitary place shall be made glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose.

2. It shall blossom abundantly and rejoice, even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; they shall see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God.

Thus opens the thirty-fourth chapter of Isaiah in its exultations over the future prosperity of Zion, and the whole chapter will apply to the coming resurrection of all those ancient Oriental countries, held in universal reverence as the cradle and the nurseries of the human race. This, too, is the application which herein we intend to make of these beautiful prophecies in reference to the progress eastward of the modern civilization of the West, with its irresistible propelling forces of steam, electricity, general enlightenment, free speech, a free press and equal rights, civil, political and religious, to all men of all races, nations and creeds.

We briefly touched the other day upon the boundless field of reflection and speculation laid open with the report of a special Herald correspondent of his ascent in a modern steamboat of those most ancient historical rivers, the Euphrates, and the Tigris, passing en route a modern telegraph station on the traditional site of the sacred bowers of the Garden of Eden. Looking upon the map we find this hallowed ground within the Asiatic dominions of the Sultan of Turkey, and we find therein also the localities where once flourished the splendid capitals of the Assyrians, the Medes and Persians, and the caliphs of the brilliant and enlightened Saracen empire, the glories of which lasted even in the so-called Moorish kingdom of Spain through a period of seven hundred years. We find, too, that this Asiatic division of the present Turkish empire embraces what was the kingdom of Israel, but which is, par excellence, the Holy Land, and embraces, too, all those famous ancient seats of trade on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, and St. John the Divine's seven churches of Asia, and Damascus, Baalbec and Palmyra, and old Homer's fighting city of Troy. In a word, within the area of five hundred thousand square miles of Asiatic Turkey we have more than five thousand years of the richest historical treasures of the human family; but the richest and the only priceless treasures of them all are in the history of the Jews and in the development of the New Testament out of the old Mosaic dispensation.

Moses, under the king's favor, was taught in all the learning of the ancient Egyptians. From the Mosaic code we may thus infer that those people, in his day, had reached a high stage of civilization; but the strength of the laws of Moses was derived from their divine authority and from their enduring character as a religious system. Under this system, notwithstanding their incessant wars, the Israelites, in their Promised Land, continued to prosper till the time of Solomon; and, if we may call David their Julius Cæsar, Solomon was their Augustus. Their religion, however, was almost entirely confined to their own limited realm, or to their own people in their captivities and dispersions, and is so to this day; and yet, though Jews are now strangers in Jerusalem, their number throughout the world is greater than their census under David, when his kingdom returned a muster-roll of thirteen hundred thousand fighting men.

The tenacity of the Jews, then, to their religion, preserving them intact as a distinct people through all their vicissitudes as a nation, and through all their persecutions since their general dispersion, becomes, from its bearings upon modern civilization, the most remarkable and the most important fact in the history of mankind. Those ancient empires and kingdoms—Egypt, Assyria, Persia, Tyre, Greece, Carthage, Rome—left no enduring religious impress behind them; but passing through them all and surviving them all we have the Jews and their code of Moses as the fountainhead of government, Church and State, throughout the Christian world of the present day. The little Judean village of Bethlehem is the connecting link not only between the present St. Paul's of London and St. Peter's of Rome on the one hand, and Mount Sinai on the other, but between the Mosque of Omar at Jerusalem and Solomon's Temple; for Mohammed, too, drew his inspirations from the Bible.

But under the present all the vast regions in Asia, Africa and Europe which in the reign of the Arabian or Saracen caliphs of Bagdad and Damascus boasted the highest civilization of their time, have fallen into decay and are largely in the condition of new territories, abounding in undeveloped resources of wealth and power. It has now become the mission of the cross from the West to bring about that resurrection, moral and material, of all those sleeping countries of the ancient East, and so completely to fulfill the prophecy of Isaiah that "the wilderness and the solitary place shall be made glad, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose." We have the beginning of this fulfillment in the blossoming of the desert along the Suez Canal, in the steamboats and telegraphs on the Euphrates and the Tigris, in the railway enterprises of Turkey and Egypt, in the advances of Russia into Central Asia, and in the projected English railway from the Mediterranean across Palestine and by the Dead Sea to the Persian Gulf, as a short cut to India.

What a sublime picture is this! Moses in the dazzling light of the burning bush on Mount Sinai, in the distant horizon the star of Bethlehem midway between Moses and our time, and in the foreground the cross, the steamship, the railway train, the electric telegraph, the free school, the free church, the free press, and over and around all the free and enlightened man, steadily clearing the field and building up the waste places of the earth with cities and temples, schools and factories, gardens, farms and vineyards, back to "the seven churches of Asia," to Judea, to the land of Moab, to Nineveh, Babylon and the Garden of Eden. What a glorious mission is this for the West, and its potential appliances of modern science! What a field for the English-speaking races, States and colonies around the globe! It is a high privilege to be in the midst of the grand civilizing movements of this latter half of the nineteenth century and to be an active agent therein; but what will be the grandeur and the glory of modern achievements a hundred or less than a hundred years hence? They will probably embrace the whole world in one grand confederation, in the bonds of a common brotherhood and universal peace. Then, indeed, will "the wilderness and the solitary place be made glad," and then will the "desert rejoice and blossom as the rose."

[The glorious visions of the prophets will soon be realized. But between the present and the reign of peace intervenes an unparalleled tribulation such has not been since there was a nation. But beyond the tempest destined to sweep the world with the "besom of destruction" dawns the new era of the kingdom of God. The Eden land will then once more become the world's paradise, and the whole world a summer land of peace, and plenty. Messiah will soon sway his sceptre over a creation restored. O, haste the day of restitution.—ED.

Pall Mall Gazette: The failure of the West of England and South Wales District Bank has caused a fearful amount of distress in Exeter. many cases are mentioned of persons hitherto in comfortable circumstances being absolutely ruined; such being the confidence in the bank that stockbrokers even were the first to recommend their clients to buy the shares, and up to the very last shares were being bought and sold. Those who are not directly affected by the failure will feel the effects of the calamity for a very long time; and trade, which was bad before, has been affected to an extent scarcely conceivable. Large numbers of workmen, too, are out of employment and appealing to public charity. Relief committees are being organized, and the Mayor has issued a circular convening a meeting with a view of raising a fund for the relief of the suffering shareholders. The Mayor says in his notice: "I am told that there are many aged persons and ladies who were relying upon the dividend which under ordinary circumstances they would receive next month to provide themselves with the bare necessaries of life."

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEB. 12, 1879.

We will try to find room as soon as possible for some manuscripts on hand. We have enough to fill several successive numbers of THE RESTITUTION. Many pieces fail to appear simply for the want of room. We try to publish communications from our regular contributors, and for as many others as we can. We must give some selections to keep our readers posted on current events, and to give an instructive variety.

It will be our aim to make THE RESTITUTION worthy of the continued patronage of all our present subscribers, and, at the same time, worthy of far more extensive circulation. In consequence of the liberty afforded to a free and full investigation, many things are canvassed in its columns that other papers exclude. For ourself, we are not in agreement, by any means, with the positions of some writers. We should be very glad to have more of the thoroughly practical blended with the exegetical and doctrinal. Conformity to the divine image is absolutely essential to our acceptance when the Lord comes.

The Time of Trouble.

And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. Luke xxi. 25, 26.

The prophetic periods indicate that a great change in this world's affairs is impending. In our own opinion Dr. Hales is right in making the destruction of Jerusalem the termination of the 400 years, and as these 400 years are cut off from the longer period of 2300 years, we are on this hypothesis, nearing the event, whatever that may be, that marks the termination of this wonderful period. As the destruction of Jerusalem occurred A. D. 70-73, the longer period terminates 1830-1833. For ourself, too, we are persuaded that the 1260 year period of Dan. xii. 7, measures Mohammedan supremacy over Palestine, and fixes the limit of the Moslem power to restrain the return of Israel from their long exile to their own country. Now A. D. 620-622 is the commencing period of Islam's career, the Hegira, from which the Arabian era dates, having occurred at the latter of the foregoing dates, and, consequently, the 1260 years extend to 1880-1882.

We may add that the great pyramid's grand gallery, symbolizing the present dispensation, gives its measure as 1881-1882 years from the birth of the Messiah. The Scriptures foretell that the world will pass through an unparalleled tribulation at the close of gospel times, and the great pyramid has its overshadowing wall, and fearfully straitened passage at the terminating end of the grand gallery. If our application of the periods be correct, we are already under the shadow of the impending wall, and at the very sunset of this gospel age, when the calamitous "shadows of evening are stretched out," and the question is, Do the current events of these passing years harmonize with burdens in the valley of vision that holy seers foresaw would weigh upon humanity when the transgressions of the earth should rest so heavily upon it as to leave the city a desolation, and smite the gates with destruction? War, famine, and pestilence, are each and all to be terribly destructive instrumentalities in depopulating the world of its incorrigibly wicked nations in the closing of Gentile times, and the startling predictions of the past are solemn actualities realized in the sad history of the present time.

In our own country probably no fewer than 20,000 deaths resulted from the ravages of the yellow fever during 1878. In China it is supposed that the late famine brought terrible suffering to no less than 70,000,000 human beings, of whom probably 10,000,000 succumbed to death. The Chicago Evening Journal of the 7th inst. says that the surgeon-general at Washington reports that the smallpox is raging to a fearful extent in the northern provinces of Brazil, and that 1,077 persons died in one city in two days, Nov. 28, 29, and that 11,975 persons died in that city, Fortaleza, during the same month, of which number smallpox caused the death of 0,844, and that from the 1st to the 11th of December the deaths amounted to 7,547. In still other parts the same dreadful malady is raging, and famine also is driving the population from their homes, and these starving refugees only flee the famine to confront and fall by the pestilence in their exile. To intensify the horrors, the black death has made its appearance, and the people are said to be actually going mad amid their awful sufferings and destitution, and to be devouring carrion and corpses. The latest reports are to the effect that nearly 900 are dying daily, that the famine still continues, and that it is almost certain that there will be another year of drought with all its attendant horrors of starvation and pestilence. In India an area of no less than 238,760 square miles, with a population of nearly 27,000,000 has also been visited during 1877-1878 with a severe famine fully equaling that of China in severity, although many of its horrors were mitigated through the relief measures adopted by the supreme government of India. It is computed, however, that 1,500,000 succumbed and died of gaunt starvation during the prevalence of the visitation of the dearth. In Morocco and Algiers the cholera has been raging, and a single item of news states that more than 400 Jews perished in Mogador, a city of Morocco, of this disease. At the present writing all Northern Africa, not excepting Egypt, is in a state of want, suffering, and disease, with a dark future in immediate prospect. But the darkest picture of all is that the fearful plague known as the black death in the history of the past, is raging in Asia, and, like a dread spectre, is approaching Europe, notwithstanding all the extraordinary precautions of the different governments to localize and stay its progress. Those who have the best means of knowing say that there is little reason to doubt that the epidemic that has appeared in the regions of the Volga is identical with the black death which ravaged the world in the fourteenth century, leaving, at a low computation, eighty million dead. It then, as now, came from China, and then, as now, it was preceded by frightful famines, like those of the last two years in India and China. It is said that the winters were warm and moist like that of 1877-78, and that the impure air, the lack of food, and the vast number of half-buried corpses all tended to breed and perpetuate the dread pestilence. These causes are all in existence at the present time, and should the dread epidemic commence its sweep, its onward march would be rapid indeed compared with former times when the means of transit were slow and intercommunication limited compared with present times. It took three years in 1348 for it to reach Vienna from Constantinople, whereas it might spread thus far now in ten or fifteen days. As our paper is nearly filled, we append a brief account of its former ravages clipped from the New York Sun, which our readers will, no doubt, carefully peruse. Shall probably refer to this matter again.

THE RAVAGES OF THE PLAGUE.

What Mankind Suffered in the 14th Century—The Planetary Movements of 1881.

If we glance at the history of the frightful devastations that have marked the visits of the plague to the earth, mankind has reason to tremble before the dread spectre whose appearance the Russians evoked on their pleasure trip to Constantinople, and which now threatens all Europe. Plague epidemics are recorded of almost every century. In the first year of the Peloponnesian war the plague raged with terrible violence in Athens, and Greece's greatest statesman at that time, Pericles, was one of its victims.

But not until the fourteenth century did it become a scourge to the entire world, travelling, as it did then, from the eastern boundaries of Asia through China, India, and Russia, and punishing with equal severity the inhabitants of the Pyrenean peninsula and the hardened peoples of Scandinavia and Iceland. And if the western hemisphere had been discovered at that time, and active communication and traffic with it had existed, there can be no doubt that the grim destroyer would have visited America also. It is, indeed, by no means certain but that the plague did reach this continent, since there are Indian legends which speak of a time of great mortality long before the advent of Europeans.

It is estimated that not less than 52,000,000 persons fell victims to the black death in Asia and Europe toward the middle of the fourteenth century. Of these, 15,000,000 are supposed to have perished in Europe, 24,000,000 in Asia Minor, India, and the adjacent countries, and 13,000,000 in China. One historian writes concerning the appearance of the plague in Europe: "Terrible omens in the heavens overwhelmed the nations with dread. In 1337, a large comet appeared; in following years came immense multitudes of locusts; but in 1348 the end of the world seemed at hand. An earthquake devastated Cyprus, Greece, Italy, and the Alpine valleys. Mountains caved in. In the province of Carnthen, in Austria, thirty villages and a town were utterly destroyed. The atmosphere became thick, fetid and confusing. Wine became turbid in the barrels. Fiery meteors illuminated the sky. A pillar of flame was seen over the Papal palace at Avignon. These terrors were followed by a murderous plague. It originated in China, was carried through the whole of Asia, and in Germany received the name of the 'Black Death,' because it covered its victims suddenly with black pustules, and often killed them instantaneously. It spread over the whole of Europe, and it is said that it did not rage most virulently in Germany. Nevertheless 14,000 persons died in Basle, 16,000 in Strausburg and the same number in Erfurt, and they perished in all other places in similar proportions. In Osnabruck only seven families are said to have survived."

For twenty-five years the awful epidemic maintained its annihilating sway, while at the same time drought, famines, floods, and earthquakes distracted city and country, and vast swarms of locusts everywhere inflicted the direst ravages. Meantime the whole order of nature seemed reversed. In mid-winter the severest rains were experienced, and in summer long-continued and severe frosts, and volcanoes that had been long thought extinct opened their crates anew. Some have attributed the origin of the epidemic to the atmospheric changes produced by the convulsions of the earth, combined with the decay of organic matter—the myriads of locusts and the unnumbered bodies of men and animals.

Some have also attributed that frightful epidemic to the then recorded approach of several planets to the sun. Inasmuch as four planets enter the perihelion in 1881, we have at least this similarity between the present time and that dreadful period; and this circumstance, combined with the sudden outbreak of the plague that is reported from Europe may give rise to the fears that the coming planetary proximity to the sun is perhaps to have an evil import for poor humanity.

Apostles and Prophets.

We learn from the Apostle Paul that God hath set in the church some apostles and prophets, "For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Eph. iv. 11-13.

Now, query: Was it God's design to have an unbroken line of successors through this age? Is it really necessary to obtain the end? The apostate lady and many of her daughters respond yes, a thousand times yes. Look well to your standing, for surely these are fearful, dangerous times. But may the investigation go on? God speed the right, and truth prevail. The apostles and prophets whom God set in the church are there yet. They finished their course, fell asleep in Jesus, but did not die out of the church; and as the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church, they must be there yet, and although dead, yet like Abel, they yet speak. They occupy a local position like Christ: the chief corner-stone, "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." See Eph. ii. 20; 1 Cor. xii. 28; 2 Chron. iv. 13; Rev. xxi. 14.

While our physical bodies, with their various members, furnish a fit illustration of Christ's church, as the heart propels the life-giving blood throughout the system, vitalizing the very extremities, just so the apostles and prophets are set in Christ's body—the church—for a purpose. But who ever saw a properly constructed building with a foundation extending literally throughout the entire building? or who ever saw a building with a succession of "first" timbers all through, to the very last, or top? Such buildings, to say the least, were not planned by a wise master builder. The apostles, although illiterate fishermen, were sent forth properly authorized and empowered with the holy spirit, as ambassadors for Christ, to make known to a dying world the glorious plan of life and salvation through a once dead, but now living Savior. "And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." Amen.

Brethren, the Apostle Paul, God's servant, bears testimony thus: "I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have shewed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house; for I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." Then, may we not safely say, that God's will concerning man and earth is made known, and the system of salvation is complete? Everything for our faith and obedience fully revealed. Then, why have a succession of apostles?

Again, have not the apostles clearly and fully taught the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which makes free from the law of sin and death, the law of adoption? And may not men and women to-day, who believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ as taught by the apostles, be baptized into Christ for the remission of sin, and thus be builded together for a habitation of God through the dictates of the spirit?

If this cannot be safely done without the aid of living apostles, and supernatural gifts, then why not save our toil, eat and drink, for our case is a dark and hopeless one? But if this can all be safely arranged, and we become saints, why not believe and do just as saints were once taught by the apostles, and thus, with them become perfect? Thus be edified? Thus grow up into Christ the head? Thus go on to perfection? Have we not got all the instruction they had? Have we not got enough, and that confirmed with signs and miracles? Why halt and fall out by the way? We may be embraced in the Master's prayer if we will believe on him through their (the apostles') word. While one of them, faithful to his trust in unfolding the way to life, points directly to the Scriptures as an all-sufficient rule, to make the man of God (those who believe and obey him) perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works, is not this enough?

Again, if God, who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, designed a succession of apostles, is it not very strange that he should entirely fail, as there is no mention in all the Bible of even one being set in the church by him, this side of Paul? In the most critical time, as the apostles were failing by death, and the mystery of iniquity raising her hydra head, grievous wolves entering in, to kill and destroy, not one genuine apostle of God came to their aid. While God is very careful to warn us, not only against false Christs, but false prophets and false apostles, deceitful workers.

In the apocalyptic vision, which reaches beyond this time, we find reference made to the "twelve apostles of the Lamb." No successors yet! Then tell me not that God designed a succession of apostles and other supernatural gifts, but was let hitherto by the apostasy. Now, if that be so, where is the consolation in contending for their restoration this side the kingdom age? Yea, more, is it not unaccountably strange, that in pulling out, and away from Babylon, we, in our zeal, take hold of her pillars on which her whole fabric rests, and toil hard, like the stout man, to have revenge, although it cost us our life?

Brethren, for the life of me, I cannot see any necessity for a succession of apostles and their supernatural gifts, which position virtually makes the Scriptures insufficient; God's plan, of taking out a people for his name, till his return, a failure, and the earth for about eighteen hundred years one dark blank, without one speck of salt or light. I fear the trouble is a lack of faith in God's word, which giveth light, and less faith in infidel writings, which only tend to confusion, darkness and death. May God save his people from such a sad wreck. Amen.

T. E. ADAMS.

Christianity Based on Platonism in Conflict with God's Word.

In the year of 429 B. C. was born on the island of Ægina a man whose genius, though admired by the world, has proven its curse. Reared amid the famous schools of Grecian philosophy, tutored by the renowned Socrates, his strong mind went even beyond his preceptor, and in the beautiful dialogue "Phædo" advanced those ideas that laid the future apostasy from the true teaching of prophets and apostles, until to-day Christianity is but a synonym for Platonism.

It has been well said that Plato has been followed too far, farther than the Christian may follow, and that enthusiasm, mysticism and fanaticism found their source in him. Men can see the truth of this when by careful study they find that his theory is both false and delusive.

Plato taught in express terms the immortality of the soul, basing his arguments on the assumption that as the objects to which it adheres are incorruptible, therefore its nature must be so. Let us examine this. Whenever a child reaches the the age of reason, he learns by observation and special instruction that man's organization is weak; that it cannot withstand the attacks of disease and death; that it needs the support of One mightier, holier, higher than itself, and that this assisting, comforting power is God. To this knowledge of divine aid man clings; but what prompts him? Is it because he possesses an attribute of that Being to whom he leans? Does strength beget a desire to gain strength or does weakness? Surely the latter. Therefore I argue that man naturally seeks a higher power, not because he has the essence of that power within himself, but because he does not possess it, because he is aware of his deficiencies, and desires to remove them.

The argument that the soul is immortal because it desires immortality is to me the weakest and most illogical thing advanced by intelligent men. Should we argue from this hypothesis, desire would mean possession. Our thirst would be quenched, our hunger assuaged, by simple longing. If this be true, we need not spend our lives in labor, mental or physical, for the talent of the statesman, the genius of the poet, the riches of the world, things finite and infinite, past or future, would be attainable by a wish. How happy that this theory is not practiced by those who advocate it, for if it were, idleness and vice would spring up like rank weeds, and the impetus of gain be lost in indolent desire.

Enfield, in his History of Philosophy, says it is well for mankind that their belief in this important doctrine rests upon firmer ground than the futile reasoning of Plato. Mankind have no firmer ground upon which to base its belief immortality. Plato's "futile reasoning" is absolutely all the basis they have, and as if inwardly conscious of this, they use his "philosophy" on all occasions. Ask any believer in immortal-soulism why he believes, and the answer will be, "I have something within my breast that tells me I have an immortal soul." But that "something" is alike undefined by reason and revelation. Thus with Enfield's argument the argument for the immortality of the soul is drawn from the most fanciful part of Plato's system.

Man's immortality, according to Plato, would not and could not be taken away by Deity himself. He contended that the soul was an indivisible substance, incapable of dissolution or corruption. Thus have we something in possession (and yet the Word of Truth calls us mortal!) that God himself cannot destroy: thus can we resist him throughout eternity. Shall we believe this? Shall we accept anything that detracts from our Maker's might and glory? A thousand times, no! Away with such a dishonoring belief, away with such a relic of barbarism! Reason, truth, the voice of Jehovah, all proclaim its falseness.

The followers of Plato contend that wherever he led, he elevated and improved the human mind. Let us see if his leadership in the doctrine of inherent immortality has done this. I conclude that his mind is most elevated who walks in the precepts and counsels of God. Aside from this there is no true and lasting elevation, for nothing is durable that rests not on him. the doctrine of the resurrection is one of the most important of Jehovah's truths. Through it alone have we assurance of inheriting an organization pure, eternal and glorious. With this sublime plan of man's re-living, Plato's so-called elevating and improving theory conflicts. His soul (strange to say of so powerful a substance) is only fettered by the body, and at its dissolution springs into the boundless air of eternity, and soars away untrammeled, incorruptible, enjoying perfect consciousness, and exerting a powerful influence over the affairs of the world. This immortal organization can exist without a resurrection, for it receives its full power at death.

But God, through Paul, says, (and whom shall we believe, God or man?) if there be no resurrection (of dead bodies) they who have fallen asleep (died) are perished. Why perished? Have not their souls been living for years? They have fallen asleep. Did Paul speak truth? They are conscious. Did Plato speak truth? They are perished if there be no resurrection, says Paul. They can never perish, said Plato. Who was Paul? A chosen man of God. Who was Plato? A heathen philosopher. Whom shall we believe? Will any honest, God-fearing man say Plato?

Thus we see that Plato has failed to improve, but on the contrary has inculcated into the minds of men a falsehood that leads them further and further away from that Word that giveth light to the world. Many fatal errors are covered by the name of Plato, but the most fatal, that which to-day rears its colleges and cathedrals under the shadow of the cross, and finds millions of supporters, is the seductive error of man's immortality.

The evils of this error are manifold. One is that no conscience is the voice of the soul, the plan of worship most acceptable to the individual's conscience is also acceptable to God. This would be true if conscience were the voice of the soul, and if that soul's aspirations were godlike and pure. But this is not so. Conscience being but a property of mind produced by association and training, and mind being dependent on matter for existence, it follows that conscience is not a guide to what is right and wrong. For instance, that result of training called conscience teaches the heathen to worship idols, while the same thing teaches the Christian to abhor them. Thus we see that man has no right to worship according to the dictates of conscience and yet be accepted; but he must worship according to God's plan. He has laid down certain rules for our guidance, which if we follow we shall be saved. This mistaken notion of worship is the result of Plato's dogma, for when rid of it God's commands appear luminous with the steady, burning light of the gospel.

The ignorance that alienates from the life in Christ springs from Platonism. Men believe the Bible is a mystery simply because, enshrouded in mist themselves, they cannot see the sunlight of truth as it is in Jesus. The doctrine that man possesses an indestructible principle that survives death, creates for its reception a place of happiness or woe, in the creation of which the imagination is called on, and the result is a beautiful paradise beyond the skies, decked with rare and costly gems, glorious with the company of the saved; and a horrible pit filled with molten fire, hideous with the shrieks of the damned. When a believer in this opens the Word of Life, failing to find the ideas of his teachers advanced there, he is mystified, and to increase his bewilderment, he is assured that the finite cannot understand the infinite; so he relapses into listless indifference and consequent ignorance.

The horrible doctrine of eternal torment springs from the fruitful source of untruth. Augustine's hell and its attendant devils form a part of that philosophy against which Paul warned all Christians. Plato's name, though not confessedly, seems to be honored by thousands as one of the chosen men of God. His followers strove and are to-day striving to prove that Christianity and Platonism are one and the same thing; and so successful have they been, with the majority Plato's kingdom is proven real, and Grecian mythology goes hand in hand with Christianity.

To show how thoroughly Platonism conflicts with the Bible, let us examine some of the passages of Scripture bearing on the nature of man.

Ezekiel exclaims: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." How will immortal-soulists treat this emphatic declaration? Will they employ a large amount of that mysticism emanating from Plato? Will they assume that everything pertaining to the word soul is spiritual, and that spiritual is indestructible, and indestructible is immortal; therefore the soul can only die a spiritual death, or in other words, die the death that never dies? Yes, they will do this; but is their assumption based on truth? Does not the prophet hold up life and death in antithesis—literal life, literal death? If death means continuance in life, then can life with equal propriety mean continuance in death. But some may argue that the very meaning of the word soul defines at once Ezekiel's expression. With this I agree, for the soul is defined as "mere animal life, the seat of sensations, appetites and passions." The soul that sinneth shall die, is equivalent to "the man that sins shall lose his life," or, as Paul declares, "The wages of sin is death."

In Genesis we read God gave Adam "everything that creepeth upon the earth wherein there is a living soul." Will the Platonist explain? I thought the soul was a substance peculiar to man; something that distinguished him from the brute creation; but here we have indisputable evidence that "everything that creepeth upon the earth" possesses a living soul.

Platonism, thou art entangled. Thou canst not deceive all, for the light of divine truth reveals thy snares.

Then let all who desire to escape the snare of untruth; all who desire to walk in the path of salvation, guide their feet by the lamp of God's eternal Word.

A subterranean forest of oaks has been discovered in Germany in a valley watered by the river Fulda. Dr. Sheets, a Government geologist, who made the discovery during an official exploration, pronounces the trees to be enormous size, and to date back in their origin to a remote period. They are entirely buried beneath the surface of the valley, but several hundred of the outermost trunks that border on the banks of the Fulda have been laid bare by the gradually encroaching current of the stream. The wood has acquired a deep black color, and has become exceedingly hard. It is believed that it will make excellent material for sculpture. One trunk that was found in the bed of the river has been removed to Berlin to be placed in the national geological musem. Whether these trees are of a species now in existence or of one that is extinct has not been determined.

The Government English School at Osaka, Japan, exhibits a marked change within a few years. Formerly its foreign teachers were men who paid no regard to religion. Any reference to Christianity in the text-books of the school was omitted, and it was proposed to make for Japan a series of books studiously avoiding all reference to Christianity. Now, all the foreign teachers but one are Christians, as are, also, two of the most influential native teachers. Both of these latter superintend Sabbath-schools, in which several foreign teachers take part. The Chinese edition of the New Testament which has been in preparation in Japan is nearly ready for the press. The committee at work upon a translation into Japanese, and hope to finish the New Testament by the 1st of August.

POETRY.

My Hope.

BY. D. T. TAYLOR.

Not for all the world's mad pleasures,
Not for all earth's gold in mine;
Not for all its monarchs' treasures,
Would I my good hope resign.

Let men seek the world's proud titles
And of fame and honor sing;
Some are Dukes and Earls and Nobles,—
I expect to be a King.

Mine's a kingdom—I shall share it,
Mine's a throne—it will stand for aye;
Mine's a crown—I'll ever wear it
When the world has passed away.

Pleasure's cup and fame's bright bubbles
Fain would tempt my longing eyes;
I resign them all for Jesus
And a city from the skies.

Oft I suffer and am weary,
Oft I sigh and weep and groan;
Oft my way seems dark and dreary,—
All is bright around the throne.

I am waiting for that trumpet,
And I know 't will sound ere long.
Then I'll wear my robes of glory,—
Sing the everlasting song.

Jesus filled this hope to bring me,
Rose to heaven my sins to hide;
Angels bear to me my Savior,—
Bridegroom! come and take thy bride.

Extract in Substance from a Correspondence between an Adventist and a Believer in the Restitution.

"Dear brother: Your last letter has been received—also papers. I am sick with a cold and very nervous. . . . . I would like to see you very much. I believe you to be an honest Christian, but I fear you are running wild on some of these new theories. As for the restoration of literal Israel, I can not see it. . . . . I understand that the throne of David is to be restored and all Israel shall be saved (not literal Israel but spiritual Israel). If ye are Christ's ye are Abraham's seed, &c. That makes it all plain. . . . . Your brother in Christ, M. M. G.

ANSWER TO THE ABOVE.

Dear brother: I have read your letter with a feeling akin to sorrow, on account of both your physical and spiritual welfare. You evidently regard me with pity, which, if you were like many others, would be mingled with contempt. New theories, indeed! You seem to have forgotten that the time for new thing, is at hand See Matt. xiii. 52, ("things new and old"). I would you could know the confidence I have in these new theories. You speak of literal Israel. Please refer me to the passage where you read of any other Israel. Remember the arguments which you use to convince the orthodox. (?) I find soul and immortal in the word, but never immortal soul. So of spiritual Israel. Turn to Romans eleventh chapter. Read it carefully.

Verse 1. Hath God cast away his people? God forbid.

Verse 11. Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid.

Verse 15. For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?

Verse 23. God is able to graft them in again.

Verse 25. Blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in.

Verse 26. And so all Israel shall be saved.

Verse 29. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

Now brother do you not see that it is all Israel, cast off Israel, literal Israel, that the apostle is dealing with all the way through; the same that he says shall be saved? God says, "Israel." You say not literal Israel. God says, "surely die." The orthodox say not surely die. My brother, there is no other Israel mentioned in the Bible, but Israel, and it always refers to the Israel of Jacob.

If you should adopt a child would you change your family name? If you should cast off your children and afterward have others born to you would they be farther from you than the adopted one? Or would they lose the family name? You say (so does the word) if ye are Christ's then ye are Abraham's seed. Well, if you are not Abraham's seed, are you Christ's?

To literal Israel belong the covenants, promises, adoption, the glory, the law and the service of God. See Rom. ix. 1–11.

Not all Israel that are of Israel! Well, neither is one of your sons all your family.

If you are not of Israel what promise or covenant do you claim? I admit that there are adopted children in God's family, but that family is Israel. But as you do not recognize Israel you certainly do not claim to be adopted into it. You may think that this does not concern you much, but by not seeing these things you lose sight of the most glorious part of God's plan. Just as the nature of man is the grand stepping stone from which we see into the advanced light of these last days, so the restoration of Israel is the grand step from the top of which we see into the glorious ages of the world to come. And I wish to state as a fact that these new theories are pervading all classes of those who are looking for the second personal coming; and especially in the old world, they are taking the lead, while the old class of Adventists are falling in the minority. So you see, brother, I am not alone in my wild race after error. I have company good enough for me. Just such as I pray I may have in the better world to come.

I find them in all stages from the poor wayfaring man to the nobleman in his palace, yes, many kind and true-hearted ones, who love even poor misguided sinners, and pray "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," and they also pray, "Come, Lord Jesus."

You seem to think that the orthodox are too ignorant to run wild, and that much learning has made believers in advanced truth mad. I have heard you try to convince others that the time spoken of in Daniel, when many should run to and fro and knowledge should be increased, had now fully come. Do you still preach that doctrine? or has knowledge ceased to increase? If it still increases, by what means are you adding to your stock, since you discard all new theories? Do you not expect it to increase with greatly accelerated speed as we near the end? What a ridiculous figure a man makes who places himself athwart the path of science and declares all these new theories are humbugs. He knows that the world is flat as a pancake; and how he does pity your ignorance when you tell him it moves. You need not tell him that a man can stand on the brink of the Atlantic ocean and converse with a man on the other side. What! that sun millions of miles away and bigger than thousands of this earth? Can't he see it for himself, scarcely bigger than a cart wheel? Now, brother, has the astronomer arrived at the climax of astronomical knowledge? Remember, with the past few months, new discoveries have been made, and new theories advanced which thoroughly exploded some old ones. Look again, in the field of invention. How long since is it, when you would have been called an idiot had you told any one you had a way of communicating by which another could hear your voice miles away? How carefully does the successful mechanic watch every improvement in all kinds of machinery, and keep himself supplied with all the latest inventions. Real improvements are made every month, and we discover imperfections in many things which we thought could not be bettered. . . . . I hope you will think of these things and not let the influence of those you consider your friends and brethren hinder you from receiving the truth. As for me I shall endeavor to keep up with the light. I expect it to shine brighter and brighter unto the perfect day, until the day dawn, and the Day-star arise. Yes, I hope to get light from still newer theories. God is furnishing the light, and if men shut their eyes it is their own fault. Those who stand in the way of the car of progress will be crushed by its wheels. Go forward, brother; turn not back or stand still; ponder these things and may the Lord help you.

Your brother in Christ,
F. G. Williams.

To the Devout Few.

Be startled, be surprised at nothing. By experience you know something of the workings of your own hearts, and you may form a just conception of what you might have been but for grace. Then, if good fruits are lacking in those who are not men and women of prayer and watchfulness, the fact is a necessary result. Deceitful above all things and desperately wicked is the heart of men naturally; and unless there be warfare against the flesh, it will gain the mastery; and those who profess nothing may justly ask, wherein are ye better than we? "Fiery trials" some of us may think we have already known. Faithlessness, slipperiness, slanders and persecutions, the failure of kindness and sympathy when most needed; cruel lies carried by those who ought to detect them; and cruel treatment instead of sharing burdens: yea, for aught some avowed and recognized "brethren and sisters" have cared, we might have been left to perish. Such may, yea, has been known and endured by here and there one.

Nevertheless we are forewarned and therefore forearmed: so be not stumbled, be not disheartened. Israel before its downfall was as we read in Jeremiah and Micah, and we might name other books. Look for instance at Micah vii. 1–7. And our Lord predicted treachery, etc., among professors. See Matt. xxiv. 10, and Mark xiii. 12. Paul too has graphically described the characteristics of men having the form of godliness in the last days. Though the writer cherish a the view that the eruption will take place ere the "distress and perplexity" are at their most severe and general prevalence, still my opinion is that perils and embarrassments will not abate before the thief-like coming of the Master. Some brethren think otherwise; but their reasoning appears to me strong. Surrounded by distress are our brethren and sisters now in Britain. A God near at hand and not afar off must be the joyful experience of individuals, or realized leanness of soul! But woe unto those who, having the means, refuse aid to the suffering members. Alas! there is indication of hollowness in this respect. Endure, ye tried few. Habakkuk in his grand vision, though he trembled, and his lips quivered at the view of the day of trouble, he nevertheless rejoiced. So let our faith be strong, and nothing shall sunder us from the love of our God.

Let all isms go to the winds; they all are pernicious. A public speaker among us told me that "duty and responsibility" weighed nothing on his mind. So blinded was he with the predestination dogma that he thought himself led by the Spirit, and must do as he was to do: what absurdity! A delusion nullifying the solemn admonitions to earnest and unceasing warfare on our part! Away with such destructive folly! Let Calvinism, Arminianism, Arianism, etc., be put away from us. Let the word with the Spirit fashion our minds, and throw theories overboard. The notion of English people being Israelites, I regard as one of the delusions to beware of. And here I accord faithfulness and demonstration to our Christadelphian brethren. The unsoundness and folly of Mr. Hines' position have been ably shown up in the Monthly published in Birmingham. The outcasts of Israel will in due time be assembled, and from their obscurity be brought. The dispersed of Judah are known everywhere. A word more. Can we "be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless," if connected with Free Masonry, Odd Fellowship, etc.? Not we!

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I feel as though it was my duty to send you this little communication so that the friends and lovers of the Lord Jesus, and that are of the one hope in him that hath delivered us from the power of everlasting death and hath made us by faith and hope the sons and daughters of the household of God and the Lamb. Glorious hope to be with him and all the family of the redeemed through all the long ages of the future kingdom to all eternity, as long as the sun and moon endureth. What a glorious hope! Why is it that so many of us that profess this hope as it is revealed in the gospel of Christ Jesus, are so cold and luke-warm in the cause? Do we not know that the time is fast drawing to a close, and that the Son of Man will soon come in glory, and all those that are ready will hear the glad words, "Come ye that have followed me in this world, or age, through all the scoffs and sneers of those that know not the Lord nor his power to save?" Some will not submit to learn or even hear it.

Brethren, let us that know this power, be strong in the Lord; for the world cannot stand before it; their scoffs avail nothing, for all true and honest hearts will receive truth, and these are all that we can hope for in this time. Brother Levi Chase has been with us and delivered a course of lectures, in all amounting, to five in succession. He is a workman that need not be ashamed, for he has not failed to declare unto us all the words of truth, or at least, all that could be said in the space of time that he occupied. His lectures were each near an hour and a half long, and the great store of truth and knowledge that he poured forth, as it were, in great torrents, seemed at the time to silence all opposition; but now he is gone, and they have had time to rally their strength, they say that, although Mr. Chase was the greatest and most powerful preacher they ever heard, yet they cannot see how these things can be so. They are so opposite to what we have always been taught, and still his sermons were a continual quotation of Bible. It would seem that they have forgotten, for the time being, their only hope for support of their creeds—spiritualism. But I will close, hoping to meet all the faithful in that kingdom when he comes.

Yours, over in this hope,
J. A. Wilson.

But we desire to hear of these what those thinketh; for as concerning this sect, we know that everywhere it is spoken against. Acts xxviii. 22.

So spake a few of the chief men of the Jews at Rome to Paul while still a prisoner in the hands of the Romans. Just so it is in our time; it is in the minority in numbers, and spoken against by the majority. What kind of doctrine is this? Why, it is a dangerous doctrine! Why? Because it don't preach men off to heaven or endless torment at death; because the kingdom is to be under the whole heaven instead of above it; because men have not got immortality until the resurrection, and because it teaches baptism by immersion instead of sprinkling, and so on.

Query: Where does the Bible teach any other but sound doctrine on these all-important points? "Oh, it's in there somewhere; I don't know just where, but our learned and able expounder of the Bible says so, and it must be so. I have never looked to see if it was as he preached, but supposed he knew what he was talking about; that is his trade or profession, and it is not for us to meddle with." Oh, it isn't, eh? What did Christ tell us to do? He says: "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify for me." John v. 39. "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Oh, there is danger, then, of believing everything we hear.

Friend, our all is at stake, and let us heed it, too, ere it is too late; for "if the blind lead the blind, they shall both fall in the ditch." Then look out. But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you who, privily, shall bring in damnable heresies; even denying the Lord that bought them, and so bring upon themselves swift destruction. 2 Pet. ii. 9. What does Peter say in his 2 Epistle i. 16: "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his Majesty." We must take our proofs, and we cannot find it outside of the word of God. Oh, the goodness of God, to us-ward not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to a knowledge of the truth. Then, this is the sect that is everywhere spoken against; that was spoken against in the apostolic days and that will be spoken against until he, the Mighty One, shall come, and will not tarry.

Brethren, let us not falter as do others that have no hope, but let us go on in the good cause that we have engaged in; let us not put our light where it cannot be seen, but let our light so shine, that others, seeing our good works may, if possible, be benefited by it. It remains in our hands to do this, our grand duty that we owe our Creator; we must assist; we must put our shoulder to the wheel; every turn helps the great vehicle of God's word along, and if we all work faithful in the cause, we shall all roll along by each other with the great motive power at the head; and finally, when this, our duty, is ended, we shall, by the help of the Lord, be admitted to those joys which are eternal.

Friends, yours as ever in the hope of the soon appearance of our Master.

Thos. Hughes.

Editor Restitution: Without being superstitious about omens, that the New Year should open with the announcement of the bursting of a gun on the war vessel Thunderer (a name nothing made by man ought to bear), causing death and maiming of over forty persons; and ere the first week is out the news coming of the failure of the Cornish Bank—a bank of 110 years, standing; are occurrences too startling to pass without notice. The Times and Guardian have both expressed hope of a favorable change; yet misgivings seem apparent in the very words that the writers try to cheer their readers with. Troubles in South Africa continue, and affairs in Afghanistan are not as was hoped a little while since. The stress on Britain increases in severity. We are having a terrible winter. Thank God, we see through the gloom. We desire this state of things to end, and the Desire of nations to come. I might say much more but my health is too poor for the task. The Guardian of to-day I hope will reach you. See the letter from Constantinople. H. Heyes.

NEWS ITEMS.

Vienna, February 7.—Dr. Finkelburg, German delegate to the International Sanitary Commission, will discuss with the Government here the measures to be adopted on the southern frontiers in case the plague reaches Roumania. The Hungarian Government, will dispatch a commission to report upon the state of the public health in Roumania, Bessarabia, Bulgaria and Roumelia. The two Governments have agreed to adopt protective measures on a large scale on the Bessarabia and Transylvania frontiers, and to shift the Russian line of magazines in Roumania eastward, behind the double cordon.

London, February 7.—A dispatch from Vienna states that from fifteen to twenty fresh cases of disease resembling the plague occur daily near Xanthi, Thessaly, and there is great mortality from the same cause at Rasleg. It is believed the infection was introduced by Kurd Redifs.

A Berlin dispatch says a case of plague is reported at Uyesokoye, near Moscow. This is possibly the revival of an old report.

Madrid, February 7.—A quarantine against the plague has been ordered in all Spanish ports.

London, February 8-3 a. m.—It is estimated that from 30,000 to 35,000 men are now on a strike at Liverpool. The demeanor of the crowd yesterday was most threatening, in consequence of the sailors joining the strikers.

DIED.

HAINES—At Argos, Ind., Feb. 3, 1879, Mrs Rachel Nixon Haines, aged sixty-four years, seven months and seventeen days.

Sister Haines was born in Burlington county, New Jersey, June 16, 1814, and, April 10, 1833, was married in Philadelphia, Pa., to Isaac H. Haines, and, in the fall of the same year, removed with him to Warren county, Ohio. After one year's residence in Ohio they removed to Michigan, where they lived till their removal to Missouri in 1839. In 1855 they became residents of Indiana, living in Shelby county till 1865, and then in Miami county till 1868, when they removed to Marshall county, where they have since remained. She embraced the Christian faith in 1860, and in Dec., 1875, she united herself to the Church of God at Argos, Ind., of which she remained an exemplary member till her death. She leaves a husband, eleven children, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. A discourse was delivered by the writer to a numerous congregation from Heb. xi. 40.

"A cherished form has left your door
A form that never will shade it more;
An eye is closed that always smiled
Upon you with affection mild;
A voice is hushed that used to greet,—
A mother's heart has ceased to beat!"

Book Notices.

We have received a copy of Job translated from the Hebrew by Oliver B. Halsted, ex-Chancellor of the state of New Jersey. It is a work for word rendering performed in the most literal manner. The learned Chancellor has given this work as one of the results of twenty years careful study of the original languages in which the Scriptures were written. We have only had time to compare two chapters of the translation with the Hebrew text. Will examine more carefully and critically, and give further comments and notice. We think it worthy of the Bible student's attention. Brother Wm. Shepherd, 97 Central Avenue, Newark, New Jersey, has a number of copies for sale at 50 cents a copy prepaid by mail. To ministers of the Gospel 50 cents a copy.

A Free-Will Offering.

We, the undersigned, having the good of the cause of truth at heart, and believing that it is our duty to sustain the gospel with our means as well as our tongues, and believing that God will bless us for all the offering we make in behalf of the truth, have paid the sum set opposite our names for the purpose of freeing THE RESTITUTION from debt, and sending it out as a messenger of truth to those sitting in darkness, and to comfort those who are walking in the light of HER

PROSPECTUS

Of a volume of which the manuscript is nearly ready, and which the writer hopes to publish without unnecessary delay, after 300 copies have been subscribed for.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of

TEN DISCOURSES.

BY WILEY JONES,

Norfolk, Va.

The following are the subjects of the discourses:

I. How to Study the Bible.
II. What must I do to be Saved?
III. The Promises made unto the Fathers, or, the Covenant with Abraham.
IV. Sure Mercies; or, the Covenant with David.
V. The Eternal Inheritance.
VI. Immortality; and how it may be Obtained.
VII. The Subjects, Design, Nature and Importance of Christian Baptism.
VIII. Christian Duties and Graces to be Observed and Cultivated after Baptism.
IX. The Kingdom as Distinguished from the Church. A few Prominent Signs that the Kingdom is near.
X. The Second Advent; the Millennium; and the State Beyond.

There are SIX highly important items, and very comprehensive in their scope. They have excited much interest, and been blessed by the Lord to the conversion of many where the writer has discoursed upon them. And it is with the hope of enlarging the sphere of their usefulness that the present volume is offered to the public. I think it will be a book which every believer of the Gospel of the kingdom may read with satisfaction, conscientiously lend it to his neighbor. I need not speak of the merits of the work, as I suppose each reader will form his own opinion about that. The price of the volume will be only $1.00 by mail. Do not send the money until you receive the book, and not then except by money order or registered letter.

Who will help to bring on the work at once? A noble brother in New York has already subscribed for twenty copies. Can you not, promptly, send your order for one or more copies with your name and address to Wiley Jones, Norfolk, Va.?

POETRY.

Shall we Know Each Other?

When we hear the muzic ringing
In th' bright, celestial dome—
When sweet angel voices singing
Gladly bid us welcome home
To the land of ancient story,
Where the dweller knows no care—
In the land of light and glory,
Shall we know each other there?

Shall we know each other—
Shall we know each other—
Shall we know each other—
Shall we know each other there?

When the holy angels meet us,
As we go to join their band,
Shall we know the friends that greet us,
In the glorious happy land?
Shall we see the same eyes shining
On us, as in days of yore?
Shall we feel the same arms twining
Fondly round us, as before?
Shall we know, etc.

Yes! my earth-worn soul rejoices,
And my weary heart grows light,
For the shining angel voices,
And the angel faces bright,
That shall welcome us in glory,
Are the loved of long ago;
And to them 'tis kindly given
Thus their mortal friends to know!
Shall we know, etc.

O, ye weary, sad, and tossed ones,
Droop not, faint not by the way;
Ye shall join the loved and lost ones
In the land of perfect day!
Harps of gold, touched by angel fingers
Murmuring in my raptured ear—
Evermore their sweet song lingers—
We shall know each other there!
We shall know, etc.

Immortality.

E. C. B.

An inquirer asks: "Who is the author of the lines commencing, 'A solemn murmur of the soul?'" The lines, entitled "Immortality," are to be found in a hymn-book called "Daily Praise," compiled by Rev. A. B. Miller, and published at Waynesburg, Pa. The first verse is said to have been caught from the lips of a madman; so says Dr. Miller; and the remainder composed by himself.

A solemn murmur of the soul
Tells of a world to be,
As travelers hear the billow-roll
Before they reach the sea;

Tells that this anxious, yearning soul,
Heir of that world-to-be
Beyond the grave's dark, silent goal,
May live eternally;

Tells that, as after winter storms
Come life and joy and bloom,
So life anew shall clothe these forms
That slumber in the tomb;

Tells of a dread, impending hour
Of solemn, final doom,
When at the call of sovereign power
All shall to judgment come;

Tells of a purer, better sphere,
A vernal, tranquil shore,
Where those who love and worship here
Shall worship evermore.

O solemn murmur of the soul!
O solemn world to be!
To live while endless ages roll,
'Tis immortality.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Christ and His Church.

E. WILSON.

This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church. Eph. v. 32.

The relation existing between Christ and the church is far from being fully and properly understood by professing Christians. The nominal church is in darkness with respect to the holy calling and heavenly hopes which were placed before the early church by the apostles. It is very much to be regretted that false theories, false hopes, and worldly advantage should have generated a spurious Christianity. Organizations built on this sandy foundation claim to be Christ's church, and his living representative body on the earth. The false and the true, however, cannot be one. The counterfeit may pass for the genuine for awhile, but it will be detected and exposed ultimately, and then it will be seen to be utterly worthless. Christ is the head of the body—the church; but it is the true one. It is that which he has purchased with his own blood, Acts xx. 28; that for which he gave himself, Eph. v. 25; that which he has redeemed with his precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, 1 Pet. i. 18, 19; and that which is built upon him as the chief cornerstone. Eph. ii. 20. The love which Christ has thus manifested for the church, and her love in return,—"we love him, because he first loved us," 1 John iv. 19—bind both parties together in bonds which cannot be dissolved. Rom. viii. 35.

In order that we may have a proper view of the church in its present and future relationship to Christ, let us examine what is said about it in the apostolic writings.

The word church, as we have it in the common version, is the translation of the Greek word, εκκλησια, ekklesia, which means an assembly or congregation of persons which have been called out. The "church" is composed of persons who have been called out from the world by the gospel. God sent this good news to man by his Son Jesus Christ, and then Jesus Christ gave this message to the apostles, who, as his ambassadors, preached the gospel, and by it called men "out of darkness into his marvelous light," and "to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. ii. 9; 2 Thess. ii. 14. The members of the various primitive congregations were styled "the called of Jesus Christ," Rom. i. 6; "the called according to his purpose," Rom. viii. 28, etc. Their call by the gospel made them such. Hence the propriety of giving the name ekklesia, which means an assembly called out, to the whole company of the believers. The word is used in both the singular and plural. The various assemblies of the saints were the churches or ekklesias of God or of Christ, and yet the whole of them only constitute the ekklesia or "congregation of the Lord, which he purchased with his own blood."

The first mention of the word church in the Bible is in Matt. xvi. 18. In this passage Jesus tells Peter upon what he would build his congregation. The church was not then formed, nor was it organized until the ascension and glorification of the Christ. The elements of the body were in existence, but not formed. Jesus and his disciples preached the gospel for three years before the crucifixion, and they made and baptized disciples, but these only existed as individual believers—there was no organization. The spotless Lamb of God must first be offered as a sacrifice, that there may be redemption through his blood; the antitypical Adam must pass into the deep sleep of death before the antitypical Eve could be taken out of his side, and become "members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones;" and he, being awakened, must be placed at God's right hand, in the heavenly places, and receive and pour out the Holy Spirit, as he did on Pentecost, before the church became his body, and his living representation on earth.

After Pentecost, the saved were added to the church daily. The gospel was preached by the apostles, in the midst of much opposition, but with great success. Thousands of Jews believed, and the number of disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly. Even many of the priests became obedient to the faith. The multitude of believers "were of one heart and of one soul." Practical love—love not in word only, but in action—pervaded the whole body. Acts iv. 32-37. The rapid growth of the church in Jerusalem and the daily wants of the poor brethren, engaged too much of the apostles' time, so that they appointed others to attend to these matters, while they gave themselves continually to prayer and the ministry of the word. The martyrdom of Stephen, one of the seven whom the apostles had appointed, was the beginning of a fierce persecution, by which the church at Jerusalem was scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria. Then "they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." Thus the gospel was spread abroad throughout the land, and congregations of disciples gathered together.

Hence, we read of "the churches of Judea which were in Christ," and "the churches of God in Judea which are in Christ Jesus." Gal. i. 22; 1 Thess. ii. 14. Then from this centre, after the call of the Gentiles, the gospel was preached to every creature, Mark xvi. 15, 16; Col. i. 23; and churches planted in every land.

These various assemblies of the "called out" ones, whether composed of Jew or Gentile, all composed one body, named "the church of God." All had believed the same gospel, been bought by the same blood, and all had been sanctified and cleansed in the same bath (λουτρω, bath) of water, called "the bath of regeneration," Titus iii. 5; for by one spirit all were immersed into one body. Each individual member of the church was formed in the same manner—"begotten by the word of truth," James i. 18, and "born of water," John iii. 5.

No other method has been revealed. What are called churches of Christ at the present day, may have a different plan of making and adding members, but it is not of God, and will not be approved. Christ is the head of the body, and there must be agreement and adaptation of one to the other. Otherwise than this there can be no union. The head and body form one person. The head is necessary to the body, and the body to the head—neither can exist separated from each other. The head plans, the body executes. The body has no thinking power of its own,—no wisdom, no will of its own. If the body does not, or cannot, perform the will of the head, then the union is not complete. Christ is head over all to one church. He has the pre-eminence. He rules—the duty of the church is to obey. When perfect union exists between the head and the body, then the church is truly the body of Christ—both constitute one person. Christ in the church—the church in Christ—and both in God. Thus may the church grow up into Christ in all things, and be filled with all the fulness of God.

The intimate connection existing between Christ and the church is beautifully set forth by the Apostle Paul in Eph. v. 22-33, when illustrating the duties of husbands and wives. As the husband is the head of the wife, so Christ is the head of the church, and the savior or preserver of the body. The church is subject to Christ,—wives to their husbands. Husbands love their wives; so Christ the church, and gave himself for it. And with this object in view, that after its purification he might present it to himself, or more literally, "that he might place the congregation by his side, glorious, having no spot or blemish, or any such thing, but that she might be holy and blameless." Then Paul teaches us that the Lord nourishes and cherishes the church, as a man does his own flesh, and as husbands ought to love their wives; "for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." How close and indissoluble such a relationship! Oh, that the church did properly appreciate it!

Christ is called the Bridegroom, therefore, he must have a bride. Matt. xxv. 1-12. Paul, when writing to the Corinthians, says: "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ." 2 Cor. x. 2. The church is the bride, and the apostle's anxiety was that she might keep herself pure and chaste, so as to be worthy of her Lord.

John, in the Apocalypse, gives us two allusions to the bride. The first in Rev. xix. 7-9, where a great multitude are represented as rejoicing on account of the marriage of the Lamb, and because his wife had made herself ready. The second reference is in Rev. xxi. 2, 9, 10. The bride, the church, is here presented under the symbol of a city, called "the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." The angel said to John: "Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God." Then follows a detailed description of the city, its walls, gates, and foundations, its size, its splendor, its purity, etc.,—everything in this magnificent symbol exhibiting the surpassing glory of the church, after her marriage with the Lamb.

I am aware that many brethren regard this glorious vision which John had of "the bride, the Lamb's wife," to be of a literal city. Some of them say that it will be the abode of Christ and the saints, during the millennium, and suspended somewhere above, so as to be seen by all the inhabitants of the earth. Others say that it will not descend from heaven until the close of Christ's reign, and then it will be occupied by the saints as the city of many mansions. At present, however, I cannot accept either theory. Several considerations forbid my doing so. The Scriptures tell us that Christ is coming again to the scene of his humiliation, sufferings, and death. That his feet in that day will stand on Mount Olivet, (Zech. xiv. 4, 5,) and that the saints will be with him. At that time he will "roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem," Joel iii. 16; then "the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23. Zion in Jerusalem the Lord has chosen for his habitation; "this is my rest forever; here I will dwell; for I have desired it. .... There will I make the horn of David to bud." Psa. cxxxii. 13-17.

There are too many testimonies to quote in this connection, which establish the point that Christ and the saints will live and reign on the earth. No aerial Zion or Jerusalem is meant in the above references; but the city of David,—"the city of the great King." Psa. xlviii. 1, 2; Matt. v. 25. Nor is it that Jerusalem which John saw. One is literal—the other a symbol. John saw the redeemed and glorified church coming with their glorious Head, as a body corporate, chosen and ordained of heaven, as the future political and ecclesiastical governors of the world. They come to the metropolis of their future great empire,—Jerusalem,—which shall then be delivered from Gentile oppression, and rebuilt and beautified, will be called "The city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel." Isa. lx. 14. This city will be the centre of government, of religion, of science, of education, of health, of life—"For the law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem," Isa. ii. 3; and "there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore." Psa. cxxxiii. 3. The seat of government will never be removed, nor the ruling power overturned. The Lord will dwell in Zion forever. Jerusalem will be "a tabernacle that shall not be taken down." Isa. xxxiii. 20. "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever." Psa. cxxv. 1. But I must not enlarge on this point. These, and similar testimonies forbid a literal view of Rev. xxi.

The city is called "the bride, the Lamb's wife." That we know is it is a church. This, also, is a figure. The apostate church is represented by a woman, and she is called "a great city." Rev. xvii. 3-7, 18; xiv. 8; xviii. 10. Then, why not the true church? Its square or cubical form represents its perfection—the gold, pearls, and precious stones, its value—the measurements, its greatness—the names of the twelve tribes of Israel written on the gates, and the names of the twelve apostles on the foundations of the city walls, show that the church is connected with the commonwealth of Israel, and "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets"—the glory of God, and the light of the Lamb being in it represents its splendid appearance, and that this glorious church will then be the light of the world; for "the nations will walk by means of its light," (Diaglott)—and the pure gold, like clear glass, shows the purity of that glorious bride. Nothing that defiles, or works abomination, or a lie, forms any part of it. "No whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." Eph. v. 5.

The city has no temple in it for worship, because God and the Lamb are the temple of it; and of the church it is written, "Ye are the temple of the living God." The throne of God and the Lamb is in it; a pure river of water of life flows from it, and the tree of life is growing on either side, with its monthly fruits, and healing leaves. All these are fitting symbols of the exalted condition of the glorified church, which will then be the medium of blessing to the world. Temporal, political and spiritual blessings will flow out as a river to all nations, through Abraham and his seed, fleshly and spiritual. This holy city, the new Jerusalem,—the bride of the Lamb, will irradiate this sin-cursed and darkened earth with heavenly light. Jesus said that he was the light of the world, and that his disciples are the light of the world; how much more so, when the nations will walk by the light of this glorious city, and be healed by its beneficial influences.

The church is to be Christ's associate in the age to come—the partner of his throne—the sharer of his glory. She is espoused to him now, and as his spouse she is required to keep herself pure and unspotted from the world. As in glory she will be one with her Lord, so in character and sufferings she must be one with him now. Paul wrote to the brethren at Philippi: "Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake." "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." Jesus was a sufferer, because he was not of the world. The world loves its own, but it hates the children of God. "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." It is because of this separation and renunciation of the world, that persecution and suffering comes.

Jesus said: "If the world hate you, you know that it hated me before it hated you." John xv. 18. He was hated for his purity of character, and his denunciation of every species of unrighteousness. So, also, it is with "his disciple. If he follows the teacher's example, he will be a partaker of his sufferings; "But if so be that we suffer with him, we shall be also glorified together." Suffering and persecution before the rest that remains. The cross before the crown—humiliation before exaltation. "The Captain of our salvation" was perfected through sufferings. If such an ordeal was necessary for him, who was "holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners," how much more so for those who are naturally prone to sin? "The Captain" endured the cross, despising the shame on account of the joy set before him—so may the soldier. The reward will come to both at the same time. The victor is to sit with Christ on his throne. "Where I am, there shall my servant be also." This is the ultimate reward of the church.

The body, the church, must be with Christ, its living head. Naturally, the head is born before the body. So Christ is "the first-born from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence." He has become "the first-born among many brethren." He has become "the first-fruits of them that slept"—"Christ, the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." As Christ was born from the dead, by the power of the Spirit of God, and is placed at the head of the new creation, so the church, whether dead or alive, must be born again of the Spirit to an immortal and incorruptible life, in order to become his glorious, mystic body. Christ, the head, has put off the flesh and blood nature, and has become "the Lord, the Spirit."—"the one who is alive forever more;" so the body, the church, is "waiting for the adoption,—the redemption of the body." The head and the body—the Bridegroom and the bride, must be alike in nature, so that she may share in his glory.

The true church is now waiting and looking for the return of her Lord. He says, "Behold, I come quickly;" and she responds, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." She knows that coming will be the time of her release from the power and dominion of sin and death, and her introduction into the joy of her Lord. This is the one hope of her calling. She has been called "to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ," and if faithful to him who has called her, she will obtain it. Jesus prayed his Father, "I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory." The call by the gospel is to "his kingdom and glory," to "glory and honor;" to "salvation with eternal glory," etc., all phrases indicative of the high, holy, and heavenly calling of the church.

The professing church has dishonored her Lord. She has played the harlot, and, therefore, has become impure. The world with its fleeting honors is more attractive than the future eternal weight of glory. Such a church will be rejected and disowned before the world. The Bridegroom says: "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." Rev. xvi. 15.

I might add, if space would allow, that the idea generally held, that the righteous of all ages will be admitted to fellowship with Christ, as his bride, is unscriptural. Those who existed before the church was called could not form any part of it. They lived in the ages when the glorious mystery concerning the Spirit and the church were hid in God. That long list of ancient worthies given in Heb. xi. were men of eminent faith, and as such will be rewarded. They received promises, and having died in faith, will come forth at the resurrection of the just to obtain the fulfillment of them. The apostle says, that "God foresaw or provided some better thing for us, that they, without us, should not be made perfect." Much more might be said, but I forbear at present.

Brethren of the "One Faith," and the "One Hope" of our calling, let us remember that "we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end," Heb. iv. 14. "That now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every one that has this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." 1 John iii. 2, 3. Purity in each individual member will make a pure church. Such a church Christ will honor with a place by his side when he comes to reign as King of kings, and Lord of lords. Reader, may you and I be thus honored.

Said a distinguished American statesman to a debating club of young men: "Life is a book of which we can have but one edition. As it is first prepared it must stand forever. Let each day's actions, as they add another page to the indestructible volume, be such as that we shall be willing to have an assembled world read it."

There is nothing purer than truth, nothing sweeter than charity, nothing warmer than love, nothing brighter than virtue, and nothing more steadfast than faith. Those united in one mind form the purest, sweetest, richest, brightest, holiest and most enduring happiness. A study of Paul's advice to the Philippian Christians (Phil. iv. 8) will serve to beget and strengthen these graces in the soul.

"Duty be thy polar guide;
Do the right whate'er betide!
Haste not! rest not! conflict past,
God shall crown thy work at last."

Jesus has many lovers of his heavenly kingdom, but few bearers of his cross. He hath many desirous of his consolation, but few of his tribulation. He findeth many companions of his table, but few of his abstinence. All desire to rejoice with him; few are willing to suffer anything with him or for him. Many follow Jesus into the breaking of bread, but few to the drinking of the cup of his passion. Many reverence his miracles; few follow the ignomy of his cross.

Christian Intelligencer: It is a duty to contend earnestly for "the faith." It is, however, very far from being a duty to fight every scarecrow and bombard every spectral error that chances to appear.

GATHERED MANNA.

'Twas in the night the manna fell,
That fed the hosts of Israel.

Enough for each day's fullest store,
And harvest need—enough, no more.

For willful waste, for prideful show,
God sent not angels' food below.

Still in our nights of deep distress
The manna falls our hearts to bless.

And, fainthearted, as we cry for bread,
With heavenly food our lives are fed.

And each day's need the each day's store
Enough. Dear Lord, what want we more?

BREVITIES.

Returns for the second week in December show that London had 82,014 paupers, of whom 12,601 were in workhouses, and the remainder in receipt of outdoor aid.

Among the members of the new Turkish Cabinet there are two Christians, one of them holding the all-important portfolio of foreign affairs. Prejudices of race and religion are yielding throughout the empire, and this elevation of Christians to the Council Chamber of the Sultan is an outward token of what intelligent observers have long known, that Turkey, like the rest of the world, moves.

The mails from Bagdad and Constantinople are, we believe, still conveyed by a peculiar class of Government messengers called Tartars, who, formerly numerous, have, since postal facilities have been extended in the Sultan's dominions, been reduced to a very small number. Formerly some were attached to every Pashalek and foreign Consulate. Their courage and fidelity were proverbial, and great confidence was reposed in them both by the Government and mercantile men, who frequently confided very large sums to them. They were frequently ten or twelve days in the saddle without more rest than the few minutes required for changing horses or waiting for a Governor's reply to a despatch. Their costumes were rich and picturesque, their office gave them importance and procured them great deference, and they were regarded as the chief medium of news. These Tartars, whose journeys were generally confined to one part of the country, availed themselves fully of a Mussulman's privilege and kept wives in each principal city they frequented.

A letter from Djeddah, Arabia, says that on Dec. 8 the Europeans ran great danger of being massacred. The English war vessel Ready, which was cruising in the Red Sea with the object of preventing the export of slaves, drove back three Arabian vessels, and obliged them to abandon their human cargoes after an exchange of a few shots. In the short struggle which took place a Bedouin was seriously wounded, and died the following day. At Djeddah, when the news became known in the town, the Arabs adopted a threatening attitude toward the Christians, and resolved to take revenge for the death of one of their people. The authorities of the town happened to be absent at the fetes of Bairam, so that the populace felt themselves free from all control. In the mean time M. Kruyt, the Dutch Consul, gathered together at his house all the Consuls and Europeans, and sent couriers mounted on camels to Mecca, to inform the authorities of Djeddah of what had taken place and to recall the Governor. On Dec. 10 the Governor returned to Djeddah with a division of troops and put an end to all further danger.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began. It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and his immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates Scripture belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

GREAT IMPENDING CRISIS.

Middle Ages—Apostate Chieftain Revealed—Centralization of Power—Its Culmination at Midnight of the Dark Ages.

J. P. WESTBEE.

We have traced the history of the apostasy through its secret workings till it seats its chieftain in the sea of Rome as the universal bishop of the "holy Catholic church," A. D. 606.

We are about to trace this noted character through the middle or dark ages. Before entering upon that period of his history we shall consider

His Claims.

He assumed to be the successor of St. Peter in the Roman see, and, therefore, entitled to all his authority. The keys (or the power to open and bind) of the kingdom of heaven being given to the Apostle Peter, it was claimed that the line of succession, with the authority, followed that see; and as Christ gave Peter all authority, so his successor would, by right, have the same.

So soon as the keys of St. Peter are attached to the girdle of the great chieftain they become magnetic, drawing all power, divine and human, to their proud possessor.

Authority rapidly accumulated about the Roman see, it being drawn from all parts of the Christian world. All power, once in the possession of the church membership, and by them partly delegated to its humble and unpretending officiary, went up by easy grades, by virtue of the keys, to fortify and sustain the growing pretensions of its lawless centre.

The ascent, from the people to the pope, was made easy by interposing a series of inclined planes, composed of ordinary bishops, metropolitan bishops, patriarchs and cardinals.

It was soon claimed that the keys gave their possessor equal authority over kings and emperors. It was so interpreted. The "all power" given to the apostles (of whom Peter was considered chief) included civil as well as ecclesiastical supremacy.

In possession of the "all power," by virtue of the divine keys, our hero, the apostate chieftain, began to assume new modes of address and of action.

Three small kingdoms were humbled, and a triple crown on his head was the significant symbol. With the keys and the crown he is fitted for his revealing destiny.

The middle ages were well adapted to the growth and centralization of his power. An empire had given way to the rise of ten lesser kingdoms ruled by barbarian princes just emerging from the savage state. Recently converted to Christianity, they were totally ignorant of the genius of its government and of its moral precepts. They were, therefore, the easy dupes of the rising papacy.

It was also the period of the eight crusades, which continued through two centuries. Such eras of religious fanaticism, the natural outgrowth of ignorance, are well calculated to foster the development of despotism.

These monarchs very readily yielded to the divine claims of our apostate chieftain.

With these preliminary thoughts, allow us to introduce the chieftain himself. Let him speak and act, that you may the better judge.

His Words.

Pope Innocent III: "To me it is said in the prophet, 'I have appointed thee over the kingdoms and nations; to pluck up and destroy; and to build and plant.' To me also it is said in the apostle, 'I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven.' I am, then, placed between God and man; below God, but above man. Yes, greater than man, who am to judge all men, and can be judged by none."

Again he says: "I am the spouse, because I have a noble, rich and lofty wife, the most holy Roman church, the mother and mistress of all the faithful, and which hath brought me a precious dowry—a plenitude of spirituals, and a vast extent of temporals." Again he says: "God made two great lights in the firmament of heaven; also, he made two great lights in the firmament of the Catholic church; i. e., two dignitaries, the pontifical authority and the regal power. But that which rules the day, the spiritual, is the greater light; that, carnal things, is the less. So that as much as the sun and moon differ, be it known, there is the same difference between the Roman pontiffs and kings."

Pope Urban VIII. says: "God has confided to St. Peter and his successors two swords, the one spiritual, the other temporal; the first to be exercised by the church itself, and the other by the secular powers for the service of the church, according to the will of the pope. The latter is in subjection to the former, and the temporal authority depends indispensably on the spiritual power which judges it, while God alone can judge the spiritual power. It is, then, necessary to salvation, for every human creature to be in subjection to the Roman pontiff."

Gregory VII: "In him (Roman pontiff) alone is the right of making laws. Let all kings kiss his feet. His name alone should be heard in the churches. It is the only name in the world. It is his right to depose kings. His sentence is not to be repeated by any one: but by himself alone. He is to be judged by none!"

Roman pontiffs have used the following words: "Countenance of the Divine Majesty." "All power, both in heaven and upon earth, belongs to me." "Another God on earth." "God's vicar." "Our Lord God the pope." "The power of the pope is greater than all created power, and extends to things celestial, terrestrial and infernal." "The pope doth whatsoever he listeth; even things unlawful; and is more than God."

"The pope is true God and true man, holding God's place, wherefore he hath celestial government, and he can therefore change the nature of things by applying the substance of one thing to another, and of nothing he can make something for in matters that he will have come to pass, his will is his reason, and no man may say unto him, 'What dost thou?' for he has power to dispense above the law, and of injustice to make justice."

"It is manifest that those have not erred, that the Roman pontiff can sometimes dispense with obeying the law of the apostle Paul, and of the first four councils; nay, our ancestors, men of great piety and religion, have broken and annulled many decrees of the apostles."

Cardinal Bellarmine: "Should the pope err in commanding vices, and forbidding virtues, the church should be bound to believe that the vices were good, and the virtues bad, unless she would sin against conscience."

His deeds.

He assumed all civil power. Mr. Keith says: "The Roman pontiff assumed a prerogative and exercised a power such as no race of kings ever claimed, and exalted himself above all, maintained an unparalleled ascendency, and prospered during a period which scarcely any dynasty on earth ever equaled."

Gregory VII. excommunicated Henry IV., emperor of Germany, and deposed him from all power. King John, of England, was forced to resign his crown to the Roman pontiff, and to do him homage, and to receive it as a gift from the holy see; and the pope's legate who resumed possession of it five days, trampled under his feet the money which, in token of his vassalage, was given him by the king. The emperor, Henry IV., was made to wait three days at the gates of the fortress of Canossium, in his bare head and his bare feet, with nothing out a coarse cloth over him, before Gregory VII. would grant him absolution. At the command of another pope, Henry II. of England, walked in his bare feet to do penance at the tomb of Becket. Pope Celestin dashed with his foot the crown from the head of Henry VI.; and Pope Alexander trod on the neck of Emperor Frederick I. The bull of the pope deposing Queen Elizabeth was in these words: "Him alone hath God constituted prince over all nations, and over all kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant." These declarations were after his civil power began to be consumed.

His Ecclesiastical Power.

From the decree of Phocas (A. D. 606) the Christian chieftain know no equal. By virtue of his magnetic keys he rapidly drew all ecclesiastical power to himself. He became the head of general councils; was the supreme judge of all religious controversies, and the only infallible expositor of the holy Scriptures.

After the conversion of the ten kingdoms to Christianity, the Greek and Latin tongues (there being no institutions of learning) became less popular. The German dialects were more popular. The Bible, therefore, was less known among the people. No vulgar translations were made. The knowledge of God's Word was soon limited to the learned among the priests. In the Latin division of the old empire, the services were in Latin, which soon became a dead language.

The Roman pontiff was not slow in discovering the immense leverage which this change put into his hands. He was in possession of unlimited power of control and management of the priesthood, to whom were committed the subordinate care and government of the various Christian churches. Supreme ecclesiastical power, emanating from its great central chieftain, flowed without a ripple down the inclined planes, by easy grades, to the people and up again to the same source. We measure distance with the eye only by the aid of intervening objects. So the people, looking up the planes of a graded priesthood, saw their chieftain seated on a lofty throne of unlimited power. Being taught that he occupied that position by divine appointment, they were ready to receive his interpretations of Scripture as infallible. Henceforward there was no object for any private member to study or even to read the Bible. Their creed was simply the creed of the pope, through the teachings of his obedient hireling priesthood. This head of the Christian church became the dictator of Christian morals and Christian religion. He claimed unlimited control over the Law of God; to add to, or to take from, alter and amend, and to expound them as best suited his corrupt inclinations.

His Changes of the Divine Law.

Let us compare the following laws, instituted and commanded for centuries by the papacy, with those given by Jesus and his apostles. Roman Catholics were sworn to believe and carry out the twelve following articles:

1. The apostolical and ecclesiastical traditions, and all other observations and constitutions of the church.

2. "I also admit the Holy Scriptures, according to that sense which Holy Mother Church, whose right it is to judge of the true meaning and interpretation of the Sacred Scriptures, hath held and doth hold; nor will I ever receive and interpret it but according to the unanimous consent of the holy fathers.

3. "I profess, likewise, that there are seven true and proper sacraments of the new law, instituted by our Lord Jesus Christ, and necessary to the salvation of mankind, though not all for everyone; to-wit: Baptism, confirmation, eucharist, penance, extreme unction, holy orders, and matrimony.

4. "I embrace and receive all and singular those things concerning original sin and justification that have been defined and declared by the most holy council of Trent.

5. "I likewise profess that in the mass is offered unto God a true, proper and propitiatory sacrifice for the living and the dead; and that in the most holy sacrament of the eucharist there is truly, really, and substantially the body and blood, together with the soul and divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ; and that there is made a conversion of the whole substance of the bread into his body, and of the whole substance of the wine into his blood, which conversion the Catholic church calls transubstantiation.

6. "I also confess that under one kind only is taken, whole and entire, Christ and a true sacrament.

7. "I constantly hold that there is a purgatory, and that souls there detained are assisted by the suffrages of the faithful.

8. "And, likewise, that the saints reigning with Christ are to be worshiped and invocated, and that they offer prayers for us to God, and that their relics are to be venerated.

9. "I most firmly assert that the images of Christ and of the mother of God, very virgin, and also of the other saints, are to be had and retained, and that due honor and veneration be given them.

10. "I also affirm that the power of indulgences was left by Christ to his church, and that the use of them is most beneficial to Christians.

11. "I acknowledge the holy, catholic, and apostolic Roman church as the mother and mistress of all churches; and to the pope of Rome, successor of St. Peter, prince of the apostles, and vicar of Jesus Christ, I promise and swear strict obedience."—Trent Creed.

We omit the twelfth article, it being similar to the first.

Many other changes were made, but these are sufficient to show the pope's unlimited control over the doctrines of Christ and his apostles.

Change in Church Government.

The apostolic churches were under the management of deacons and elders, selected from their membership and chosen by them. Their constitution was that of Christ and his apostles. Power went up from the people and returned. The apostate chieftain had converted that mild government into a great central despotism.

Change of Church Morals.

Purity of morals was inculcated by Christ and his apostles as necessary to secure future happiness. The apostasy was of an opposite character. To learn the character of the membership and of the church officiary during the period under review we must examine their chief.

Let us examine the testimony of their own historians. The forced celibacy of the priests opened the floodgates of all moral corruption.

Pope John XII. was killed in the act of adultery, by the woman's husband. Baronius says: "For one hundred and fifty years together St. Peter's chair was filled not with apostles, but with apostates, put in fraudulently by vile prostitutes, viz., Marozia, Theodora," etc. "Pope Clement V. was a public debaucher; from that time forth all discipline and religion failed among the cardinals."

St. Bernard says, "The portraiture of these times (12th century) is made up of fornications, adulteries, incests, detestable villainies, and acts of the utmost filthiness, among princes, monks, priests, nuns, and nunneries, and all orders of men."

The church or papal polluttons of the 13th, 14th and 15th centuries were described by their most able writers. Cornelius Mus, bishop of Bitanto, thus spoke publicly in the council of Trent: "There is no filthiness, however monstrous soever, no villainy, no impurity, with which the people and clergy were not defiled."

Cardinal Bembo said: "Pope Leo X. was an atheist;" and that he one day said to him, "This fable of Jesus Christ had done them good service."

Pope Sixtus IV. erected in Rome brothels, out of which a large weekly revenue was paid."

The bulls of papal indulgences were spread all over Europe. There was kept a "book of rates," in which the price for the commission of every possible sin was stated. This was properly called "the book of sin," and its author—the pope—"the man of sin."

F. Petrarch, A. D. 1336, poet laureate and archdeacon of Parma, was a man skilled in the Scriptures. He thus writes, under Pope Pius V. In a sonnet (translation):

"Out of wicked Babylon, by God's help I am gone.
From which all heaven is troubled, from whence all good is vanished;
The lodge of grief and misery, the mother of all heresy,
Well-spring of grief and fierce wrath's hospital,
The school of error, temple of heresy,
Once Rome, now Babylon, most wicked, all
With sighs and tears (would thy pinions fail!)
Thou mother of deceit, bulwark of tyranny,
Truth's persecutor, nurse of iniquity.
The King's hall; a miracle it will be,
If Christ in fury come not against thee,
Most shameless w——."

The moral pollutions of this period of the chieftain's greatest power surpass all possible description.

The extent of his power, civil and ecclesiastical, was unlimited.

The "all power" was centralized. It knew but one center—one head.

Viewing the world from the high throne of his exalted see, if he should chance to discover any power, human or divine, not emanating from his supreme majesty, the least twitch of his magnetic keys or wave of his triple crown, loosening it from its possessor, brought it to the arch apostate as a part of his divine inheritance.

And thus he sat in the most elevated position in the Christian church, through the darkest ages the world ever saw, and held over a prostrate human race, a sceptre of despotism more cruel, and self-debasing than had ever before existed.

He could go no higher, for there was no seat above him to occupy, either in church or state. Henceforward we shall view him in his downward progress, as he descends to a dishonorable old age, and to his final doom.

Prophetic Land-Marks.

The four universal monarchies symbolized by the great image, Dan. ii. 31, span all time to the judgment. Rome, the fourth, and the last of earthly dominion, is a unit in prophecy, and a unit in history. Rome is characterized by its divisions, its mutations, its dynasties, its "seven mountains," its "seven kings," its short-lived seventh, and its eighth, who is of the seven kings of Rome.

The lineage of those "seven kings" and of the eighth, who is of the seven, constitute the only clearly defined land-marks of time given in Holy Writ, spanning a space of time from 751 B. C. to the present, and having dominion under the Cæsars from B. C. 31 to A. D. 1806. The eighth, who is of the seven, who rises up out of the sea, has an associate who is the false prophet, and it is under the personal reign of this representative beast that the division of the whole Roman empire into ten kingdoms takes place, in harmony with the ten toes of the image.

This personal representation of the whole Roman empire is introduced to the world as a "vile person." His acts and deeds are so plainly written by the Prophet Daniel, that whoso readeth may run. See Dan. xi. 21-45. He is an "idol shepherd," "man of sin," the man, the number of whose name is 666. He is "the beast that was, is not, and yet is." He comes from the bottomless abyss. He is the "Apollyon" of the bottomless abyss, the "little horn," "the Antichrist," personal.

This "vile person" makes a covenant with the Jews. He breaks the covenant he had sworn to support, and for this he is called the "idol shepherd who leaveth the flock." He "takes away the daily sacrifice and places the abomination that maketh desolate" "in the holy place." The King does the same; the "little horn" does likewise. They are all identical with the "Prince that shall come," Dan. ix. 27, the "vile person" of Dan. xi. 21.

The daily sacrifice is taken away by him "in the midst of the week," "and from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand, two hundred and ninety days" to the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. "The King shall do according to his will," let "king" stand for king, and dynasty for dynasty, or kingdom. Let days mean days, when God, by his servants, says days.

When the wise can crowd 2300 years into a part of one week of seven years, and "in the midst of the week" in the past in accordance with the year-day system of interpretation, then, and not till then can we understand the year-day system of interpretation.

BREVITIES.

There is a curious creek in West Texas, which enters a rocky gorge and runs under ground for forty miles. In some places natural wells 240 feet deep are found, through which the roaring of this subterranean creek can be heard plainly.

Last September a census was taken of the Japanese islands. The total population of the empire was 34,338,404. Of these 1,036,771 dwell in Yeddo, or, as the inhabitants name it, Tokio, in 236,061 houses, being about 4.37 occupants for each house.

There are now in this country 10 Roman Catholic Archbishops, and 66 Bishops, against 6 of the former and 27 of the latter in 1850. The number of priests was then 1,800 and of churches 1,073; while there are now 6,634 priests and 8,548 churches. The colleges have increased from 17 to 74 and the Roman Catholic population has doubled.

Mrs. Eliza Burns Everett, daughter of Robert Burns's son, died a few days ago in Bath, England. Her only child, Martha, is unmarried. The only male descendant of the poet now living is Robert Burns Hutchinson, a tea-planter in Assam, India. Mrs. Everett's husband died nearly forty years ago, and had been an assistant surgeon in the service of the East India Company.

The Pope's Piscatorial Ring is so called from its containing a stone engraven with a figure of St. Peter drawing in his net. The earliest record of its use is, according to a high Italian authority, 1265. Originally it was nothing more than the Pope's private signet for his own correspondence; but from the middle of the fifteenth century its use became reserved to the Pontifical utterances called Briefs, and has remained so ever since.

Dr. Abel, the Berlin correspondent of the London Times, has been lately staying with Lord Beaconsfield at Hughenden Manor. Dr. Abel is known to read and translate upwards of seventy different languages, and though a German by birth, yet his Times and other English writing is clear in meaning, simple in diction, and polished in style. When Lord Beaconsfield was introduced to him at the Berlin Congress, he said: "Dr. Abel, you are the author whom I have most studied."

Major-General Roberts, who commands a column of the British army in Afghanistan, has seen much service. At the siege of Delhi he won the Victoria Cross for sabring a standard-bearer and capturing his flag. During the various operations connected with the relief of Lucknow and its subsequent siege and capture, he acted as Assistant Adjutant-General. For this campaign he received a majority, a medal, and three clasps, and frequent mention.

New Hampshire reports the death of six centenarians in 1878, the oldest being 111 years of age. Mrs. Maria Beers, of Cheshire, Conn., celebrated her ninetieth birthday Jan. 31st, and there were 10 lady guests present whose ages, with her own, aggregated 900 years, the oldest being 93. The aggregate ages of six brothers and sisters living in Livingston county, this state, is 496 years, the oldest being 88 and the youngest 74. Three of the family have died, two at the ages of 80 and 81.

Among the measures which the Government of Brazil proposes to soon bring forward is one for the total suppression of the religious orders in Brazil, the pensioning of the existing monks and nuns and the application of the property to the reduction of the national debt. This property is estimated $5,000,000 to $8,000,000, and the number of religious persons pensioned would not be more than forty or fifty, most of them aged, as for years the admission of novices to profess has been rigidly prohibited.

A remarkable phenomenon occurred in the voyage of the mission bark John Williams to Gilbert Islands and Ellice's group. Captain Turpie says they sailed through a mass of pumice-stone, which he estimated at 900 miles in length and 150 miles in width. And that on some of the islands a ridge six feet high had been washed up. It is supposed that a terrible submarine convulsion had taken place. The usual currents and trade winds were reversed, so that they had to communicate with some of the islands on what is termed the windward side.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEB. 19, 1879.

WE ask our friends to punctually renew subscriptions as fast as their time expires, and to interest themselves in extending our subscription list. The success of our paper depends upon the support of its patrons.

WE tender our thanks to brother H. Heyes, of Coldihead, Eng., for the London Times of a late date; also to brother J. H. Wilson, of Collingwood, Ont., for a pamphlet entitled Prophecy and the Eastern Question, by R. Roberts, of Birmingham, England. We may place some parts of this pamphlet before our readers when we find room.

WE give place cheerfully to our brethren to express their views in regard to the fulfillment of prophecy; and the application of the prophetical periods. Some interpret these periods as symbols, while others claim that they are to be taken in the most literal and restricted sense. For ourself, while favoring the symbolical application, we have thought with a few that they might apply quite literally to a heading up of iniquity in the very last days in a personal Anti-Christ. We believe that some periods extend beyond the coming of Christ for his church, and that the thief like rapture of the redeemed bride is among the the events that must soon come to pass.

THE British army in South Africa met with a very serious reverse lately in a conflict with the Zulus with whom England is enlarged in war. An advance column of the British army was confronted by a force of 20,000 Zulus near the river Tugela and nearly annihilated. The Zulus are found to be more formidable than the military authorities in England expected. They were armed with breech-loaders, well-drilled, and fought courageously. The colonists are endangered by this reverse, and the misfortune causes considerable anxiety in Britain. We append an account of this African race from a colemporary journal.

New York Times: The Zulus or Amazulus, with whom the British in South Africa are again involved, as savages and civilized people are ever liable to be, are a portion of the Kaffir race inhabiting Natal and the region northeast of it. They are far more amiable than the Kaffirs proper, less warlike and rapacious, more industrious, more inclined to the ways of peace and civilization. They are naturally social, cheerful, light-hearted, genial affectionate, constant, but very passionate, if aroused, and extremely fierce in battle. As a rule, they are remarkably chaste, for savages, being free from many concupiscent sins of the East and even of Europe. Of inconsistency they have much, and they are so subject to the sway of their objects that their good impulse cannot be counted on. Chaka, Dingaan, Moselikatze, and other of their fell tyrants devastated all Southeastern Africa until put down by the fatal rifles of the Dutch boers, to whom, with their naked bodies protected only by ox-hide shields, they could offer no effective resistence. The principal Zulu tribes are the Amazul, Amatuta, Amazwazi and Amatabele. The last under Moselikatze have emigrated far to the north, where they were found by Livingston nine or ten years ago—and are variously estimated at 500,000 to 2,000,000 or more, though they probably number at present over 1,000,000. Many efforts have been made to convert them to Christianity, and not without considerable apparent success; but, like other untamed races, they seldom stay converted.

Later news sums up the loss of the British at about 600, on the part of the English and colonial troops, with a large loss of amunition and war material, and, on the part of the Zulus, at a number raging from 1,000, to 2,000. A force of 7,000 men, composed of infantry, cavalry and artillery, with a company of engineers, has been ordered to be sent from England, and the viceroy of India has been telegraphed to send reinforcements immediately.

THE plague seems to be spreading in Russia notwithstanding the efforts of the authorities to restrain and limit its ravages. Unfortunately, advices from the interior state that there is a condition of general unhealthiness and free disposition to the epidemic existing. The small-pox and typhus fever are also spreading with deadly effect in certain localities of the Empire. If some accounts are true, hundreds of bodies have been suffered to remain unburied, and the most intense alarm is manifested at the progress of the terrible malady. The different governments are endeavoring to guard against the introduction of the plague. The President of the Board of Health at Rome predicted that if the plague were to penetrate Europe, it would destroy one-third of the population. Whether an exaggeration or not, we recollect to have read it stated that nearly one-half the inhabitants of the world perished in one of its former terrible visitations. Some additional idea of its prevalence and destructive effects in ancient times may be learned from the following extract:

THE ANTIQUITY OF THE PLAGUE.

The plague is one of the oldest things under the sun. According to Petavius, it ravaged the whole known world in 767 B. C. In 754 B. C. it made terrible havoc in Carthage, and the people, deploring the anger of the gods, offered up their children as sacrifices. Thucydides has left a graphic description of the plague which raged in Athens in 430 B. C., and which extended over Egypt and Ethiopia. In the eighteenth year of the Christian era Rome was depopulated at the rate of 10,000 daily. Three centuries and a half later the plague appeared in Britain, where the living were not able to bury the dead. There is little reason to doubt the statement that 200 persons perished daily in London during the epidemic which raged in 1349, and which prevailed throughout Europe. In 1478 more persons perished in England of pestilence than had died in fifteen years of continued war. At various periods of it history London has suffered terribly from plague. More than 20,000 persons perished in 1593-4, and more than 35,000 in 1625. But it was not until 1665 that the city learned what a scourge the plague might become. A moderate estimate says that 68,596 persons perished, while other authorities state the number at 100,000. Since that period England has been tolerably free from the plague, but it has carried off 30,000 persons in Persia, 300,000 in Egypt, and 60,000 at Marseilles at one visitation.

From Brazil, South America, the later news is scarcely less sad and painful than from Europe, as the following item will show:

RIO JANEIRO, January 12.—In addition to small-pox deaths in Ceara at the rate of 70,000 to 80,000 per month, a telegram announces the appearance at Fortelezs, the capital, of a deadly plague, characterized by black spots, and by which the president's wife had died. The Government sends off today ten doctors to investigate, at the salary of $1,000 per month each.

As this epidemic may prove a most fearful calamity, we append an account of its first appearance in Russia.

The origin of the plague which is now making such terrible ravages in Russia is clearly traced in the Astrakhan correspondence of the Golos. The epidemic appeared in the Cossack village of Vetlyan Stanitza soon after the return of two Cossack regiments from the war in Asia Minor, and was very likely brought over with their old clothes and rags. It is well known that there were many cases of typhus in these regiments during the war, but it has also been ascertained that during their return homeward no one was attacked by the disease. Prior to their homeward march the Cossacks' clothes and other effects were disinfected and well smoked; but probably the men did not expose all their rags and booty to that process, and thus many articles remained infected. The report regarding the appearance of typhus was received by the Cossack authorities toward the end of November. An army surgeon was at once dispatched to Vetlyanka. He returned with the news that there was no typhus, but that there were slight attacks of ague and fabricula. Several days passed by, when suddenly news was brought of frightful mortality in the Stanitza. From fifteen to twenty persons died every day, among a population of 600. By December 10 the mortality had increased. There died, among the rest, the doctor of the Astrakan regiment; the priest met with the same fate, his wife and children running away from fear; several of the local chiefs were also attacked. The Cossack population were seized with a panic; they ceased to approach the sick, and feared to bury the dead. It is reported that the dead bodies lay for days in the streets, with a slight covering of hay thrown over them. At last the inhabitants reached the conclusion that the disease was not typhus, but the plague.

Are Dr. Knapp's predictions in regard to "Perihelion and Pestilence" going to be realized?

Perihelia of the Great Planets.

There is considerable interest felt by many relative to the nearly simultaneous perihelia of several of the Great Planets belonging to the Solar System. To be satisfied that an event of this kind was to occur about 1881–1882, we addressed a note to Prof. S. Newcomb, of the Nautical Almanac Office of the Navy Department, Washington, D. C., inquiring whether the Great Planets would actually be at their nearest approach to the sun at about the above dates, and whether a similar event had transpired during the last 2000 or 3000 years. We copy his reply of Feb. 10, 1879:

Dear Sir:—The planets Uranus and Neptune are both in perihelia about the years 1881–1882, but no others except the inner ones which, of course, are in perihelion every year or two because their times of revolution are so short. The question whether there has been a like occurrence during the past two or three thousand years is difficult to answer, because if we come down to mathematical exactness the relative positions of all the planets together never repeat themselves, so that we might say that every day the relation of the planets is one that never occurred before. But I see nothing remarkable in the two outer planets being simultaneously at perihelion.

Yours very respectfully,
SIMON NEWCOMB.

From the last number of the Bible Banner we extract the following correspondence on the same subject, which will explain itself:

THE COMING PERIHELIA OF PLANETS.—LETTER FROM PROF. HALL, OF WASHINGTON.—BY C. COLEGROVE.

Considerable interest, and very properly and naturally, has been felt upon the question of the alleged coming concurrent perihelia of the four great planets, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune. I have even seen the fact of such a grand planetary phenomenon denied. Wishing to obtain some decisive and conclusive testimony on the question, I wrote to Prof. Asaph Hall, of the Naval Observatory, at Washington, whom I had the pleasure of meeting at his post, a few years ago, and who has since attained a world-wide eminence from his discovery of the moons of Mars. Appended is his letter of reply which will be read with interest.

NAVAL OBSERVATORY,
WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Jan. 19, 1879.

DR. COLEGROVE—Dear Sir: In the following table I give the longitudes of the perihelia of the four outer planets, and their longitudes as seen from the sun. You will see that there is a near approach of all these planets to their perihelia in 1880 and 1881:

Longitude of Perihelion.	Mean Long. of P.	Date.
Jupiter, 11° 51'.9	11° 46'.8	1880, Sept. 5
Saturn, 89° 6'.1	90° 7'.6	1881, Dec. 1
Uranus, 169° 16'.2	169° 18'.0	1881, Dec. 3
Neptune, 47° 11'.2	47° 21'.2	1880, Oct. 4

You will see that Jupiter passes his perihelion 1880, Sep. 9, about, but Saturn is not up to perihelion by 50 deg. on Dec. 1, 1881. Yours truly,
A. HALL.

The above table will be convenient for reference, and is therefore well worth preserving.

Sentinel, N. Y.

From the table furnished by Prof. Hall it will be seen that Jupiter arrives at perihelion something more than a year before the perihelia of the two outer planets Uranus and Neptune. As to Saturn, it will not come to perihelion till about the last of Dec. 1885, as it is 50.6 deg. behind this point Dec. 1, 1881, as shown by Prof. Hall. The following estimate will show this. Saturn moves through 12.2295 deg. of longitude in one year. By dividing the difference of arc between the longitude and the point nearest the sun by this annual motion we obtain 4.14 years nearly. By adding this number to 1881, we have Dec. 1, 1881+4.1—Dec. 1885 plus a fraction, giving, as a rough estimate, about the last of Dec. 1885 for the perihelion of Saturn. So that during 1880–1881 Jupiter, Uranus and Neptune come to their perihelia, and in 1885, Saturn also reaches the point in his orbit nearest the sun.

To compute the exact time of a planet's perihelion by allowing for inclination of orbit, acceleration and retardation, and secular variation requires a very competent knowledge of astronomy. But to make an approximate estimate is not a matter of so very great difficulty for a person of fair mathematical attainments. We illustrate how this may be done in the case of Jupiter. Taking for our epoch, January 1, 1850, mean noon at Paris, Jupiter's longitude was 160 deg. 1 min. 20 sec., and the longitude of its perihelion was 11 deg. 54 min. 53 sec. Now, Jupiter performs a revolution around the sun in 4332.5848212 mean solar days. By dividing this number by the time of the earth's annual revolution

365.2563744 days we obtain a quotinet of 11.8617 as the number of years required for one complete revolution of Jupiter around the sun. Now, by subtracting the longitude of Jupiter from 360 deg. we have 360 deg.—160 deg. 1 min. 20 sec. = 199 deg. 58 min. 40 sec., which is the angular distance for the planet to pass over to complete a revolution. Then, to reach the perihelion point, it must pass over a still further space of 11 deg. 54 min. 53 sec, which add to the last number and we have 199 deg. 58 min. 40 sec. + 11 deg. 54 min. 53 sec. = 211 deg. 53 min. 33 sec. Now, the angular motion of Jupiter in longitude in one year is 30 deg. 20 min. 32 sec. By reducing to decimals, and dividing we have

$$\frac{211.89259 \text{ deg.}}{30.3422 \text{ deg.}} = 6.9834 \text{ which is}$$ the number of years from the epoch chosen before Jupiter comes to the perihelion. We then have by simple addition

1850
+	6.9834
	1856.9834
+	11.8617
	1868.8451
+	11.8617

so that taking our elements for calculation at the epoch Jan. 1, 1850, we find that Jupiter is in perihelion in 1856, 1868 and 1880. By changing the last decimal to days we find that our rough estimate gives Sept. 16, 1880, which is only six days later than made by the accurate estimate of Prof. Hall. A similar process might be employed in calculating the perihelion of the other planets. We may add that our earth is at its perihelion point in December of each year. We also remark that Jupiter and Saturn will be in the same quarter of the heavens early in 1881, a few months after Jupiter leaves its perihelion, an event taking place only once in twenty years. Whatever may take place the combination of circumstances in regard to the position of the planets about 1880,-1881-1885 is very remarkable. We take an article from the Advent Review, ably published in the Providence Journal, which foreboades a sad state of things in the near future:

It seems unnecessary to have incurred the expense and trouble of a commission to investigate the causes of the pestilence that raged during the last summer in the Southern States, when astronomers tell us that the yellow fever was only a premonition of the dire calamities to be expected from physical disturbances shortly to be initiated. The four great planets of our solar system, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune, have a mighty influence in the solar economy, even though they revolve at immense distances from the center of the scheme. When one or more of these planets are at their nearest point to the sun, great disturbances are sure to take place from the increased attraction of the masses upon each other. Agitation on the solar surface is reflected to the system's remotest bounds, and our planet bears witness to the solar outburst in terrific storms on land and sea, long-continued drought, failure of crops, and consequent disasters, and pestilence in myriad forms. Jupiter, being the largest and nearest of the giant brotherhood, prodness the greatest disturbance. So well is this fact established, that the sun's maximum year for spots and general commotions is coincident with Jupiter's nearest approach to his surface. Many observers will remember the last recurrence of this period about 1869, when brilliant auroras illuminated the heavens, rosy protuberances flashed from the sun's photosphere, and huge spots dotted his disc; while evidence of intense excitement were visible on the Jovian surface, and terrestrial tempests, hurricanes, and all manner of physical ills, bore evidence to the malignity of the celestial conjunction.

It takes Jupiter less than twelve years to complete a revolution around the sun, Saturn a little less than thirty years, Uranus about eighty-four years, and Neptune about one hundred and sixty years. The year of maximum sun-spots coincident with Jupiter's perihelion is looked upon as an epoch when all manner of evils afflicting humanity may be anticipated, and this direful period is near at hand.

A much more lamentable period is also near at hand; one of those eras that occur at intervals counted by thousands of years is about to take place. The four great planets reach their perihelia very nearly together, and the mighty planetary quartette will pull upon the sun with one accord. They will be at their nearest approach in the year 1880, or soon after, and the influence of their unwelcome union may continue for several years. Such a conjunction of forces has not occurred since the Christian era. What will the sun do, with his blazing surface tossed into such fiery commotion? What will the earth do as she responds to every troubled pulsation of the great luminary? There is a fearful prospect ahead, and it may be that the pestilence of last summer was but the shadow of events to follow in its train. There is nothing for poor mortals to do but to take wise precautions, and await results. Seed time and harvest have not yet failed, and the time for the earth's destruction will not occur in the present generation.

A careful observer announces that the perihelia of three of the great planets took place at the same time in the sixth and also in the sixteenth century, and that the epochs were marked by the occurrence of the most pestilential periods on record. Every sensible person will understand that when Jupiter, a planet whose volume is thirteen hundred times that of the earth, reaches its perihelion, being then forty-six millions of miles nearer the sun than when in aphelion, the increased attraction must create a commotion in the sun's seething mass, as well as in the chaotic elements of the planet. It is just as certain that our atmosphere and temperature will be disturbed, and that the disturbance will be unfavorable to health and prosperity. In the same way it will be seen that the coincident perihelia of the four great planets will vastly increase the outward influence. This period we shall enter upon before another year closes, and we can only trust that science and observation will do their best to avert the calamities threatened by the malignant influence of the sun and the four remotest members of the system.

As the Scriptures connect fearful pestilences with the closing times of our present dispensation, and as many believe planetary disturbances occurring at the times of nearest approach to the sun affect the physical conditions of our earth, and atmosphere in all that relates to health; we give our readers the scientific aspects of this question so far as the phenomena themselves are concerned. The future may make this a topic of interest and we recommend to our readers to preserve this paper for future reference.

SELECTIONS.

(Christian Union.

The Protestant Movement in France.

At a recent meeting of the National Club in London, some deeply interesting facts were developed as to the progress of vital religion in France. The population of that country, it was stated, is about 36,000,000, of which 1,000,000 are Protestants and 5,000,000 Ultramontanists, while the remainder, though nominally Catholics, are really destitute of all religious belief. Since the Republican victories of a year ago, when religious liberty became an established fact, a decided movement has prevailed all over the land toward Protestantism. That under the direction of M. Reveill and at Bourg, in the department of Ain, we have already mentioned. In the Central Department of Allier there are three towns; Commentry, Montlucon and Dezenet. Ten years ago there were about sixty Protestants in this district, now there are nearly a thousand, almost all of them proselytes. At Montargis, in the neighboring department of Loiret (the birthplace of Admiral Coligny), one year ago there were between forty and fifty Protestants. Now there are 150, the largest portion being proselytes. At Chateauroux, le Indre, a Roman Catholic officer was buried with all the pomp due to a faithful and wealthy son of the church. In his will was a clause expressing a desire that his fellow-townsmen should possess a Protestant place of worship, for the building of which he left the necessary funds. At Pouilly-sur-Loire, near Saucerre, are now three congregations of eight hundred proselytes. The neighboring town of La Marche contains one hundred and fifty proselytes. The Reformed Church of France receives aid from the state wherever there are not less than two hundred Protestants possessing a place of worship of their own. When such aid is given it may therefore be concluded that the movement is of a permanent character. Thus, quite recently six hundred Protestants in Fresnoy, in the north, have been adopted by the state. At Valenciennes, where twenty years ago there were only forty Protestants, there is now a church of two hundred and fifty receiving a grant from the state. At Lyons, with its, 350,000 inhabitants, the very metropolis of Romish intolerance, reigning side by side with skepticism and atheism, three mission rooms were opened on the 17th of November. The meetings are described as crowded, and remarkable for order and attention. An ouvrier said, with tears, "Never in my life have I heard the truth thus explained. My conscience answers to it. This is what I want." From the South and West the same encouraging reports come. In Paris the meetings of Mr. MacAll are conducted in twenty-two mission stations with an average weekly attendance of 8,000 adults. Already they have worked a surprising change in the order and morality of some of the worst districts of the city. The intelligence of the French people in religious truth is perhaps best witnessed by the fact that in the Trocadero, during the Exhibition, 1,500,000 copies of the Gospels besides 20,000 Scripture cards and 3,000 Testaments and Bibles were distributed to grateful recipients.

NEWS ITEMS.

Arequipa and Iquique have been violently disturbed by earthquakes, and the people were much agitated. Although little damage was done in the above named places, fears are expressed of disaster at other points.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says the government of Tzaritzin will be divided into three districts, with a special representative of the medical staff at the head of each. The quarantine line of Saratoff will be extended eastward as far as Peischil, thence to the Orenburg frontier, and westward from Iwanoka to the Don frontier. General Melikoff has been given absolute power and command of all the troops and authorities within the military cordon.

A Vienna dispatch says the Burgomaster of Vienna urges the government to sanction cremation as a precautionary measure against the plague.

London dispatches say the Novoe Vrenga reports that the plague has appeared in Bessarabia.

In the House of Lords to-night the Duke of Richmond, Lord President of the Councils, stated that England had asked permission of Russia to send physicians to investigate the plague. The Privy Council had, he said, ample power to enforce quarantine at a minute's notice, but he did not believe England was endangered.

The Times' Constantinople special states that General Todleben informed one of the Ambassadors that Roumelia and Bulgaria henceforth will be rigorously separated. Governors Dondoukoff and Stolipen will both be placed under the moderating control of Prince Lobanoff, Russian Minister.

Major Generals Crealock, Newdegate and Marshall are ordered to the Cape.

The Daily News' Berlin dispatch says: "If Bismarck dissolves the Reichstag, as he is universally expected to, he will obtain an overwhelming majority for protection in the ensuing elections."

A dispatch from Constantinople says: About thirty Turkish officials have already gone to Adrianople. The first Russian retrograde movement on a large scale is fixed for the 15th inst.

Immanuel's Land.

The sands of time are sinking,
The dawn of heaven breaks,
The summer morns we've sighed for,
The fair, sweet morn awakes.
Dark, dark has been the midnight,
But day-spring is at hand;
And glory, glory dwelleth
In Immanuel's land.

The signs in heaven thicken,
The nations are distressed,
Men's hearts for fear are failing—
The ocean cannot rest,
But amid the foaming billows,
And wrecks upon the strand,
We hail the glory dawning
In Immanuel's land.

Old Babylon has fallen,
With Medo-Persia's throne;
The Grecian horn is broken,
And Rome is almost gone.
But another King is coming,
With His bright, angelic band,
To take the throne of David
In Immanuel's land.

A land of milk and honey,
Where all is bright and fair;
And naught unclean or hateful
Can ever enter there.
Lord, hasten thine appearing,
And on Mount Zion stand,
And reign in all thy glory
In Immanuel's land.

The One Hope.—No. 7.

THE PROCRASTINATOR'S HOPE.

His hope is that there is a better time coming: therefore he says, "I will not now repent, but will wait awhile; when I get through sowing my wild oats will be a good time; in fact, that will be soon enough. I do not intend to die or go to the judgment without repentance, any more than any one else; but then I am so giddy yet. It seems to me as though it would be all of no use for me to try to be so gloomy and get religion now."

By those last words of yours, Procrastinator, I am inclined to believe you have received a wrong education relative to a practical life of Christianity, or what constitutes true religion. It is not to appear unto men of a "sad countenance." It is not anything of this kind that any man ever did or commanded to be done, but it is "to hear the word of God and do it." Do you think you are too young and wild to do that now by a conformity to his will as expressed in his Word?

"Well, no; but then—"

Well, what then?

"Why, that puts a different look upon the whole subject, I admit. 'To hear the Word of God and keep it.' To hear, I suppose, means to believe, and to keep or do means to practice it in one's life, does it not?"

That is all, sir; and that you can do now just as well as to-morrow or at any other time; in fact, your course is contrary to the Word of God, in every place, for that says, "Now is the day of salvation;" and again it says, "But now commandeth all men everywhere to repent."

"Does that not mean men in the sense of those who have arrived at maturity?"

I suppose the word men in the passage quoted means all classes of mankind. If you think you are not included in that text, being too young, I will quote another from the wise man, Solomon, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not." Procrastinator, you are wrong. You and Solomon do not see alike, for he sees in the future for you evil days, and you see a better time ahead. Is not this good time which you say you see a delusion which some power outside of yourself has infused into your mind in order the more easily to decoy and deceive you? Think, now; suppose you wished to deceive your fellow; how would you approach him? Would you roughly tell him all the sober facts? or would you speak gently to him, and by flattery and false, hollow promises decoy him to the goal of destruction, and by this means get him where he could not recover himself or be saved from ruin?

Procrastinator, beware of Satan's delusions. He is seeking whom he may devour still, and is seeking your destruction. I will illustrate your condition. Suppose you, in company with many others, were now enjoying one of the Southern beautiful walks. In the company is a child of tender years. In the course of your rambles you pass through a fine and shady grove. Suddenly the whole company is startled by the scream of this child, calling for help. What is the matter? Behold! a great snake has been concealed in the branches of a tree in this beautiful grove, and has thrust itself down and caught the child. The child becomes pale with terror. See! the snake winds its long body around him, drawing it tighter and tighter. If help does not come soon, the child will be killed. If in this case one in the company should loiter and delay, and say, "Wait! there is plenty of time. We can stop to enjoy this scene here, and that beauty there, and rescue ourselves and the child afterward," what would you think of such reasoning? Surely the risk is too great for such delay. So in your case, Procrastinator, whoever you may be. Satan, your adversary, has endeavored to engross the mind with the beauties of the way and the promise of the future, knowing that if he can entice the young to put off their repentance once, it will be easier the second time. He knows, also, that the evil days come as man advances in life, and that the Word of God says, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Ah! Procrastinator, God's adversary and yours is seeking your destruction, and therefore he will entice you to put off your repentance, and wait till later years, when he tells you it will be easier and more congenial to your animal nature and involuntary flesh. But Paul says this same animal nature is not and never will be subject to the law of God otherwise than by coercion, and by beating the carnal flesh which is thus by compulsion put under and kept under. The earlier in life it is begun, the easier it will be accomplished, but the longer it is delayed, and the flesh indulged by sowing wild oats as you have proposed, the harder it will be. "If ye live after the flesh," says Paul, "ye shall die," "but if through the spirit (of obedience to God ye do obey him) ye shall live."

Procrastinator, what a false and delusive hope is yours! Only see! it centers in a better time than now, which is God's only time, and is characterized by what is pleasing to your worst enemy, the devil, and by your doing just what he wishes you to do, i. e., delaying your repentance until it shall be so difficult for you to reform your life that at last he may see you destroyed with him in the lake of fire to which he knows himself to be already doomed. He does not mean to be cast in alone, therefore, he wishes to deceive others and so be the cause of their failure of the kingdom of God as he has already failed, and he, thereby, not go to destruction in the lake of fire alone.

Procrastinator, fly as from ruin's brink, before "the evil days draw nigh," and repent now. C. F. SWEET.

The Holy Spirit.

My whole heart is with what Bro. R. Wilson has written on this subject in THE RESTITUTION. But my object in writing is to present a thought that had occurred to my mind with regard to what has been said.

It seems to me our brethren who oppose Bro. Wilson's views are overconscious in always applying the phrases that speak of the Holy Spirit, in their most literal form. On other subjects they admit of figures of speech; but on this they seem to deny anything of the sort. Everything else, no matter how plain, must succumb to this particular tenet—the figures must all apply on the other side of the question. They overlook the fact that the things of the Spirit may be spoken of as the Spirit itself. We sometimes say a man sets a good table when we mean the things of the table; so the word "Spirit" may be used to represent the things of the Spirit. Such expressions as, "The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth;" "I commend you to God and the word of His grace, which is able to build you up and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified;" "Sanctified by faith that is in Me;" "The word of God. . . . . which effectually worketh also in you that believe;" "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken to you;" "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe;" and many like expressions, are so curtailed in their meaning as to lose almost their entire force. The power that is here applied to the word of God, by Bro. Wilson's opposers is applied to the Spirit. But to my mind, there can be no force in the expressions I have quoted, if, as these brethren say, the Spirit does the effectual work—the power of the word is lost if such is the case.

But our views are objected to, for they say "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually examined."—Disc. And this, they say, means that the Spirit must impress the meaning upon the heart. But how did they ascertain the truths in the days of the Apostles? how were they spiritually discerned at that time? "These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily whether those things were so," Acts, xvii. 11. How different from the teachings of to-day! They received the word with all readiness of mind; not, the Spirit softened the heart to receive it. They searched the Scriptures daily whether those things were so; not, the Spirit impressed the meaning on the heart. The Spirit operated upon the Apostles to aid them to speak, but not on the hearers to receive and understand the word. Peter says: "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God and Jesus our Lord, according as His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue," 2 Peter i. 2, 3. All things coming through knowledge does not look much like part of them coming some other way.

In Rom viii. we find where the apostle calls the things of the Spirit, the spirit; and in Acts ii. 38, the same thought is carried in the expression there used, although the more complete fulfillment of the promise will be the gift of the Holy Spirit at the rapture of the saints; nor do I dispute but that the reception of the Holy Spirit in the apostles' days was, in a measure, intended in the text; but the foremost thought, at this time, looks to the time to come. I believe 1 Cor. iii. 16, and vi. 19 bear the same thoughts; but the main one is the prophetical. Gal. iii. 2 will consistently admit of the same interpretation as those in Rom. viii., yet to the church at that time it meant more than this. All these Scriptures must be framed to apply to each state of the church.

One question: If the Spirit operates other than through the word in these days, why is there so great a diversity of opinions? why does it teach one that the soul is immortal, and another the opposite? why does it teach one class no probation after the Lord comes, and another class directly opposite? If we say they are not as honest as others, it seems to me we judge without knowledge. Oh! consistency is, indeed, a jewel! But the Spirit is not if it teaches confusion.

By the things of the Spirit I mean all that the spirit teaches relative to our salvation, including the fruit of the Spirit. Gal. v. 22. There are things of the Spirit because the spirit produces them, the word being the means used. But all are not always meant or prominent; sometimes the promises, sometimes the commandments, and sometimes that which is produced. A little discrimination is all is needed.

But I have written much more than I intended, and, I fear, have presented more than one thought; yet all in love. Pardon the digression.

Will all the Unjust have a Resurrection?

Ed. Restitution:—Will you please try and give room in the paper for a few lines on the above subject? I see one brother of the faith claims that the wicked will never be resurrected, and another brother of the same faith proclaims that the wicked will have a resurrection. I wish to give a few ideas in regard to the subject. Paul says whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.

How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? Brethren, do you not believe that thousands and thousands have died that have not not even heard of the Gospel of Christ? Now, the question arises, how can they believe in the Gospel plan of salvation when they never had a chance to hear of the truth as it is in Christ? Did not Adam have an opportunity to live forever? Did not the antediluvians have an opportunity to accept the Gospel, and also the Sodomites? As these all rejected the truth, on account of their rejecting they cannot have life again. Proof, Prov. xxi. Solomon the son of David says, "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Deu. xii. 2, Daniel says, "Many (not all) that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

Now, brethren, remember that I do not speak as one that claims to know it all, for it is not so. I am seeking after the truth, and nothing but the truth. I merely state here what I believe to be the facts in the case, and will say, as all Christians should say, that I proclaim these facts with the spirit of Christ. I believe this class that Daniel mentions here are a class that never has had an opportunity to hear the Gospel way of life, and when they do have an opportunity and then reject the plain teachings of the word that this is the class spoken of by Daniel, and this is the class in my mind, that will die the second death from which there is no life. Isaiah lxv. in speaking on a class that are on probation during the restitution age, says the sinner will live to be a hundred years old, and then if he don't repent he will be accursed.

Now, the wise man says, "he that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." But as concerning the class that never have heard of the blessed plan of salvation, I must say that I believe they will have a resurrection. Infants and all that never did hear the truth, will be on probation during the thousand years which constitutes the times of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. Mich. 4, "For the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among many people." Job xxxvi. 12: Job says if they obey and serve him they shall spend their days in prosperity; but if they obey not, they shall perish by the sword, and they shall die without knowledge. As Paul says, how can they believe in whom they have not heard.

Brethren, I will submit the subject to minds that can comprehend God's word in a deeper sense than I can. Let us study to show ourselves approved unto God, rightly dividing the word of truth. Yours in hope,

E. O. NELSON.

Is Sodom to be Restored.

After reading the very interesting article from the Scientific American, I was confident that somewhere in the prophets I had read of the restitution of Sodom. Not having a concordance, I examined all the prophets from Isaiah to Malachi, and could not find what I was sure I had seen. On a second examination by daylight I found it in Ezekiel xvi. from forty-eighth verse to the end of chapter. I quote a verse or two, and ask those interested to read the whole. "When thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate. . . . . Nevertheless, I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant. Then thou shalt remember thy ways and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thy younger; and I will give them unto thee for daughters but not by thy covenant," &c. O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!

Some Wonderful Examples of the Power of Memory.

An individual well known in London by the name of "Memory-Corner Thompson," was remarkable for an astonishing local memory. In the space of twenty-four hours and at two sittings he drew from memory a correct plan of the whole parish of St. James. This plan contained all the squares, streets, lanes, courts, passages, markets, churches, chapels, houses, stables, angles of houses, and a great number of other objects, as walls, parapets stones, trees, etc., and an exact plan of Carlton House and St. James Palace. He made out also an exact plan of the parish of St. Andrew, and offered to do the same with that of St. Giles, St. Paul, Covent Garden, St. Clement, and Newchurch.

If a particular house on any given street was mentioned, he would tell at once what trade was carried on in it, the position and appearance of the shop and its contents. In going through a large hotel, completely furnished, he was able to retain everything and make an inventory from memory. He possessed a most mechanical memory, and he could, by reading a newspaper over night, repeat the whole the next morning. He died in February, 1843, at the age of 86. Mr. Paxton Hood know a man in London who could repeat the whole of Josephus; and William Lyon, like Thompson, could read the Daily Advertiser every night and repeat it word for word the next morning.

Mithridates, King of Pontus, had an empire in which two-and-twenty languages were spoken; yet it is asserted that he had not a subject with whom he could not converse in his own dialect. But in later times the royal linguist has been eclipsed by the late Cardinal Mezzofanti, who died in 1849. He had a wonderful memory for the retention of words, and with a grammatical intuition which has never been properly explained. He went on acquiring languages till, at the age of 70, he could converse in upwards of fifty, besides having an acquaintance with at least twenty more.

He was at home in both of the dialects of the Basque language, the most difficult dialects of German; with Englishmen he never misapplied the sign of a tense. Besides the foregoing, he was so far master of at least one Chinese dialect that he delivered a set speech to Chinese students at the Vatican. So conversant was he with all the dialects of each tongue that he could at once detect the particular country, province or district to which the speaker belonged.

He himself was upon several occasions mistaken for a native of totally different countries. According to his own words, as related to his friend Cardinal Wiseman, his method of studying a new language was to read straight through the grammar, and when he had arrived at the end he was master of the whole. He never forgot anything he once heard or read.

East of the Jordan.

The Palestine Exploration Society is proceeding finely in the use of the rich material it has already secured. The American Society undertook the survey of the territory east of the Jordan, and have finished five hundred square miles, to which space they have registered and entered 247 new names of sites not found on any previous map. Of these, no less than fifty are new identifications of historic sites made by Dr. Selah Merrill. These splendid and important results are now drawn out on a map in thirteen sections, the whole map being eleven and a half feet long by six and a half feet wide, handsomely executed by R. Meyer, Assistant Engineer of the Palestine Exploration Society.

This map has been sent to London for publication with the map now being issued, by the British Society, of the west side of the Jordan.

The Rev. Dr. Hitchcock, of the N. Y. Union Theological Seminary, under whose intelligent care this work has been prosecuted, is to be congratulated on its wonderful progress, and we wish that our Christian men of wealth could see the importance of giving him the means to complete the work so auspiciously begun.

A Highway There.

The Governor of Syria has called a railroad convention at Damascus, of the more prominent men of Syria. He has declared his purpose to build a railroad from Damascus to the Hauran, where lies the great wheat region of that country, and also to carry a railroad around the Southern Lebanon to Sidon, and so up to Beirut. This will be a mighty stride toward the development and civilization of Syria.

Waiting.

Learn to wait—life's hardest lesson,
Conned, perchance, through blinding tears;
While the heart-throbs sadly echo
To the tread of passing years,

Learn to wait—hope's slow fruition,
Faint not though the way seems long;
There is joy in each condition.
Heart's, though suffering, may grow strong.

Content sunshine, how'er welcome,
Ne'er would ripen fruit or flower;
Giant oaks owe half their greatness
To the seething tempest's power.

Thus a soul, untouched by sorrow,
Aims not at a higher state;
Joy seeks not a brighter morrow,
Only as it hearts learn to wait.

Human strength and human greatness
Spring not from life's sunny side,
Heroes must be more than driftwood,
Floating on a careless tide.

The New Heavens and the New Earth.

ALLAN D. MAGRUDER.

We turn now to the contemplation of the new heavens and the new earth which, as we have seen, it is the purpose of the Great Architect to create.

It will contribute to a better understanding of the great subject, if we discard in advance the popular fallacy at one time current that the material earth itself and the firmament around it are doomed to utter extinction by fire. Such incendiary ideas have been freely used, in our time, "to point a moral or to adorn a tale." It is not too bold to say they are entirely of heathen origin. The ancients, without revelation and ignorant of the Bible doctrine of a future life for man by means of the resurrection from the dead, invented a baneful solution of the problem of human destiny. Socrates and Plato among the philosophers, and Homer and Virgil of the poets became the high priests of the new faith. Hence, their contradictory conceits of the consequences and the catastrophe of creation, of the eternal duration of man and yet the utter destruction of his dwelling-place; of disembodied spirits and eternal suffering in a burning hell; of a total material ruin of all things and yet an immaterial salvation for man who, at the last moment of expiring time, is made "to light his torch at nature's funeral pile" and soar aloft unhurt amid an imagined "war of elements, wreck of matter and crash of worlds."

It is due to sober truth to say that, in the steady light of Bible testimony, such fancy sketches pale and vanish away like a vision of the night. It is the plain testimony of Holy Writ that "the earth endureth forever," that "He hath established it forever," that it "shall never be moved out of her place." Nay, is not the word of Jehovah solemnly pledged for its continued and perpetual security in the memorable promise to Noah after the flood: "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake," .... "Neither will I again smite any more every living thing as I have done." The texts of Scripture usually cited to sustain the opposite conclusion, especially one from St. Peter, are easily and naturally harmonized with those just quoted, by reference to the contextual connection and the general tenor of the Holy Volume.

By the most solemn and imposing forms of speech ever employed by Jehovah, he hath declared that "He hath not created the earth in vain," that "He hath formed it to be inhabited," that "He hath given it to the children of men," that "the meek shall inherit it—shall dwell therein forever," that "the saints shall possess it as an everlasting inheritance," saying, "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." How are such repeated and solemn declarations to be reconciled to the theory of the utter destruction of the planet and its ultimate and appalling doom to the wreck and ruin of chaos? How, possibly, to the fulfillment of the great primal promise—(the gradual development of which has formed the only reasonable ground of hope to our race, since the world began) that "the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head," and how, again, on that most cheerless of all hypotheses, are we to escape the startling conclusion that evil will thus have triumphed over good; fraud and falsehood over virtue and truth; death over life; the creature over the Creator; in fine, Satan over God!

It is indeed true that the earth will not always remain as it is, despoiled of its primeval freshness and beauty, cursed for man's sake and sighing for deliverance from the bondage of this perishing estate. The present heavens and earth, like their antediluvian predecessors, await new decrees of their divine Maker—another constitution—an organization adapted to the genial work of restitution and recovery which it is Christ's mission to achieve. This gracious and beneficent change in their uses and relations to man is plainly declared by the apostles. More than eighteen hundred years ago St. Paul wrote of the present heavens and earth: "They shall perish, but thou (the Son) remainest, and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up and they shall be changed." Here their "perishing" is defined to be "changing," and St. Peter, with equal force and clearness, when speaking of certain latter-day scoffers, saying, (in the languages of certain modern sophists,) "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation," adds, "This they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing in the water and out of the water, whereby the world that then was being overflowed with water perished." Now, we know that it is the present earth—the same terrestrial ball on which we dwell which was submerged by the flood. The proofs of this are too conclusive for denial.

The perishing thus mentioned by both Paul and Peter is then the change of the constitution or organization, not the destruction of the material fabric of the earth itself. The present constitution of nature differs, undoubtedly, from that which belonged to the antediluvian era. Indeed, may we not go further back and conclude that our planet had, long previously, an organization adapted to a race who inhabited it anterior to the creation of man? The Scriptures do not reveal to us the duration of the earth's revolutions around the sun previous to the work of the first day, but the strata of our globe show that the period was long continued. Although not written apparently with the purpose of informing us of the previous state of our world, there are hints in the Scriptures which acquaint us with a pre-Adamic race on earth.

The Apostle Peter speaks of certain "false teachers" who should arise among Christians "by reason of whom the way of truth should be evil spoken of," and illustrates the certainty of their "damnation" by citing three cases in point, viz.: That of certain angels, that of the antediluvian world, and that of Sodom and Gomorrah; and Jude, another apostle, is somewhat more specific when, suggesting and enforcing the same truth, he styles them "the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation," and as being yet "reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." Now, seeing that these are set forth as examples and warnings to the inhabitants of the earth, and are with the antediluvians and Sodom, to be arraigned "at the judgment of the great day," we do no violence to a fair exegesis to regard them all as related to the affairs of our mundane sphere in the order of their enumeration:

1. Judgment upon the pre-Adamic inhabitants of the earth.

2. Upon the antediluvian race which succeeded them.

3. Upon Sodom and Gomorrah, after the flood.

From these premises it would appear:

I. That these pre-Adamic angels had the power to leave their dwelling if they pleased.

II. That they were sometimes employed as messengers to other parts of God's creation, for this is implied in their name (angelos, one sent).

III. That they were forbidden to leave their own habitation without especial command to do so; and

IV. That they violated this injunction and wandered from their homes, and for this offence it is recorded that Jehovah, "casting them down," or driving them back, committed them to everlasting or age-lasting chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment. Hence, it seems plain that when driven back to their habitation, some further catastrophe befel them by which they were retained in silence and darkness until their reappearance to judgment. This consisted, probably, in the total wreck of their dwelling-place, the earth, and its and their submergence with all the mammoths of their estate under the waters of an overwhelming flood. Reduced to this condition, the earth became what the Adamic era found it, "without form and void" or empty. Darkness overspread its deep waters. Its mountains, hills, valleys, plains, seas, rivers and fountains which give diversity of form to the surface of our globe, all disappeared, and it was "void" of every living creature. Fragments of the wreck of this pre-Mosaic world have been brought to light by the researches of geology. These show abundantly that its organic remains, fossils, coal fields and strata belong to the ages before the creation of man.

This view of the subject removes a host of difficulties which, ingeniously propounded, have been supposed to disturb the harmony between the conclusions of science and the Bible account of the creation and physical constitution of our globe. Geologists have ventured to extend the six days of creation into six thousand years. This expedient, however, with the Scriptural facts and premises before us is quite unnecessary. Instead of six thousand, they can avail themselves of sixty thousand years, for the work of the original creation of our material globe with its pre-Adamic occupants, for the Bible does not reveal to us the length of time during which these terrene angels dwelt upon our earth.

The Mosaic account in Genesis affords us clear internal evidence to support this conclusion, in the command to Adam and Eve to "multiply and replenish the earth," proving that the planet had previously been filled and inhabited. The wonderful volume in the first verse of the first chapter of the first book informs us that, "In the beginning (whenever that was) God created the heaven and the earth," and further teaches in the last part of the last book in the Divine Record (Revelation) that "God will create new heavens and a new earth," thus acquainting us with a grand secret which the scientists and savans, following the light of science and philosophy "falsely, so-called," have not yet learned that the present world or kosmos is not a finality, but a means to an end yet future; that mankind are now living under a provisional and not a permanent government of God, and that the end is not yet.

Jerusalem now in Ruins is to be Rebuilt and Become the Metropolitan City of the Kingdom of God.

There has been much speculation among writers and talkers of the people professing faith in the soon-coming of Jesus, relative to the Jerusalem of the apocalyse, and that of Ezekiel. The latter presents the city at the commencement of the Christian dispensation or age to come—the former at the close. But, it is said, that it comes down from heaven. True, it does in the sense that the baptism of John, Jesus, and all the prophecies came. John "was in the Isle of Patmos;" the revelation was from heaven. And there would be just as much sense for one to assert that the great red dragon was a literal dragon, and was literally in heaven where God resides, and all the rest of the symbols, as for one to teach that there is a city in heaven whose walls are 1,500 miles high, etc. But, it is said, that "God is the maker and builder." True, he is the designer and architect, and has, through his prophets, given us the plan of the city, how it is to be built, who are to be the laborers and bring the free-will offerings; and that under the direction and supervision of Jesus, our elder brother—the royal Son of David—the work is to be accomplished. And as it has pleased God that in him the fullness of the gospel dispensation or age-to-come should dwell, therefore he is styled the "Healer of the breach," the "Restorer," the "Wonderful Counsellor," the "Master of the everlasting age," (age-to-come), the "Almighty Hero," the "Prince of Peace." Translated by G. R. Lederer.

But, to the Scriptures of Israel we will go, and by them we will be guided. In the 48th Psalm we have a beautiful description of Zion and Jerusalem built up: "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised, in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King. Walk about Zion and go round about her; tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces, that ye may tell it to the generation following." And in Psalm cii. we learn that there is a "set time" for Zion to be built up. And when we shall have reached this "set time" in the history of human redemption, "the Lord will appear in his glory" to do the work, because Israel has taken "pleasure in her stones and favored the dust thereof." And it is an historical fact that travelers who have visited the Holy Land, have found a hard, beaten track where they have, at the risk of their lives, crawled upon their hands and knees to reach the foot of the sacred hill, that they might kiss the dust and carry off some of the stones.

And in Micah iii. 12, we have a prophecy that was penned 760 years before the birth of Jesus, and in A. D. 70 it had its literal fulfillment in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, as predicted by Moses 1521 years previous to its destruction. Deut. xxviii. 49-67. And in the 4th chapter of Micah we are informed that, "in the last"—the times of Messiah—the Christian dispensation—the age-to-come, the same Zion that was to "be plowed as a field," the same Jerusalem that was to "become heaps," and the same mountain of the house that was to become "as the high place of the forest," is to be rebuilt and "established," or exalted above all kingdoms and cities. "And many nations shall come and say: come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob, (twelve tribes,) and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." And the Jews will be the bearers of this message as symbolized by the messengers of Rev. xiv. 6, 7; see Isa. lxvi. 19. In the day when Jerusalem shall be rebuilt the Lord "Shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: and nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit under his vine and fig-tree, and none shall make them afraid; for the Lord of hosts hath spoken it." Not the Protestant church, as the Adventists say, but the Lord hath predicted it, and, only as Jesus returns can it have its fulfillment.

A similar prediction is found in the 9th chapter of Amos, and quoted by St. James at the conference held in Jerusalem. He, as well as Amos, locates its fulfillment subsequent to the return of Jesus, our life-giver: "And after they had held their peace, James answered, saying, men and brethren, hearken unto me. Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written. After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up: that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things."

In this interesting portion of Holy Writ, the following truths are clearly set forth:

1. A people is to be taken out of the Gentiles for his name, his honor and glory.

2. To the accomplishment of this work St. James refers the conference to the prophets of Israel as a proof.

3. After this, the taking out of the Gentiles a people for the name of Deity, Jesus will return.

Micah, as well as other prophets, had predicted the scattering of Israel, the destruction of the royal residence of David; also Jerusalem, and the temple and walls, and that the "land would be spoiled by invading armies." But, upon the return of Jesus, St. James informed the conference that these prophets had declared that the royal palace of David, the temple, the city and its walls, which are now fallen down, shall be rebuilt, and the "curse" taken off from the land.

"Then the moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed," that is, shall appear to shine with diminished beauty, as if it were ashamed in the superior glory that would shine around it, "when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." "In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel. And it shall come to pass, that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem: When the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning. And the Lord will create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for upon all the glory shall be a defence." "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir-tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary, and I will make the place of my feet glorious." "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls salvation and thy gates praise."

Violence has been heard in Eden—Israel-land—ever since Adam committed that sinful act, and is still heard. Wasting and destruction has also been going on, and will continue during the times of the Gentiles, which is an immutable argument that the city, the Jerusalem of the prophets, which is that of the apocalypse, has never been built, therefore, it will be; for God has said it "shall be builded upon her own little hill." And he has informed us that "Strangers (Gentiles) shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee; (Israel and Jerusalem), for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favor I will tenderly embrace thee." Here we learn that Jerusalem, now in ruins—a city and people that God has smote in his wrath—is to be rebuilt and "made an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations." "And thy gates shall be continually open; by day and by night they shall not be shut, that the treasures of nations may be brought unto thee, and that their kings may be brought." Or, as it is recorded in Rev. xxi.: "And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; for there shall be no night there. And they shall bring the glory and honor (the wealth) of the nations into it. And nona shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited." "And they shall call thee the city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel." "Then the sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory."

St. John, in giving a description of the same city, says: "And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb (Jesus) is the light thereof." That is, the glory of God will eclipse that of the sun, or so irradiate the city that they will not need that of the sun. Isa. iv. and lx.; Rev. xxi.; Zech xiv.

The reader will find, by examining the last nine chapters of Ezekiel and the two last of the Apocalypse, that the prophet and St. John are speaking of the same city, the same river, the same tree of life, bearing the same kind of fruit, and yielding it monthly, "and its leaf is for medicine" or "the healing of the nations." "And there shall be no more curse (in Canaan and the city), but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him."

Some of the ideas which we have presented of the glorious future have been beautifully versified by Pope:

"Rise, crowned with light, Imperial Salem rise!
Exalt thy towering head, and lift thy eyes
See barbarous nations at thy gates attend,
Walk in thy light, and in thy temple bend;
See thy bright altars thronged with prostrate kings,
And heaped with products of Sabean springs!
For thee Idumea's spicy forests blow,
And seeds of gold in Ophir's mountains glow;
See heaven its sparkling portals wide display,
And break upon thee in a flood of day!
No more the rising sun shall gild thy morn,
Nor evening Cynthia fill her silver horn;
But lost, dissolved, in thy superior rays,
One tide of glory, one unclouded blaze,
O'erflow thy courts; the light himself shall shine
Revealed, and God's eternal day be thine!"

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—I enclose two dollars to renew my subscription.

I congratulate the readers of the paper on the choice of our worthy and esteemed brother as editor for another year. His tolerant spirit has given us in the past that variety of food which our various conditions of thought require. While the "vail that is spread over all nations" is being gradually removed from the understanding of those who are searching for the hidden treasure, it cannot be expected that each one can see eye to eye on every subject presented in Holy Writ. May our gracious Lord give our aged brother health, courage and wisdom to continue his labor of love and good works in dispensing the word of life to the scattered flock until the Bridegroom shall come to claim his waiting bride, and clothe her with immortality.

Above all, let patience have her perfect work, that you may bear with us while we differ with you, and among ourselves, on some points.

Inasmuch as there is at the present time being much said and written on the subject of "The Lost Tribes of Israel," "Our Israelitish Origin," etc., I would like to present to the readers of our paper a few suggestions:

In the first place, I ask, Where is the proof or evidence that any of the tribes of Jacob are now or ever were lost?

And in the next place, Of what avail will it be to the Anglo-Saxons, during the present age, should they succeed in tracing their pedigree back to one of the tribes of Israel, while they as a nation or race remain in unbelief?

By a careful and strict adherence to the Divine Guide, the whereabouts of Israel's tribes may be known at the present time, and on, until the Good Shepherd gathers them.

Those tribes were repeatedly told that in case of their disobedience they should be scattered among all people, "from the one end of the earth even unto the other."

Deut. iv. 27, xxviii. 64, Amos ix. 9, and the following passages, seem to teach that they will remain in a scattered state or condition, until the gathering time arrives; and the place of gathering will be the Promised Land, from which they were expelled. See Isa. xi. 12; lxvi. 20; Jer. xxiii. 3; Ezek. xxxvi. 19-24; xxxvii. 21. Here we are told that the scattered flock is to be gathered out from all nations, and all countries.

It can hardly be inferred from the foregoing testimonies that any one or more of these scattered tribes might become a great and mighty nation, holding undisputed possession of many countries, previous to the gathering time.

The question might here arise, If all the tribes of Israel are among all nations a distinct, separate people, why can we not identify them? I answer, we may suppose every circumcised person we meet a Jew, but that does not make him such. And a person claiming to be of Jewish extraction may not be able to prove his pedigree.

At the close of the Babylonish captivity of only seventy years' duration there were many who claimed to be Jews—642 out of a company of 42,000—which could not show their father's house, nor their seed (margin, pedigree). And some of "the priests sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but it was not found," etc. Neh. vii. 61-64.

This being the case, it would not be unreasonable to conclude that no son of Jacob at the present time, after a dispersion of more than eighteen centuries, could be expected to show his pedigree.

It is evident from what we find in Acts ii., James i. 1, and 1 Peter i., that the ten tribes were scattered (not lost) long before the destruction of Jerusalem. The apostle James addresses his epistle to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad. This implies that the ten tribes were not at that time dwelling in some country alone by themselves; neither were they lost, as some may conjecture, else the epistle would not have been addressed to them.

At the feast of weeks, or day of Pentecost, there were representatives of Israelitish extraction from every country of the then known world, and from every direction from Jerusalem. It would hardly seem reasonable to suppose that none but Jews were present to represent so many nationalities and languages at that feast recorded in Acts ii.

Lest I trespass on your space I will add but one more thought: Of what advantage would it be to me, or to the whole Anglo-Saxon race, if it should turn out that we were of near kin to the Jewish race? If any one now fails to make his or her calling and election sure, all such will surely be lost, whether Jew or Gentile, when the bride is taken; to pass through the judgments caused by the pouring out of the "seven golden vials full of the wrath of God.....upon the earth." It is true there will be a few sealed ones of each of Israel's tribes, who may be favored in some way, God only knows how. The only place of safety is in the great antitypical ark.

Yours, in the one hope,

J. D. SHERIDAN.

Christian Union: A French engineer has made a report on the project of a railroad across the Desert of Sahara. The projected line would run from Algiers to Timbuctoo, a distance of some 1,300 miles, and would rest mainly on layers of sand, and toward the end on primitive volcanic rock, granite, etc. No mountainous obstructions would have to be encountered and the average heat does not exceed 75° deg. Fahrenheit. The proposed tunnel between Spain and Africa is still before the public. This tunnel, according to the plan at present contemplated, is to extend from within a short distance of Algeciras, on the Spanish side, to between Tangier and Ceuta, on the African side. The length of the submarine tunnel will be nine miles, with an inclination of one foot per hundred. The greatest depth of the sea is 3,000 feet; and as it is intended to have a thickness of some 300 feet of rock left between the roof of the tunnel and the sea bottom, the greatest depth of the tunnel will thus be 3,300 feet below the level of the sea.

Phebe Nichols, a colored woman, who has long been well-known in New York, died on the 28th inst., at the age of 102 years, 11 months and 14 days. She was born in Bloomingdale, now near the centre of the city, and in early life was employed as nurse in many of the old New York families. Her memory of early events in the history of Manhattan Island was very vivid, and her reminiscences of the revolutionary period were many and interesting. She remembered Gen. Washington, Gen. Lafayette, and other prominent persons of the time. Her husband was the coachman of Col. Rutgers, at the time of the last visit of Gen. Lafayette to this country, and drove the coach that contained that distinguished personage from the Battery up Broadway.

Many of the waves of trouble, like those of the ocean, will, if we await them calmly, break at our feet and disappear.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the return of him who is the King of kings and Lord of lords, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the transmutation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

GREAT IMPENDING CRISIS.

Papal Hierarchy—Gradual Decline—Final Extinction—Causes of Its Fall, Great Chieftain—His Real and Prophetic Histories Compared.

J. P. WEETHEE.

At the time of most profound peace, when iniquity and pollution were come to the full, the consuming angel (the Bible) entered upon the work of his mission. For centuries the word of God had been unknown to the masses, it being kept in an unknown tongue. Even the priesthood read it but seldom, since it had long ceased to be their guide. It was found only in ancient libraries as a curious fossil of forgotten ages. The period to which we refer was the beginning of the sixteenth century, before the dawn of the Reformation and a few years after the discovery of the New World. Of that period a learned author thus speaks: "The pope had in his most audacious manner declared himself the sovereign of the whole world. All the parts of it which were inhabited by those who were not Christians he accounted to be inhabited by nobody; and if Christians took it into their heads to possess any of those countries, he gave them full liberty to make war on the inhabitants without any provocation, and to treat them with no more humanity than they would have treated wild beasts. The countries, if conquered, were to be parceled out according to the pope's pleasure; and dreadful was the situation of that prince who refused to obey the will of the holy pontiff. In consequence of this extraordinary authority which the pope had assumed, he at last granted to the king of Portugal all the countries eastward of Cape Non, in Africa, and to the king of Spain all the countries to the westward of it. In this was completed in his person the character of antichrist sitting in the temple of God, and showing himself as God. He had long before assumed the supremacy belonging to the Deity himself in spiritual matters, and now he assumed the same supremacy in worldly matters, also giving the extreme regions of the earth to whom he pleased." (Buck's Theo. Dic).

Such was the state of things when Martin Luther found a copy of the Bible in an old library, and began his investigations. The divine light began to shine. The messenger of God's retributive justice went forth, and the work of the diffusion of knowledge, and the equality of power, moved onward.

As the reformation progressed, the central despotism of more than twelve centuries gradually lost its power, till in 1798, the pope was deprived of all temporal power, and made a prisoner. His civil power was partly restored as regarded the states of the church; but since the rise of the Italian Kingdom all temporal power has been taken from him, as now admitted by the Roman See. He now sits as a great chieftain of an apostate church, shorn of all lightning to add thunder to his "papal bulls." No nation dreads his power. His decrees are harmless, since there is no authority to carry out their provisions. The chieftain of to-day! What is he? a man of great age and lofty pretensions, but decrepit, and in the last stages of an incurable consumption. What his future is, or how long he will drag out a miserable existence, civil history does not inform us. He is to be destroyed when Christ comes, for he (Christ) is to put down all "rule, and all authority and all power."

The Prophetic and Historic Chieftains Compared.

The Spirit revealed to Daniel, Paul and John a noted character. It only remains that we compare photographs in order to establish their identity.

Daniel's Prophetic Chieftain.

The fourth beast of Daniel (Dan. vii. 7) was a sea monster with ten horns. It came up amid terrible revolutions. Its horns (ten) were grown when the monster is first seen. This vision, therefore, begins with the fourth empire, under its ten kingdoms, and looks onward to the end. The chronology of its commencement is fixed at the origin or birth of the little horn. The prophetic history is confined to the agency of this eleventh horn, not called the eleventh, as it was unlike the ten. As the "acts" of the apostles are principally the acts of Paul, because he was the chief actor, so of the little horn. It fills Daniel's prophetic vision. Though Daniel really saw the sea monster from his origin, yet the scope of the vision dates only back to the beginning of the horns. Therefore the seven heads are not named. The explanation of the divine messenger was satisfactory, "He told me and made me know the interpretation of the things." Of the sea monster he simply said in general terms, "the fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down and, break it in pieces, v. 23. Of the ten horns he briefly says: "The ten horns out of this (fourth) kingdom (are) ten kings (that) shall arise," v. 24. The monster and his ten horns are introduced to show the time of the rise, and relationship of the little horn. The remainder of the interpretation is confined to the eleventh horn.

Little Horn.

Eight specifications claim our particular notice.

1. His geographical position. 2. Chronology of his birth. 3. Size. 4. Look. 5. Words. 6. Deeds. 7. His judgment. 8. His execution.

All these particulars are explained so definitely that Daniel understood them in the distant future.

1. His location. The ten horns belonged to the fourth beast. The little horn came up "among them," v. 8; the ten were "his fellows," v. 20. He plucks up three horns, takes their crowns, and out of them forms a triple crown for himself. He erects his kingdom on the territory of the three kingdoms. His location is, therefore, definite. It is that part of Italy, known for centuries as the "States of the Church."

2. Chronology of his rise. He arose "after them" (horns) and before the fall of the three. The rise of this kingdom is between the establishment of the ten kingdoms and the overthrow of the three kingdoms, A. D. 476 to 606

3. Size of the horn. It is called "little." When it first appears sprouting up among the ten horns it is a small scion, attracting attention only by its eyes and mouth; its look was more brassy than his fellows.

4. His look. This drew the prophet's special notice; not so much that it had eyes, but the use that he made of them—their extreme impudence—"stout look," as if, by right, the world was under his "see;" he seemed to be a general "overseer."

5. His words. The little horn had a "mouth," and he was willing that the world should know it. He was particularly proud that one attribute of it was speech. "He spake great things." His eye collected, his mouth uttered. His words were as blasphemous as his eye was crafty and deceitful. He issued edicts concerning all human things; and not satisfied with officiously meddling with all human governments, he speaks great words against the Most High.

As one of old, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?"—Dan. iv. 30. Some of the ideas expressed above are inferred from the actions ascribed to the horn.

6. His deeds. "He plucked up three of the first horns by the roots," v. 8. The symbol act is explained in v. 24: "And he shall subdue three kings."

Chronology of this event: The three kingdoms were the Heruli, established under Odoacer, the Ostrogoths, under Theodoric, and the Lombards, under Alboin. The donation of the Exarchate of Ravenna was the first fruits under the conquests of Pepin, king of France. In this grant were included Ravenna, Bologna and Ferrara. This was paid by Pepin for the remission of his sins and the salvation of his soul.

"In the dissolution of the Lombard kingdom, the inhabitants of the duchy of Spoleto sought refuge from the storm, shaved their heads after the Roman fashion, declared themselves the servants and subjects of St. Peter, and completed, by this voluntary surrender, the present circle of the Ecclesiastical States." "That donation, or mysterious circle, was enlarged to an infinite extent, by the verbal, or written donation of Charlemagne. The sovereignty of the exarchate melted away in the hands of the popes." In honor of this subjugation of the three kingdoms the popes wore a triple crown. This event was consummated in the seventh century.

Second act—Made war on the saints. Daniel's little horn, explained to be a kingdom, v. 20, made war on the saints, and prevailed against them, till the Ancient of days came and gave judgment in favor of the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom, vs. 21, 22. It is said in the explanation, he shall wear out the saints of the Most High, v. 25. The bloody persecutions of our historic chieftain, extending through so many centuries, the martyrdoms of twelve centuries, are fully sufficient to identify the chief agent.

Third act—Change times and laws and control them. Of the little horn it is said, "He shall think to change times and laws, and they shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the dividing of time," v. 25. Gregory VII. says: "The Roman Pontiff, by right, is universal. In him alone is the right of making laws. Let kings kiss his feet." He claimed to legislate, judge and execute. And these three departments he filled, both in church and state, for more than a thousand years. His authority as the great Christian chieftain is to-day what it was twelve centuries ago. His power as an executive officer has changed. He can make laws for his church, judge and excommunicate. Beyond this he has no ability.

7. His judgment. Daniel sees the Ancient of days sit in judgment on the little horn, vs. 9, 10, 22. In the interpretation of the vision it is said: "But the judgment shall sit," v. 26. This session of the judgment was not on earth, and consequently it was invisible. The session of judgment, or of the court, precedes the trial; the trial goes before the sentence; the sentence is previous to the execution. If, therefore, the sentence is being executed, we know that the court session, the trial and the sentence, are in the past.

8. Sentence executed. Daniel, in vision, sees a judgment executed. See vs. 11, 22, 26. He saw "till the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom," v. 22. In the interpretation it is said: "And they (ten horns) shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy to the end," v. 26. Two distinct features are brought to view in the execution. First, his dominion is taken away; second, a gradual wasting, or withdrawal of power follows, to the final extinction.

Our historic chieftain, the Roman pontiff, has lost all civil power. He once claimed to be king of kings, wore a triple crown, and had kings and emperors for his foot-stool. Now he does not possess even the states of the church. His dominion (civil) is taken away, and his authority wasting to a final end. The ten kingdoms were the executors of the sentence. They had for centuries sustained his proud usurpations, but as the light of divine truth radiated among the people they gradually withdrew their patronage.

Summary: The dream, or sleeping vision of Dan. vii., has the following specifications:

First—The great sea violently agitated by the four winds of heaven.

Second specific vision, or photograph—A lion with eagle's wings rises up out of the sea; his wings were plucked and his power passes from him.

Third photographic vision—A second beast like unto a bear, having three ribs in its mouth, comes out of the sea.

Fourth vision—In the view of a beast like a leopard, four wings and four heads.

Fifth vision—Brings up a sea monster with iron teeth, nails of brass and ten horns.

Sixth vision—Presents to the prophet for special notice the ten horns as a remarkable appendage to the fourth beast.

Seventh vision—Brings to view the central character of the dream—the little horn, with eyes and a mouth.

The eighth vision is one of great sublimity; the Ancient of days, his garments white as snow, his hair like the pure wool, his throne a flame of fire, and his wheels burning fire; a stream of fire rolled before him. Thousand thousands ministered to him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him.

The ninth vision brings to view the judgment and execution of the fourth beast, caused by the great words of the little horn.

The tenth vision follows the little horn through his eventful life, from his birth, through infancy, childhood (for it is personified), youth, manhood, old age, to his final ruin and death.

The eleventh vision is occupied with the sufferings of the saints.

The twelfth vision is that of the Son of Man receiving from the Ancient of days a kingdom, universal and everlasting.

These agents cover the space and duration of the metallic image, and they are displaced by the same everlasting kingdom.

One thing demands special notice: The order and chronology of the kingdom of the Son of Man. It follows the fourth kingdom, and is not received from the Ancient of days till after the judgment and fall of the little horn.

Daniel's great chieftain is an ecclesiastical power as well as a civil dynasty. It is a horn (symbol of civil power), and it has eyes and a mouth, and as he uses them against God and his saints, it is evident that his position is such as to place them in his way.

His symbol, a horn, with eyes and mouth, makes him a politico-ecclesiastical power; and as he was a horn of the fourth beast, coming up among the ten horns, and as the fourth kingdom sprang up in Italy, this horn must have that location. Civil history traces such a politico-ecclesiastical power to central Italy, all its features agreeing with Daniel's symbol agent. We have compared photographs, and are obliged to say that they agree.

Supplement. We have dwelt more particularly on the dream of Daniel vii., because in it are found the living, acting symbols of the four Gentile monarchies, extending to the establishment of the kingdom of the God of heaven, or of the Son of Man.

The metallic image represents the wealth and strength of the four universal empires; hence, the clay is a weakening of the fourth kingdom.

The dream of Daniel vii. brings to view four universal empires and fifteen kingdoms, four arising on the territory of the the third empire, and eleven on that of the fourth empire.

The visions of Daniel ii. and vii. cover the entire Gentile domination, and take in the commencement of the kingdom of God.

The eleventh kingdom of those located on the territory of the fourth monarchy, is a persecutor of the saints. This power arose in the seventh century, and extends to the coming of the Son of Man.

The symbols of the visions of Daniel vii. do not allow us to supply another Gentile kingdom or empire. Four only are destroyed by the stone; and only four empires, with their fifteen lesser kingdoms, are overthrown by the Son of Man in the final conflict.

Attention is called to the fact that, in Daniel's visions kingdoms are delineated more particularly. The civil powers were always agents to persecute and destroy the people of God. They were always visible, while the instigators kept in the dark. This has been especially true as to the Jewish persecutors.

As there may be some doubt relative to Daniel viii. 23 and xi. 36, we omit them from our argument.

In our numbers following we shall compare John's prophetic chieftain with the one we have delineated from history, and close by comparing all the photographs with Paul's man of sin.

End of the World.

Whatever changes may be made or omitted, in the Revised Bible, let us hope that the revisers will agree to give us the correct translation of our Savior's words in Matt. xxiv. 3. The Greek word here translated "world" is aion aion, and refers exclusively to time. The Greek word for the material world is kosmos. In various texts in the New Testament, aion is rendered "age." Eph. ii. 7; iii. 5, 21; Col. i. 26. In the Lord's Prayer, the words rendered "forever," would be literally "to the ages." In Gal. i. 5: "forever and ever," literally "to the ages of the ages." In Heb. i. 2, the last clause should read, "for whom also he arranged the ages," i. e. all the ages, aeons, or dispensations, past, present and in the eternal future, were prearranged by the Creator with reference to the kingdom of his Son. And the test of loyalty to God, for all intelligent beings, is obedience to his Son, "that all should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father." Matt. xii. 32. "Neither in this age, nor in the future one," i. e. the Millennium.

The disciples, on Mount Olive, asked three questions: "What signs should herald the approaching destruction of Jerusalem; the return of Christ; and the end of the age," (aion,) the age of Gentile supremacy, during which the Gentiles should tread Jerusalem under foot and during which this gospel of the kingdom (vs. 14) should be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then should the end (of the age) come, when the kingdom should be restored unto Israel. See Acts i. 6, 7. Of this we have abundant evidence in the manifold promises in the Old and New Testaments, the marvelous preservation of the scattered Hebrew nations, their constant expectation and prayers for a national restoration, and the evident preparation for it, in the establishment of an English protectorate over Palestine, through the influence of the Jew, Beaconsfield, Prime Minister of Great Britain, and the many improvements in progress in Palestine for the benefit of the numerous Jews already gathered there; about 12,000 at Jerusalem, and 40,000 in all Palestine.

It is even now said, that the Rothschilds and others in England have bought Palestine as a home for the Jews.

Truly, "the end of the age" draweth very nigh.

"What shall be the sign of * * * the end of the age? (aion.) Matt. xxiv. 3.

"The field is the world," (kosmos.) "The harvest is the end of the age," (aion.) So shall it be in the end of the age (aion.) Matt. xiii. 38–40. "Now once in the end of the ages (aion,) hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Heb. ix. 26. In the same verse, last clause, we read "the foundation of the world," (kosmos.) Whether the earth will ever come to an end or not, the end of the present dispensation or age will not be the end of the world.

This is Progress.

It is stated that of the six members of the new Cabinet of France five are Protestants!

Wonderful change! The world does move. This is progress. It is not to be expected or desired that religious prejudices or opinions should enter into politics to the wrong of any class of good citizens. The disseverance of church and state ought to be actual and in good faith. But it is for gratitude and rejoicing when we remember that the Pope and the Emperor were the conspirators against the liberties of France and Italy, that the power is gone from the Vatican and the Tuileries. Pius IX. is dead; Louis Napoleon is dead. Protestantism is dominant in France. The Pope is a cipher in Italy and its King receives the Evangelical Alliance in the Quirinal! "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

What God is in all the fulness of his being no man can know.

Irving: A sharp tongue is the only edged tool that grows keener with constant use.

A beautiful smile is to the female countenance what the sunbeam is to the landscape; it embellishes an inferior face, and redeems an ugly one.

Rev. Phillips Brooks: No man has come to true greatness who has not felt in some degree that his life belongs to his race, and that what God gives him he gives him for mankind.

Rev. Phillips Brooks: It is good for us to think no grace or blessing truly ours till we are aware that God has blessed some one else with it through us.

More holiness give me,
More meekness within;
More patience in suffering,
More sorrow for sin:
More faith in my Savior,
More sense of his care;
More joy in his service,
More power in prayer.

To ruminate upon evils, to make critical notes upon injuries, and be too acute in their apprehensions, is to add unto our own tortures, to feather the arrows of our enemies, to lash ourselves with the scorpions of our foes, and to resolve to sleep no more.

How sour sweet music is
When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
So is it in the music of men's lives.
—Shakespeare.

Arnot: The resurrection of the dead in general and the resurrection of Christ in particular are bound up together. To deny the possibility of a resurrection involves the rejection of Christ.

Care is the lot of life, and he that aspires to greatness or high positions in the hope of getting rid of it, is like one who throws himself into a furnace to avoid the shiverings of an ague.

Where the cross of anguish stood,
Where his life distilled in blood,
Where he spent his dying groan,
Where he'll plant his kingly throne

George Eliot: O the anguish of that thought, that we can never atone to our dead for the stinted affection we gave them, for the light answers we returned to their plaints or their pleadings, for the little reverence we showed to that sacred human soul that lived so close us, and was the divinest thing that God has given us to know!

Remember that gentle words will soften the heart, and in after years, when thou shalt be gone, they will linger around it, and be a shield to guard it against temptation. It is the kind word that memory twines around our hearts and guards them with care.

But leaves the greenest will decay,
And flowers the brightest fade away,
When autumn winds are sweeping;
And be the household e'er so fair,
The hand of death will soon be there,
And turn the scene to weeping.

Be a working Christian or you will be a worthless one. Christ's design and desire in saving you was to save others through you. Work not to get saved, but because you are saved. Your personal piety needs exercise and airing. Thank God that religion makes you useful. Golden opportunities are within your reach on every hand.

A man in a blouse once said: "I have no more influence than a farthing rushlight." "Well," was the reply, "a farthing rushlight can do a good deal. It can set a haystack on fire; it can burn down a house; yes, more, it will enable a poor creature to read a chapter in God's book. Go your way, friend, and let your farthing rushlight so shine before men, that others, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father which is in heaven."

THE BIBLE OUR BOOK.

As the mariner uses the compass by which he steers, as the captain of a vessel uses his sextant to ascertain his exact position when at sea, and a pilot uses his chart to guide the vessel so that the shoals and rocks may be avoided, so should we use the Word of God—the Holy Bible. Amid the strife of tongues, the clash of creeds, the collision of interests, and the Babel of sounds, which would bewilder our souls, let us listen to the still, small voice of God speaking authoritatively and distinctly in tones of mercy and love the word of life. If we wish to escape the phosphoric vapors arising from the deadly marshes and swamps of infidelity, or popery and priestism, we must study prayerfully, constantly, intelligently, the Word of God—the Scriptures—the light of life—for they speak of Christ.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 5, 1879.

WE tender our thanks to friends who send us papers and pamphlets from time to time with the assurance that all such favors are appreciated.

WE have more manuscript matter on hand than we can dispose of for weeks to come. Some articles have to be copied and such are very likely to be delayed.

MANY of our subscribers are renewing where subscriptions are expiring or getting some months in arrears. Some add to the Relief Fund from time to time. It is only by promptness in renewing and a measure of sacrifice that many religious papers are sustained, and THE RESTITUTION is no exception. Its prosperity depends on its patrons.

WE received the following item in a recent letter from Brother S. Russell, of Palmyra, Ont., which he had clipped from some late paper. It is interesting indeed, as, in part, a solution of the Eastern Question. This question will only be completely solved "When the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously":

Leading Jews in Great Britain have purchased Palestine. The secretary of the association, which is backed up by the Rothschilds and other financiers, announces that the undertaking meets generally with the approval of the Jews of the whole world. The plain of Philistia is its best part, the soil being of rich brown loam, without a stone. It is now, as it has always been, a vast grain field—an ocean of wheat without a break or fence. Its extraordinary fertility is shown by the fact that it has produced the same succession of crops year after year for forty centuries without artificial aid.

The long period of treading the sanctuary and the host under foot expires within the next few years, and though, in the transition state, the time of Jacob's trouble may be so severe that his face may wax pale once more, yet the Lord will soon "cause them that come of Jacob to take root: for Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." The grand crisis of history is just at the door.

WE give the following letter, noticing a work on "Anglo Israel," a place most cheerfully. Although we have never read very extensively on the affirmative of this question, still what we have read has impressed us much with the plausibility of the theory that the Anglo-Saxons may be the lineal descendants of Ephraim, and, therefore, be Jacob's posterity. Though the question is, as yet, an open one with us, we read articles written in its favor with more than ordinary interest:

"ANGLO-ISRAEL."

We have just received from the publishers, Bengough Brothers, Toronto, the advance sheets of a new work, eighty-two pages, octavo, entitled, "Anglo Israel; or, the British Nation the Lost Tribes of Israel," by Rev. W. H. Poole. This little work evinces years of patient study, and contains an amount of information, on the subject of which it treats, seldom found within the same compass. Some of the authors to whom the writer makes reference are, Sharon Turner, John Wilson, William Carpenter, Edward Hine, Harrison Oxley, Rev. F. R. A. Glover, M. A., Dr. W. H. Yates, Bishop Titcomb, Major H. A. Tracy, R. A., Lieut. Col. Vallency, LL. D., Rev. Canon Brownrigg, Rev. B. W. Savile, M. A., Sir Walter Elliott, K. C. S. I., Prof. C. Piazzi Smyth, F. R. S. Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, Dr. Brunnow, Astronomer-Royal for Ireland. The Rev. Mr. Poole is an able lecturer and has delivered addresses to large audiences in various parts of Ontario, on the subject treated in this pamphlet. "The Anglo-Israel theory," as it is called, is now attracting much attention throughout England, Ireland, Scotland, Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, the United States and Canada, while many officers and privates in the British army and navy, as well as a host of sailors, including many captains, and other officers, who are God-fearing men, are spreading this view to the ends of the earth.

SELECTIONS.

(New York Observer.)

HISTORY OF THE PLAGUE:—BLACK DEATH, OR THE SCOURGE OF GOD.

Its Origin—Ravages in Ages Past—War and Pestilence—Its Present Progress—Measures to Stay It—Prospects of Its Coming.

A good deal of alarm is spreading through Germany and Austria, owing to the devastations made by the plague in the districts of the lower Volga. When, in the summer of 1877, Turkey, in her need of further troops, resolved to bring into Europe soldiers from Syria and Asia Minor, a cry of displeasure was raised against this thoughout Europe, for it was seen that the most terrible of all pestilences might thus be brought over from Asia. But it was never thought of then that it might just as easily be carried over by the Russians who had penetrated into Asia Minor. It is supposed by many that these have really brought back this scourge with them into Europe, and that it has thus, since November last, been raging in several districts of the government of Astrachan, and even beyond. Astrachan lies at the mouth of the Volga, on the Caspian sea, and it appears that the plague has reached not only the cities of Sarepta and Zaraizyn, but also the important trading towns, Saratow and Nischnei-nowgorod. It has thus penetrated far up the Volga. Appearing as the outbreak does so soon after the Russo-Turkish war, it is excusable if most believe that it has been imported from Asia Minor. That is also the official statement of Russia. But it now appears to be a mistake. On most occasions it has been imported from the East, but this time it has had its origin in the dirt and filth in which the nomadic tribes live which are subject to the Czar east of the Volga, along the Caspian sea. That the war did not cause it might be inferred from the fact that not even on the great battle fields, where so many thousands are now mouldering, has any trace of it as yet appeared.

But not only concerning the origin of this disease did Russia give a misleading report, but also concerning its nature. It is a fact that since 1877 it has been in southeast Russia. But its appearance was in part disregarded and in part kept a secret, and then, when it could not any longer be doubted, many wanted to prove that the epidemic was not really the historically terrible plague. But this also is now admitted. On the 23d of this month, Prof. Botkin, the distinguished Russian practitioner and physician to the Emperor, delivered, before the practising physicians of St. Petersburg and a select audience, a lecture on the present epidemic, in which he plainly called it the plague, or, as the people say, the black death and the scourge of God. It is the same as that which went through the length and breadth of Europe in the fourteenth century. Many think that we are already in the midst of a new plague era, which began in 1857. The present epidemic is characterized by great mortality. It may be said that one hundred per cent. die, that is, every attack proves fatal. There are no means found of resisting it. The dead lie on the open streets with none to bury them. Death takes place often a few minutes after the commencement of the illness. The infectiousness of the disease is said to be very great. Contact with the clothes of the diseased suffices to communicate it. Other accounts, however, question this great mortality.

The plague is, if not the oldest, at least the most terrible kind of pestilence that we are acquainted with. All the wars of Napoleon, extending over such a number of years, did not carry away as many victims as one of the visits of the plague in the middle ages, or in more modern times. Leaving out the accounts that appear in the Bible, and looking at profane history alone, the first appearance of the plague is perhaps to be found in the epidemic which raged three years at Athens (B. C. 430-428), although this was local and might have arisen from the city being then so overcrowded, owing to the Peloponnesian war. Just as the delta of the Ganges is the birthplace of the cholera, the delta of the Nile seems to be the home of the plague. An account is given of a great outbreak on the north coast of Africa, B. C. 125. But the commencement of the historical outbreaks of the plague date rather from A. D. 542, when this disease, for the first time perhaps, entered Europe at Constantinople, which city it held in possession, with longer or shorter intervals, for 1300 years, and up till 1841, when the plague was said to have disappeared from the Bosphorus. The terrible outbreak referred to above took place in the reign of the Emperor Justinian, and devastated the whole known world, so that perhaps a fourth of the entire human family died. All the bonds of religion, of society and of the state, appeared to be dissolved. Three times in this reign did it make its appearance, and afterwards continued during the middle ages a regular guest. The epidemics of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and the black death of the fourteenth, shook, in their turn, the whole structure of Christendom to its very foundations, and it seemed as if the world, or rather society, was falling in pieces.

In modern times the plague has desolated just as much as formerly, but superstition does not reign as then, and it was this which clothed the plague with such terror. Whilst real religion, or union and communion with God, strengthens the soul, superstition or intercourse with other real or supposed supernatural powers, has only a desolating effect upon all who cherish it.

The last time that the plague spread over Europe was in 1713. Since then it has appeared at times in Russia, Turkey, and along the Mediterranean, but has not spread over the whole continent. In the first great historical outbreak it spread over the Eastern Roman Empire, also over the Western, and the North of Europe. It appeared in Italy in A. D. 543, Gaul A. D. 655, Germany A. D. 805, and Scandinavia A. D. 580.

The question most anxiously put just now is: Will the plague, in all probability, spread from Russia into Central and Western Europe, and then to countries beyond the seas? Before these lines meet your readers, that question will perhaps not have been already answered by facts. But even should that not be the case it may be of interest to state beforehand the routes which the disease may perhaps take. There are four; or rather they are of four kinds: The first is in the company of those who regularly emigrate from different parts of Europe to Astrachan in order to sell their wares or do ordinary work, in return for which they receive the saffron growing there, which, on their return home, they sell at great advantage. At Vienna it was supposed that the plague would come into Austria by Gallicia, but it has been stated that a great many go every year from Slowakei to Astrachan for the purposes just stated, and these could easily bring it back with them. But this is probably only one of many ways of a similar kind. Another, which is more formidable, is by railway. If the disease should reach Moscow, which is the center of a European network of lines, then its spread would perhaps be certain, and if so, rapid. A third way would be over the Balkan. Russia has still 300,000 soldiers in the Balkan peninsula. Now nearly all supplies come direct from Russia over Roumania. It is said that soldiers have been removed from the infected districts to other parts of the Russian empire. At any rate the constant communication Russia carries on directly with Bulgaria and Roumelia presents a permanent danger of the plague getting westward through Servia into Austria. The fourth way is by sea. Should the disease really reach Odessa or Constantinople, both of which have been (but probably incorrectly) stated to have been already visited by it, then all countries, but especially those of the most extensive commerce, would be in great danger.

The most vigorous measures will be adopted by both Austria and Germany, the countries bordering on Russia, and no doubt the other powers will follow the example of these. Austria has not realized the necessity of action as fully as Germany, but when the time comes Vienna will be in earnest as well as Berlin. Indeed both governments have already agreed as to the general course to be adopted. A commission has been appointed by the federal council to consider what measures should be adopted by Germany. For the present there will be only the prohibition of certain wares being introduced from Russia, such as clothes, bed-clothes, second-hand clothes, furs, skins, etc.

These are looked upon as the most likely to convey the infection. If, however, the vigorous efforts of the Russian government to overcome an epidemic, or at least check its progress, should not succeed, then extreme measures will have to be adopted by Germany. What these would be it is, of course, impossible to say. The following have been spoken of: That a closely connected and sharply drawn military cordon should be established, with the orders absolutely to admit nothing into Germany from Russia, whether persons, animals, or goods, without the necessary security. Germany would, it is said, mobilize at once 80,000 men for this purpose. Wooden quarantine barracks would be erected. Without regard to political eventualities or material disadvantages, the utmost effort would be made to keep out the pestilence. Letters from Russia would be subjected to a heat of 120 degrees before being permitted to pass the frontier. Money coming from Russia would be disinfected. Even the Saropta balsam, produced in Astrachan, and which is held in great esteem in Russia, Germany and Austria, as a preventive of diseases such as cholera, would be subjected to the same procedure. It would be interesting were there not so much at stake, to watch how far this struggle of science with the attempted intrusion or inroad of the plague will be successful.

The quarantine arrangements may lead to fresh political complications. It is demanded by many that Russia should be shut in not only on the side of Germany and of Austria, but also of Roumania. But that would cut off from their supplies the 300,000 Russian troops now in the Balkan peninsula. They could not exist there a month on such conditions. Quite true they are all to be removed in a quarter of a year, according to the Berlin peace. It was, no doubt, a fear lest such an agitation should commence, that led Russia to keep it so long a secret that the plague was doing its deadly work in Europe.

Whilst the struggle of modern science with the plague will be a matter of interest, it would be still more interesting to know how modern Christian and church life will bear the terrible testing. Alas, the history of the plague has too often fulfilled the words found in Rev. xvi. 11: After the pouring out of the fifth vial the people "blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds." Everyone has at such times thought only about himself. Relationship, friendship, order and morality have been forgotten; all pity blunted. As no one was sure of life, most wanted to enjoy the short period at their disposal all the more immoderately; so that alongside of the cries of the dying were heard the wild revelings of the reckless. It is to be hoped that the plague may yet be warded off, and that divine goodness may this time be stronger than divine wrath, and lead to repentance.

PROBABLE POLICY OF THE POPE.

The Recent Revival of Papal Power a Fulfillment of Prophecy—The Loss of Temporal Power has Resulted in an Increase of Spiritual Power—A Probable Change of Front—Ultramontanism the Third of the Unclean Spirits Under the Sixth Vial—Antichrist will Probably Rise in Ultramontane Influences.

Few things have been more surprising than the revival of the power of the Papacy within the last ten years. Shorn of its strength, and apparently doomed to speedy decay, it has nevertheless taken a new lease of life. To the student of prophecy this has not, however, been an unlooked-for event, because a temporary revival of the Papal power, though under singularly altered conditions from the time when Rome dictated her laws to the nations of the earth, has been clearly foretold in the Apocalypse (Rev. xiii. and xvii).

The Papacy dream of universal dominion has been steadily maintained, notwithstanding the loss of its temporal sovereignty over the Eternal City, in 1870, when the Pope became the self-styled "prisoner of the Vatican." The Church of Rome still indulges in visions of the time when the kingdoms of the world shall be brought under her sway.

Strange to relate, the loss of the temporal power has resulted in a vast increase of the spiritual power of the Pope. The power of the Papacy is more unlimited than that of any absolute monarchy. What seemed at first sight an irreparable disaster has been the means of rallying the tens of thousands of spiritual subjects of the Pope around his throne, in a more blind and unreasoning allegiance than ever.

The most striking proof of this autocratic power was afforded at the Vatican Council in 1870. It is well known that an influential minority, of which Bishop Strossmeyer may be regarded as the leader, was strongly opposed to the monstrous dogma of infallibility, then imposed upon the Roman Church; but the remonstrants were not only silenced, but compelled to give in their adesion to a dogma which conscience and reason alike condemned. Never was the right of private judgment so rigorously denied to the subjects of the Church of Rome; never was the spiritual dictatorship of the Papacy so despotic and triumphant.

It is certain that the late Pontiff—whether from the dislike of old age to engage in acrimonious warfare, or perhaps owing to a revival of the liberal spirit that had made the inauguration of his Pontificate so remarkable—desired to relax the fierceness of the conflict he had so long waged with the kingdom of Italy. We do not think that this policy of moderation will be really pursued by Leo XIII., however much it may possibly be professed in honeyed phrases. It is far more likely that the famous "non possumus" of Pius IX. will be repeated in terms of equal, if not increased, hostility.

We must also be prepared before long for a startling change of front in the attitude of the Papacy. In past times it has been allied to governments; it has bestowed its patronage on kings and princes in exchange for the recognition of its spiritual supremacy, and has shown itself the uncompromising foe of democratic aspirations. But its present sore need will make it willing to use any instruments, however ignoble, by which it may regain the sceptre of the world.

Disowned by the Governments of Europe, its Concordats with Austria, and even with Catholic Spain, rescinded, deprived of this auxiliary power of influencing the destinies of the world, it will in due time throw itself into the arms of the people, and strengthen itself by an alliance with democracy. The Scarlet Woman, for a short season just before her destruction, is again to be seated in temporal power upon the seven hills of Rome, and to ride triumphantly upon the crownless red republicanized nations of Cæsar's Roman Empire, represented by scarlet wild beasts with ten uncrowned horns (see Rev. xvii. 3, 9).

The Papacy has ever been ready to adapt itself to altered times and conditions. It can suit itself either to monarchical or republican Governments. A glance at the present state of Europe will find what a formidable weapon it may find in Communism. Every day the power of government is becoming more and more vested in the hands of the people. In every state where free institutions exist there are busy agitators laboring to spread the doctrines of Socialism, Communism, and Internationalism. The dread of Internationalism is the nightmare of politicians. The English Prime Minister long ago sounded the note of warning touching this new cause of danger, and far-seeing statesmen regard it as an omen of grave import to the liberties of Europe.

There is even reason to believe that it was the fear of concerted action between the Catholics of South Germany and the Ultra-Radical party, leagued together by a community of interest, that induced Prince Bismarck to withdraw, in a great measure, from his memorable struggle with the Papal See. His present policy may delay for a while, but cannot ultimately prevent, the realization of his fears; the separation of the South German States from Bismarck's German empire being a necessity for the complete reconstitution of the ten kingdoms of Cæsar's Roman Empire.

The dethroned Babylonish queen of nations, in her extremity, will ally herself with the despised populaces, and ride back again to power on the shoulders of Revolution and Demagogism, as foreshown in the expositions of Mr. Hyslop, Mr. Jenour, and other writers upon Revelations xvii.

Ultramontanism, or Popish fanaticism, together with Mohammedan fanaticism, is clearly the third of the unclean spirits which are predicted to gather the nations to war during the sixth vial, under which we are now living. The sixth vial is drying up the Euphrates or Turkish Empire in order that the way may be prepared for the return of the Jews to Palestine.

It will be by Ultramontane and Democratic influences that the predicted Napoleonic Antichrist will presently rise to this predestined universal dominion (Rev. xiii. 3, 7), and the next ten or fifteen years will probably witness all these and other concluding events of this dispensation connected with the second coming of Christ.

Casting a mighty spell over the minds of the nations by lying witchcrafts, and sorceries, and miracles, wrought through Satanic agency, the Church of Rome under her final Pontiff (who will most probably be a more active man than Leo XIII., who is sixty-eight years old) will seem at last to have reached the summit of her ambition—universal dominion. But in the midst of her exaltation, while she exclaims, "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow," and exalts herself boastfully over the nations, shall sudden destruction come upon her, and her power shall be utterly cast down. "In one day shall her plagues come upon her," and her kingdom be broken, so that it shall be found no more forever. Then shall he come "whose right it is to reign,"—the Sovereign Prince of Peace,—and "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." "Even so, come, Lord Jesus!"

It is asserted that from the summit of Mount Etna the circle of vision has the enormous radius of 150.7 miles. The habitable zone of the mountain is very fertile, and sustains a dense population —1,424 to the square mile. Rodwell says the gigantic chestnut trees of Carbinello are no myths, but sober realities. He asserts that the diameter of the trunk of one of them is twenty-five feet, and that a public road passes through the much-decayed trunk of the largest, Castagno di Cento Cavalli.

Louis Kossuth, who still lives in Turin, is described as quite feeble and having aged materially within a few years. He is now 76, and though for some time in delicate health, his mind is as vigorous as ever. The stories of his penury are said to have been somewhat exaggerated, albeit he is compelled to live very meagerly, which is no hardship as he has very simple tastes. He does not complain; indeed, he makes no reference to his poverty, which has been relieved, it is thought, by contributions from admirers in England, France and America. He has been invited to return to Hungary, but he has steadily refused, believing that the Hungarians have not yet gained their rights.

California is a land of wonders. There are fresh flowers every month in the year, and winter wears the bloom of spring. There are waterfalls three or four times as high as Niagara; natural bridges of white marble; some thousand of gold bearing veins; inexhaustible quantities of iron and chrome, cresleud, bismuth and quicksilver; most beautiful porcelain clay; and in short everything that can bless an enterprising people. In one valley were found more than forty springs over one hundred degrees Fahrenheit. In another valley, sixteen geysers, like the famous one in Iceland. In this famous abode of Vulcan the rocks are so hot that you can stand upon them but a short time, even with thick boots on. The roar of the geysers at times may be heard a mile or more, and the moment is one of the most intense interest as you approach them.

The Rev. J. A. Annin, a protestant preacher in New Mexico, was sent for, and rode on horseback eighty miles, to marry two couples. He writes:

"At service in connection with the marriage ceremony there must have been sixty or seventy present—a Protestant minister was no doubt a new thing to many of them, probably most of them had never seen one before. The parish priest, within whose jurisdiction the village lay, was on hand when I arrived, with a letter addressed to the father of the young ladies, remonstrating against the horrible enormity of permitting a Protestant to solemnize the marriage of his daughters."

BIBLE SOCIETY STATISTICS.

During the past year the American and British and Foreign Bible Societies have issued 3,850,376 copies of the Scriptures, an increase of nearly 300,000 over the previous year. The two societies also sent out the Bible, in whole or in part, in 64 new translations. In Russia 740,023 volumes, in 60 different languages, were distributed; and in Turkey 64,608 volumes, in nine languages. Following are the figures of the distribution carried on by the two societies in Roman Catholic countries and heathen lands: India, 343,610 volumes; China, 150,103; Japan, 61,398; Italy, 62,826; France, 133,160; Servia and Roumania, 128,170; Spain, 85,393; Austria, 274,502; Germany, 408,105; South America, 35,318; Mexico, about 30,000.

POETRY.

Humility.

JAMES MONTGOMERY.

The bird that soars on highest wing
Builds on the ground her lowly nest;
And she that doth most sweetly sing,
Sings in the shade, when all things rest;
In lark and nightingale we see
What honor hath humility.

When Mary chose "the better part,"
She meekly sat at Jesus' feet;
And Lydia's early opened heart
Was made for God's own temple meet;
Fairest and best adorn'd is she
Whose clothing is humility.

The saint that wears heaven's brightest crown
In deepest adoration bends;
The weight of glory bows him down
Then most, when most his soul ascends;
Nor set the throne itself must he
The foot-stool of humility.

The Manner of Christ's Second Coming.

Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame. Rev. xvi. 15.

This language occurs under the pouring out of the sixth vial, and is near the last, or the very dregs of the vial. The vials, seals and trumpets designate, or symbolize a portion of time in which the things symbolized will occur or be fulfilled.

The important question is, have these momentous events transpired in part, or as a whole, as Bro. Larkins affirms, not at all, but are yet in the future? If the prophetic periods, the trumpets, the seals, and the vials, are all to be fulfilled in the future, then indeed, one of two things must inevitably be the result: events will be fulfilled with the rapidity of the lightning, or the fulfillment of our text will be a long way in the future. These are momentous questions and should be discussed with candor, with ability, and intelligence.

We respectfully ask our ablest writers for THE RESTITUTION to ventilate this subject fully, and give the household of faith the benefit of their researches and expositions.

The manner of Christ's second coming, when properly understood, has much to do with events that are connected with his second advent into the whole world.

A few preliminaries before entering upon an exposition of the subject under consideration. First, in speaking or writing for the public we do not pretend to say all of what we advance or give to the public is original, yet we may fail to give credit where it is justly due. We do not hold or believe that a man because he has in after life departed from first principles and embraced even fundamental errors, that he never did or could have held and published truths that were essential. Hence the subject of the Manner of Christ's Second Coming we have studied for many years, and we have received much help from the published writings of able and approved authors. Let this admission be borne in mind, This is sufficient without naming the authors or their works. We deem the manner of Christ's coming second only to that of his literal personal coming, to judge and rule the world in righteousness.

Many years ago this subject was published by Bro. B. Wilson in the Gospel Banner. A while after we, in our weak way, wrote an article on the subject. It was published in the Harbinger—no one criticised or alluded to it. The unintelligent notions of the second Adventist seem to have prevailed, viz: That because he ascended from Mount Olivet of necessity that must be the very identical spot or locality where he with his bride first touches terra firma. We hope to make this point clear, and backed by many positive declarations of the word of God. We have always been suspicious of theories that ignore the plain word of God. Hence after our long research and study we are able to make the utterances of the Spirit harmonize most admirably. We do not profess to be a critical writer or debater. Our fort is to accept the plain teaching of the Bible which with us is the end of all controversy. We shall accept and carefully weigh any criticism that has the appearance of candor or intelligence. Our object is to give and get light.

Our first statement is that the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven to gather his elect, and his public appearing with his Bride the Church are two distinct events, separated by an interval of time, the exact length we are not able to state: if it is revealed it has not been brought to our understanding, but it will be characterized by God's majesty, power and glory in the execution of the judgments written far above and beyond our ablest conception, a time of trouble such as there never was since there was a nation upon the earth. Dan xii. 1. "Behold," (this expression invariably directs the mind to something of extraordinary interest,) "I come as a thief." There is no difference of belief as to who the personal pronoun "I" means or refers to; it is the same one who said, "I go and prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am you may be also." John xiv. 1, "as a thief," The first evidence we have that a thief has been committing depredations upon our premises is our property is gone: silently, stealthily, unobserved and most generally in the night. The Lord himself shall descend from heaven (where to?) to or in the clouds of heaven, the atmospheric regions of our earth. This agrees with our Savior's own declaration: Hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.

Daniel sees one like the Son of Man come in the clouds of heaven to the Ancient days &c; the air is the locality or place of gathering from which he sends out his angels and gathers his elect. We will quote the whole passage: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord; 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. This harmonizes with our Lord's teaching. Luke xvii. 34. "I tell you in that night there shall be two men in one bed, the one shall be taken, the other shall be left. Two women shall be grinding together, the one shall be taken and the other left. Two men shall be in the field, one shall be taken and the other left." Taken from the common avocations of life, whereto? Just where Paul says, viz: to meet the Lord in the air. So shall we ever be with the Lord; not that the saints will forever remain in the air or the clouds of heaven, or even for one thousand years, as some have supposed.

Such views are out of harmony with much of the Scriptures. The rapture or translation of the saints at the coming of Christ, involves many essential truths of deep and profound interest. Self-preservation is the first law in nature. Are we ready? It will be sudden, silent, unexpected (by the outer world), in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. 1 Cor. xv. 45–47; also verses 51–55. No chance for a mortal resurrection and a great assize and trial of men in the flesh, after the fashion of our courts of judicature. This is one of the saddest mistakes poor mortal man ever made. Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God. Matt. v. 8. If none but the pure in heart are translated, I fear the company will be small. We cannot carry our gold with us, no stains of fraud, or sharp practice or dishonest dealing, nor slander or watching for evil, nor those that defile the temple of God with alcohol, or the filthy use of tobacco! Remember, he that hath clean hands and a pure heart will enter into the hill of the Lord.

NEWELL BOND.

To Overcome.

What are we to overcome? All things that pertain to the flesh. Our blessed Savior said, "He that overcometh, to him will I grant to sit down on my Father's throne, as I have overcome and am set down on my Father's throne." Cheering thought! Precious promise! If, then, we are persecuted and scoffed at because of the belief of the glorious gospel of the kingdom, let us bear it with patience, showing that by the love of God shed abroad in our hearts we may overcome, through trust in him.

Brethren, avenge not yourselves, for "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord."

But is there anything greater to overcome than ourselves? Surely not. Each day, each hour, each moment, we have to keep watch over our thoughts, our words, our actions, for when we would do good, evil is present with us ....but if we walk in the straight and narrow way, neither turning to the right or to the left, pressing forward to the mark of the prize of our high calling which is in Christ Jesus, we shall be more than conquerors, and shall have overcome, having a right to an entrance into the kingdom of God, being an heir, with his Son, of the promised possession. To this end may we all look forward, that we may see the King in his beauty, and enjoy his presence forevermore.

"Things that Cannot be Shaken."

And this word yet once more signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken as things that are made that those things which cannot be shaken remain.

The Apostle Peter refers us to the epistle of Paul the Apostle who in speaking of these things, were some things hard to be understood. The humiliation and glorious reign of the Messiah to a Jewish mind is an example. If they had believed all that the prophets had spoken they would have believed in the humiliation as well as the glorious reign.

The same trouble exists in the Gentile church to-day.

Let us settle it in our minds, there is room for all to be fulfilled.

The kingdom cannot be moved.

"Wherefore we are receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved."

Mount Zion cannot be moved, but abideth forever. Psa. cxxv.

The Mount of Olives shall be moved.

The Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north and half of it towards the south. The flood in the days of Noah did not make a break in the genealogy of the Messianic of the race.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Ed. Restitution:—With your permission I will make a few remarks through THE RESTITUTION, in reply to some of the conclusions drawn by Philos, in the article concerning Judas and the Lord's Supper, published in THE RESTITUTION of January 1st. In his summary he says: We see that the supper recorded in John xiii. when Jesus washed his disciples' feet, was not the passover, but simply a common meal eaten at the house of Simon the leper in the town of Bethany, from which point Judas after receiving the sop from the Savior's hand went to the chief priests and made a bargain with them to betray his Lord unto them.

From this conclusion I must dissent from the fact that the records all show that the sop was given to Judas at the passover supper in Jerusalem, and not in Bethany; and now to the evidence. Matt. xxvi. 18. And he said, go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, my time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples. Verse 19 and they made ready the passover. Verses 20–23. Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve. And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me. And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto him, Lord, is it I? And he answered and said, He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me. Verse 25. Then Judas, which had betrayed him, answered and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, Thou hast said. We find in connection the institution of the communion. Mark's record is in nearly the same words;—xiv.—12–16, is the record of the preparation of the passover, verses 17–20 as follows: And in the evening he cometh with the twelve, and as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, one of you which eateth with me shall betray me. And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I? and he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the dish. In connection is recorded the communion. In the record given by Luke xxii, 8–11 we have the same account of the preparation and also in connection, the institution of the communion. Verse 21: But behold the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table.

We will now notice the supper recorded by John in Chap. xiii. which Philos claims to be the supper eaten in Bethany. In John xii. 1, 2, we read of the supper made for him in Bethany. Verse 12: On the next day much people that were come to the feast when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem, took branches of palm trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, Hosanna; blessed is the king of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord. That he went to Jerusalem at that time, I presume no one will gainsay and that it was the next day after the supper in Bethany. John xiii. 1, 2. Now before the feast of the passover, when Jesus know that his hour was come that he should depart out of the world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end. And supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him (verses 4 5), he riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself. After that he poureth water into a basin, and began to wash the disciples' feet and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded. By reading the record to verse 11, we find the objection made by Simon Peter, and the Savior's answer stating that they were not all clean; in verse 11 begins the reason. For he knew who should betray him; therefore said he, Ye are not all clean. Verse 12. So after he had washed their feet and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you? We will pass to the last clause of the 18th verse. The Savior says, He that eateth bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me. From verses 21–27 we find the record of the sop being given. When Jesus had thus said, he was troubled in spirit, and testified and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me. Then the disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he spake. Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved. Simon Peter therefore beckoned to him that he should ask who it should be of whom he spake. He then lying on Jesus' breast saith unto him: Lord, who is it? Jesus answered, He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon. And after the sop satan entered into him. Then said Jesus unto him, That which thou doest, do quickly. Now will Philos answer one or two questions:

1. Was there any one save Jesus and the twelve disciples present when Jesus washed their feet or at the giving of the sop?

2. Could Judas, although he sought to betray his Lord, do so before the time, or before Jesus' hour had come?

We will now notice another point of evidence in which all four of the evangelists give the same testimony, viz: the reply of Jesus to Peter's statement that he would not deny his Lord. Matt. xxvi. 34. Jesus said unto him, Verily, I say unto thee, that this night before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice.

Mark xiv. 30. And Jesus said unto him, Verily, I say unto thee, that this day, even in this night, before the cock crows twice, thou shalt deny me thrice.

Luke xxii. 34. And he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day; before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me.

We find the above record is after the institution of the memorial supper.

Now to John xiii. 38. Jesus answered him (Peter), Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake? Verily, verily, I say unto thee, the cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied me thrice.

Now, will Philos please show any evidence that the record given by John xiii. 1–38, concerning the supper, feet washing, the giving of the sop, and the reply of Jesus to Peter, did not take place at one and the same time? If he cannot, his assertion must fall.

We will not intrude further upon your valuable time, but will say from the evidence:

1. That the sop was given to Judas at the institution of the passover supper in Jerusalem, and not at Bethany.

2. The supper recorded by John was the passover or memorial supper.

3. That feet washing is in connection with that supper.

4. That Judas could not betray his Lord, although he sought to do so, till the hour of Jesus had come, and his command to Judas, What thou doest, do quickly.

We have omitted much for the sake of brevity, and would say in conclusion, let us try to hold fast the form of sound words.

Respectfully submitted. Your brother in Gospel hope.

LETTER DRAWER.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—It is with a sad heart I write these few lines to you all to let you know my destitute circumstances. Two of my children are very sick, and I have nothing to give them but bread and water. I am without shoes, and very destitute of clothing. Times are hard for the poor. I hope God may bless the fatherless. It is hard to hear the children cry for something to eat when one has nothing to give them. I hope the brethren who are able will render me some assistance. I would rather give than receive were it in my power. Please give these few lines a place in THE RESTITUTION.

Your sister, waiting for the kingdom, MATILDA LOVEWELL.

Pleasanton, Kansas.

We have been subjected to some complaint on the ground of tardiness in inserting some calls for relief. We may have been blame-worthy, but did all our brethren and sisters know the difficulties that beset an editor in endeavoring to do right by all parties, perhaps our delay, in certain instances, might be excusable. We have reason to believe that the few appeals we have admitted of late were from those worthy of sympathy and assistance, and accordingly have done a little for ourself. The above, from Sister Lovewell, we believe brings a case before our readers worthy of their sympathy.

NEWS ITEMS.

ROME, Feb. 27.—The great storm of Monday night was most disastrous. The whole coast is strewn with wrecks, and at many ports small craft were blown out to sea and lost. The new quay at Positippo was almost entirely destroyed. In the interior the storm was equally violent. At Pouggiuolo, near Siena, the campanile of the church was blown down while the people were at mass, killing two persons at the altar, and three other persons, and wounding twenty-four persons. A similar catastrophe occurred at Aontauro, where the vault of the church yielded to the force of the storm, and killed the priest celebrating mass, and injured a number of the congregation. At Rome the force of the wind was unparalleled. All of the windows of the monastery of Montealle Croci were destroyed, and a portion of the base of Michael Angelo's statue of David was swept of.

BERLIN, Feb. 28.—Channel storms and snow drifts on the continent practically prevent postal communication with England.

The mayor of Sheffield states that in one district of that place there are 4,000 persons destitute and 400 families actually starving. The relief fund, except about £300, has been expended.

DIED.

MANN—At Crawfordsville, Ind., Feb. 19, 1878, of heart disease of inflammation of the heart, J. B. Mann.

He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss, and the Church of God to which he belonged has lost a worthy member. Brother Mann was deeply interested in the truth for some time before he obeyed it. Last June during a meeting held by Bro. Stephenson and H. V. Reed, he arose and made a bold confession before a large audience on the 20th of the month. He was immersed the next day by A. Stephenson into Christ. Since that time he has lived a devoted Christian life. His brethren J. W. Mann, of Knightstown, Ind., and C. W. Mann, of Shelbyville, Rutland county, O., also Mrs. Mann's mother, Mrs. H. Orton, of Shelbyville, O., were present. Words of comfort were given by the writer from I Thess. iv. 13–18. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him," also II Tim. xiii. 11, "Shall I hold a stake from heaven rejoice unto me, Write: Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

The burial was in the cemetery by the brethren and sisters were:

First.

Sleeping! thou art sweetly sleeping,
Free from pain and toil and strife;
In meek humility, how meek thou
Manifest in the above of prayer.

Thou will sleep, but not forever;
Jesus died, and rose again;
So he'll come in clouds of glory,
Then will rise with him to reign.

Second.

We shall sleep but not forever,
There will be a glorious dawn;
We shall meet to part no never,
On the resurrection morn.

He was taken to Hillsdale by his friends for burial, to sleep until the resurrection morn.

J. S. MATCH.

BYRNES—Near South Whitley, Ind., Feb 23, 1878, Sister Rose Stevens aged thirty-one years, (6 months and ten days, after an illness of some five weeks of typhoid pneumonia, which she bore with Christian fortitude.

Sister Stevens was immersed in Del river last summer by Brother Wilson, and obtained her profession in the Holy Name she lived adorned by a proper walk and conversation. For some years her general health has been rather poor, and those attending her in her illness say that she died rejoicing. We trust she sleeps in Jesus, resting a prisoner of hope until the voice of the archangel, with the trump of God, shall unlock the portals of the tomb and the saints of all ages with their Lord in glory. The funeral was attended by the writer who spoke from I Cor. xv. 55, to the respectful and attentive audience. WM. T. GIVENS.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BY CURTISS.

A discussion will take place at Gifford Station six miles south of Eldora, on the Central R. R. of Iowa, "Is the Scriptures teach that unconverted to have a conscious existence at death?" Affirmative: J. W. Haughawout; negative: E. P. Barker. Discussion to commence at 7 o'clock, p. m., March 5, 1878. Persons desiring to attend will receive free entertainment by the brethren in the vicinity. J. M. HARLAN. J. B. HAUGHAWOUT.

I wish to say to the brethren in Kansas and Missouri that their invitations are received. I will not be able to start on my tour before the last of May, but will notify them in time to make arrangements. J. M. STEPHENSON.

NOTICE.

Should any of the "true Faith" be in need of a hand on a farm or in a market garden, I will be glad to hire to such, as I would be very pleasant and agreeable to work for one of like faith.

Address J. M. ALBERT,
Yarrogil, Iowa.

I will visit for the purpose of holding meetings and in the interest of THE RESTITUTION soliciting renewals and new subscriptions, Havana, Mercer county, Mo., April 1st to 15th; St. Joseph, Mo., at sister M. Rock's may arrange. April 15th to 25th; Severance, Kansas, April 26th to 30th; Morrill, Kansas, at brother Taylor's may arrange, April 30th to May 6th; Blue Springs, Nebraska, at brother J. F. Clark may arrange, May 6th to 12th; and from May 13th to June 1st to points in Kansas as arrangements may be made. Would like to hear from Marysville south by the way of Manhattan and Emporia, to Williamsburg. Brethren desiring that I be desiring a visit will correspond with me at any of the above named points, or at home—Bella Plaine, Iowa—for the next thirty days. C. M. MYERS.

POETRY.

Lines.

L. M. BURGESS.

The harvest is ripe and the sun is uprising,
Clear dawns the day, go we forth to the field;
Work while we may for the moments are flying,
The promise morn gives us may soon be repelled.

Thus hath He bidden us, to work while we're waiting,
To waste not the talents that He hath bestowed;
To him that hath much there shall much more be given,
And the reaper shall gather just what he has sowed.

Soon life day will be past—soon his summer be ended;
The day of His grace cannot linger for'er—
Haste now, for the sun in the west is declining,
And the step of the Master ere long we shall hear.

And oh, may our sheaves be all ready and waiting,
Our lamps be all trimmed and our hearts all alone;
When He knocks at the door be we ready to open
And greet him therein but one word—His dear name.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Priceless Truth.

Search the Scriptures. John v. 39.

Had the Jews heeded the above admonition of Christ, they would have realized their hope of eternal life. (In the world to come, Mark x. 28-30; not, however, through the righteousness which is of the law, but through the righteousness which is of faith. Rom. vi. 23; x. 1-13. Had they searched the Old Testament Scriptures they would have discovered the truthfulness of Christ's words: "They . . . testify of me." Deut. xv. 15, 18, 19. Psa. xvi. 9-11. Some do not receive Christ as their immortal Messiah. They say the thought is selfish. Heb. iv. 1-3. For many centuries they have witnessed the fatal fruit of unbelief and disobedience. Deut. xxviii. 15-68. The lesson is plain. We should beware lest we fall after the same example of unbelief. Heb. iv. 11; iii. 12.

As we proceed with our comparison between truth and error, let us bear in mind the sin of unbelief, together with its terrible results. Concerning the reign, nature, and destiny of man, there are many vague speculations indulged in at the present day. Some even carry their speculations so far as to suppose that man originated from the lower order of animals! They conclude that he has reached his present state of perfection through the eternal law of progression! Another class think man's origin will never be definitely known, as they suppose he pre-existed! Still, others think that man was created without a Creator! or, in other words, that he came into existence by chance!

Now, by comparing these conflicting and erroneous theories with the Word of God, (the counterfeit detector,) you will discover their utter falsity. Man did not pre-exist, for he was created out of the dust of the ground. Gen. ii. 7. God made the earth and created man upon it. Isa. xiv. 12. Hence, man did not pre-exist, neither was he created by blind chance, for God formed him, and that, too, after he had made the earth. He originated in the mind of God, who made him of the dust of the ground. Gen. i. 26; ii. 7; iii. 17-19; Psa. civ. 4. He is of the earth, earthy. 1 Cor. xv. 45-47. In the light of the above testimony, I think it safe to assert, that man can claim a higher origin than that of frog spawn! Avoid the oppositions of science, falsely so-called. 1 Tim. vi. 20.

There is as much diversity of opinion concerning man's nature as there is concerning his origin. The most generally received opinion, however, is that man possesses a deathless nature, or, in other words, that he is immortal. This is the prevalent and popular opinion. Although the notion is popular, it is not true. It is just as false to-day as it was when uttered in the garden of Eden six thousand years ago! Gen. iii. 1-4; John viii. 44.

Man's nature is largely indicated by his earthly origin. "The Hebrew word, Adam, which signifies a man of earth, is translated man and men over two hundred times. These two hundred occurrences of Adam, which signifies 'man of earth,' relate to the intelligent, thinking, responsible man. Thus proving that the intelligent man had his origin in dust, and is therefore mortal, and must return to dust again." The Bible speaks of man as a mortal, corruptible, perishable being. Job iv. 17; Rom. i. 23; John iii. 14-16.

"The term enosh ('mortal man') occurs forty-two times, where it is translated man and men. Suppose that these forty-two occurrences—every one of which relates to the intelligent, responsible man—had been translated 'mortal man' or 'mortal men,' how much different the Bible would read." We will refer the reader to the texts where the word enosh is translated man and men. Judges ix. 6, 13; Job iv. 17; v. 17; vii. 1, 17; ix. 2; x. 4-6; xiii. 9; xxv. 4, 6; xxxii. 8; xxxiii. 12; Psa. viii. 4; ix. 19; x. 18; lv. 13; xc. 3; civ. 15; cxliv. 3; Dan. iii. 10; iv. 13; vi. 7, 12; vii. 4; Gen. vi. 6; Isa. xiii. 7, 12; xxiii. 8; li. 7, 12; lvi. 2; Deut. xxxii. 26; Job xxviii. 4; Psa. ix. 20; lxxiii. 5. What an array of testimony in favor of the mortality of man. Surely, if all these texts had been properly translated, immortal soulism never would have appealed to the Bible for support." God's Plan of Salvation, p. 143.

It is claimed that man possesses a deathless soul which resides in the physical organism. This, however, is a sheer assumption. The physical man is the living soul, according to Bible testimony. Gen. ii. 7; compare Matt. xvi. 26 with Luke ix. 25. Souls are begotten and born. "And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan." Gen. xii. 5; xlvi. 22, 26, 27; Exod. xii. 10; Num. xv. 30. Souls have lips. Lev. v. 1-4. Souls have organs of mastication and digestion, and live by eating and breathing. Lev. vii. 20; Joshua xi. 11; Isa. xxxv. 6. Souls wear clothes and eat food, before they are physical beings, composed of flesh. Lev. xvii. 15, 16. Souls can be destroyed with literal weapons, hence they are material. Joshua x. 28, 30, 32, 35, 37, 39, 40; xi. 11. Souls have no life apart from the body. Ezek. xviii. 4, 20; James v. 20. Souls are buried in the grave. Psa. lxxx. 6, 48. Souls are delivered from the power of the grave by a literal resurrection. Psa. xvi. 10; xlix. 15; Hosea xiii. 14; Acts ii. 25-27.

Do you speak of the creative act as a literal thing? If so, we say: Since he has the power of creating living beings, and the breath of all mankind' Job xii. 10. Beasts are souls or living creatures as well as men. Num. xxxi. 28. The Hebrew term, nephesh chaiyah, is four times applied to the inferior animals before it is applied to man! Gen. i. 20, 21, 24, 30. It is translated living creature when applied to beasts, and living soul, when applied to man. Gen. ii. 7. Its etymology is the same in either usage of the term.

"Chaiyah," says Brother Stephenson, "is an adjective signifying living, and 'nephesh' is a noun signifying soul. These words, when put together, signify 'living creature,' or 'living soul.' 'Meth' is a Hebrew adjective, signifying dead. When this adjective qualifies the Hebrew noun 'nephesh,' the phrase signifies 'dead soul.' The phrase 'dead soul' occurs sixteen times in the Hebrew Scriptures." See Num. ix. 6, 7; xix. 11, 13, 16; 2 Chron. xx. 24, 25; Psa. lxxix. 2; cx. 6; Haggai ii. 13.

"The translators have concealed the true meaning of meth nephesh in the above texts by rendering it dead body or dead bodies, instead of dead soul or dead souls. "How is it possible; nay, is it not preposterous to talk about souls as immortal and immaterial? Is there not presumptive evidence, (Heb. vii. 14); inferential evidence, (1 Tim. vi. 16); negative evidence, (Eccl. ix. 5-10); affirmative evidence, (Job iv. 17); natural evidence, (Gen. ii. 7); comparative evidence, (Psa. civ. 2-5; xxxix. 5; Isa. lxiv. 6); antithetical evidence, (Psa. viii 3, 4; Job xiv. 7-10); logical evidence, (Rom. vi. 23); historical evidence, (Eccl. i. 14; Luke xxiv. 6; 1 Cor. xv. 20); doctrinal evidence, (Titus ii. 11-14); practical evidence, (Rev. xxi. 1-4); demonstrative evidence, (1 Cor. xv. 44, 45); and every other kind of inspired evidence that the Bible is against Plato and all the world whose hope of a future life is in the immortality of dead men?" Immortality is a blessing to be sought for by a patient continuance in well doing. Rom. ii. 6, 7. It is God's gift to perishing mortals! John iii. 14-16; vi. 39, 40; Rom. vi. 23. He has promised . . . eternal life to the faithful, hence, it is now an object of hope. Titus i. 2; iii. 7; James i. 12; 1 Jno. ii. 25; Rev. ii. 10. Saints will not be invested with immortality till the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. 1 Cor. xv. 51-53; Phil. iii. 20, 21; Col. iii. 3, 4; 1 Thess. iv. 13-18; 2 Tim. iv. 1, 8; 1 John iii. 2.

The above testimony clearly reveals the fact, that man's origin is earthly, his nature is mortal, and his destiny, (if he is good,) is immortality. In the poetic language of Brother Patterson,

"Pray what is man, why should he be
So boasting and so proud;
He's like a vessel on the sea,
A storm-tossed, driven cloud.

"A bubble on the rolling wave,
A straw upon the tide,
To fashion and to fame a slave,
A vassal bound to pride.

"A worm of earth, e'en at the best,
By fear-one rudely driven,
In search of joys, in hope of rest,
Estranged from God and heaven.

"Though he can mount the upper deep,
Who treasures there not up,
Who tramples clouds around him sweep,
In his thunders roll below.

"Or with the fiercest hurricanes play,
And bring them down to earth,
And in his pride exulting say,
'Thou art of powerless worth!'

"He thunders through the mountain base,
And shatters the firm rock;
Or pours the deep and darkest space,
In terrific cradle of shock.

"Or up the earth, and thence shall flow
Fountains of burning gold;
Or by the depths of ocean go
To show her hidden spoil.

"Then traverse earth over hill and vale
By land-winds or flame,
That fated flower to the gale,
And touch the storm of blame.

"Then converge the rays of light,
As by a magic hand,
That see by God and earth unbid,
His darkness can command.

"Then let the corpse us, which shall take
And where the sleeps not rest;
Or by no wind can it make
To navigate the skies.

"He looks at us—the clouds flee,
And then dies out as night;
Or upon the west sits a We,
And knows no star again.

"Or shall he refer his forgiveness
To foes—and curse—live;
Or, if there are those that seek at home
And pleas expand it twice.

"Yet what I mean, with all His skill,
His years, foes—what they be,
Though even in his power round Bill,
He can't quite take—not see.

"For like the dew of Eden's breath,
Or flame on the snow,
He has passed by, that leaves to death,
And takes with no trumpet.

"For he comes in still the day
When Christ has come down,
Then death and hell's power shall their prey
And keep no more—after them."

AUSTIN O. EVANS.

Lodi, Ky.

An Open Letter to Rev. S. F. Oliver, Pastor of the Methodist Church at Spring Brook, Pa.

Dear Sir: Being present at your meeting this evening I was surprised and pained to hear you denounce God by perverting his word. Taking for a text 2 Cor. v. 1, where Paul in metaphorical language speaks of this tabernacle we have a building of God, a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens, and the breath of God from heaven, you then proceeded to tell us that Paul was teaching the immortality of the body while the immortal soul is received into heaven with Jesus or body made with hands. You say that the soul is immortal and capable to exist long in a conscious state when separate from the body. And you attempt to prove it by the Ark of the covenant existing out of the tabernacle while being removed from one place to another, and when the tabernacle was set up or rebuilt the ark of the covenant was replaced in the tabernacle. And you had no doubt but Paul had that in his mind when he penned these words—an idea too silly to need any refutation. You also stated that every wicked man that ever lived on the earth was alive to-day and sound in thought. And that every good man that ever lived was alive and praising God. You also taught that death was not to be dreaded as it is the means by which the soul is liberated from the old worn-out tabernacle and wafted off to its home in heaven to sing songs of praise with the angels.

Allow me to analyze some of the main points in your discourse, and show you that instead of teaching God's word (as you profess to do) you falsify the word of God and teach the same doctrine taught by the serpent in the Garden of Eden. I will first notice the text. Paul does not say a word about the dissolution of the tabernacle, but he is speaking of the house or dwelling place of the tabernacle, the same dissolution that Peter speaks of in his second epistle third chapter, which is the dissolution of things that are temporal. And Paul admonishes us in the last verse of of the previous chapter not to look on the things that are seen but on the things that are not seen, 'or the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal. Paul knew that all these temporal things would be dissolved. And he says we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens, not eternally in the heavens, as some teach, but it is eternal and in the heavens. Our dwelling places here are only temporary, but when we are clothed upon with our house which is from heaven we will have an eternal dwelling place, not beyond the bounds of time and space, but upon the earth with the curse removed and our blessed Jesus reigning upon the throne of his Father David and the will of God being done in heaven; when the Father's house with many mansions will be located upon the earth as John saw it coming down from God out of Heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. Christ told his disciples that he was going to prepare a place for them and would come again and receive them to Himself.

Abraham too looked for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God. Abraham saw it by an eye of faith in the heavenly country that God had promised him. Paul who was caught away into the future or third heaven, had undoubtedly seen it, for he seems to know that we should be clothed upon with it. And John that beloved disciple saw it in his great panoramic vision coming down from God out of heaven, having the glory of God, and her light was like a stone most precious, and he saw no temple therein for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it, and it had no need of the sun nor the moon to shine in it for the glory of God did lighten it and the Lamb is the light thereof. O glorious day when we shall be clothed upon with our house from heaven and mortality be swallowed up of life when we shall be made immortal and have an eternal dwelling place, and bask in the sunshine of eternal glory with Christ our living head.

The statement that every man that ever lived is alive to-day is but a reiteration of the saying of the serpent in the Garden of Eden. God said to Adam that if he ate of the forbidden fruit he should die, and the serpent said ye shall not surely die. And so says Mr. Oliver, all that ever lived are alive to-day. But what says God in Gen. v. 5, He says: and all the days Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years and he died. Also Gen. vii. 12, "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth both of fowl and of cattle and of beast and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth and every man all in whose nostrils was the breath of life." And Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark. And Paul says, as in Adam all die so in Christ shall all be made alive. 1 Cor xv. 22. And Peter, in speaking of David, says that David is not ascended into the heavens but he and David is both dead and buried. Acts ii. 29-34. You say they are soused in Heaven, but David says he taketh his breath forth and he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish. Psa. cxlvi. Let God be true though men are found to be liars. And in Eccl. ix. 4-6, Solomon says, for to him that is joined to all the living there is hope, for a living dog is better than a dead lion, for the living know that they shall die but the dead know not any thing. Isa. xxxviii. 1, and onward we read that Hezekiah was sick unto death and Isaiah the prophet said unto him, thus saith the Lord, set thine house in order for thou shalt die and not live. Then Hezekiah turned his face to the wall and prayed and wept sore and the Lord added to his days fifteen years. And that man of God had no desire to die. He says, like as a crane or a swallow did I chatter, I did mourn as a dove. He had never learned the heathen dogma of going to heaven at death nor of the immortality of the soul. He left that to be advocated by the great apostacy. He or him after he had his days lengthened fifteen years: Behold for peace I had great bitterness. But thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption. Not much as though it was immortal. For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee, they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living praise thee as I do this day.

David in Psa. vi. 5, says that in death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave who shall give thee thanks. Thanksgivings perish from the dead as from one that is not.

The living and sound in heart shall praise the Lord. T. FINN,

The Germ and Amplitude of Everlasting Life.

The just shall live by faith. Heb. x. 38.

This refers to Hab. ii. 3, 4. The primal thought in one is the vision, the grand whole of prophetic foresight; but in this it concentrates on the second coming. "The coming One will come and will not tarry." Then, taken together, they show that all God's loving will flows to us through Christ, for in "him are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge"—heirship and immortality.

But, let us get at the special import of this precious passage, "The just shall live by faith." This varies from Hab. ii. 4; but the difference is verbal, not doctrinal or dispensational.

The profound fact from which the text springs is, "That if one died for all, then were all dead." 2 Cor. v. 14. All are under the law of sin and death, and hence there is no restitution to God and life immortal, but as disclosed in this precious life-giving text. "By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Eph. ii. 8.

It is obvious that a wisdom and power above us is needed to instruct, elevate and save us; and it is evident that the divine wisdom, grace and power alone, are able to "make wise unto salvation, raise the dead and restore all things spoken by all the prophets."

By believing the record that God has given of his Son, by confessing him before men, we get the germ of the new life—the life everlasting. Hence, our text discloses the primal truth of the gospel, that convinces of sin and brings to us mortals salvation, victory, in life and immortality. This is the positive view.

The negative also, may aid our apprehension of the importance of our subject. "Without faith it is impossible to please God. Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." It is like Adam leaning off from the Creator to the creature, and seeking wisdom and starting off in a way of his own, suggested by the tempter to gratify his mere sensual nature. It was walking by sight rather than faith. Thus did Abraham in taking Hagar, and so burdening himself and his posterity with a race of Hagarenes. So did King Saul in sparing the idolatrous, Amalekite Agag, etc. So also with Israel in going about to establish their own righteousness, which oozed out in their national ruin, dispersion and dispensational degradation. Nay, more, this "evil heart of unbelief" in practical application to our gospel age, has led to a like evil result. The life everlasting is assumed to inhere in man, and "the kingdom" of promise is presumed to belong to the church, with Babylon, the beast and false prophet,—the apostasy,—the man of sin and the mother of harlots, all in its range and ruling over it.

This has ever been and ever must be the evil outcome of leaving God and walking by sight; of ignoring faith and indulging sense. For the creature crawls on the plane of all creaturehood under the curse. It never rises above its low level of sin and death or the old imaginings of blind fortune, fate or chance of heathen philosophy. It blindly rushes on to its (to them) unseen destiny.

In absolute and everlasting elevation above this descending plane of doubt and uncertainty, faith gives substance and reality to things hoped for, because it rests on the faithfulness of him who quickeneth the dead and calleth things that be not as though they were. Rom. iv. 13-25; Heb. xi. 1, 40.

This faith leads us up to the everlasting priesthood after the order of Melchizedek; of course, above that of Aaron and the carnal commandment, above Rome and her ritualistic daughters, of every grade and every sect, and into the new and everlasting covenant.

This faith reaches above the works of righteousness that we have done, and into that race wherein believers stand and rejoice in hope. It sees how Eve and Adam failed, how Israel failed, how the great body of the secularized church has failed. It sees no help or hope from this source of perpetual failure in man through unbelief. Hence, it throws all creature trust aside, for trust in the infallible, unchanging God. It builds on the rock of ages.

This faith is not sectional. It grasps the whole doctrine of the Lord. It delights to analyze, and then group together "the glorious gospel of the blessed God." One may count out a score of witnesses for the kingdom as if to challenge the world to faith and hope and obedience unto salvation. But, another enumerates the forty-fold score of glories in the faith, hope and love that cluster in each and every redeemed soul! It shows the wisdom and the life, and the grandeur and the greatness of all that is blessed and venerable in the "heirs of the kingdom." "The kingdom" will be to us all that our moral capacity may enable us to enjoy therein, and no more. Thus it is now with the gospel. Thus it is with the present life of faith. Some, with hearts enlarged, run, while others walk or soar on more than eagles' wings, while others only seem to creep. We read of peace like a river, and of righteousness like the waves of the sea. Thus the subject of our text takes in all "the fulness of the gospel and the god-head," for "this life and that which is to come." Amen.

The value of faith lies in its power to give life, and in its outcome in victory! Hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is (thus) shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost. And love is born of God and knoweth God. 1 John iv. 7; Rom. v. 5; Gal. iii. 11. No human theory of the gospel ever did reach this lofty foretaste and full preparation for the "abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom." Let none anchor down in our attainments as compared with others, but reach up to him within the veil, and so grow exceedingly in likeness to Him. J. B. COOK.

The Restitution.

J. P. WEETHEE.

I am pleased to learn that the circulation of this paper is on the increase. Its mission is a noble one. Who can estimate its value?

It is not my purpose, however, to eulogize it or its editor. Wherever they are known they carry with them their own eulogism. Of its circulation I desire to speak; I have no selfish ends to subserve. The good of the cause of our soon coming King is my only motive. You will allow me to utter my thoughts if done in Christian kindness.

Who among the lovers of our blessed Lord, patronize THE RESTITUTION? Of those who are looking for that blessed hope, we name among its supporters the following classes:—

First class—those who have willing hearts and ample means. They take the paper, read it, and pay for its circulation. This is done without any sacrifice. They take a number of copies and distribute to the destitute and they are not sensible of any sacrifice. Should not the number be increased till they shall feel the cost? Can the crown be expected without a cross?

Second class:—Those who complain of inability to subscribe and pay for more than one copy. They read the paper and conclude that they are not able to supply their neighbors.

A third class, subscribe but do not pay readily.

A fourth class take THE RESTITUTION, but are totally unable to spare the means to pay for it. These are the Lord's poor. Many belonging to this class prize the paper very highly and are greatly benefited by its perusal.

The first two classes sustain THE RESTITUTION: the third and fourth classes are a tax on its resources. The third class contains the delinquents. They neglect duty—do not pay when able, and thereby tax the first two classes.

Others who profess to love the "blessed hope," do not patronize THE RESTITUTION. They are more interested in political and commercial interests. Worldly cares allow them no time for religious intelligence. Some are found absorbed in the affairs of secret organizations, and cannot spare means to spread the good news of the Kingdom. How many homes are thus robbed of the weekly visits of this kind angel of latter-day mercies.

I do not know the size of the weekly issue of our paper, neither have I any data by which to ascertain the number of persons that profess to believe in this kind warning; still, from various items gathered from the paper itself, I judge that the cause has its poor and maimed, its halt and blind, (spiritually.)

We can deceive ourselves very readily, as to our inability to spare the means to aid in spreading the news of our coming salvation, but what good can we derive from it? Of what avail will it be, that one can say "I have bought a piece of ground," or another "I have bought five yoke of oxen," and another "I have married a wife." We can easily make our worldly arrangements too extensive for our means. Are we as a people allowed such liberty? Is there any apology that can stand before our coming Judge? What do we propose as a valid reason for neglect of duty?

There are but few among us that cannot, in a year, spare means to pay for a copy of THE RESTITUTION.

The cost is about four cents a week, or a fraction over one half a cent a day. Laborers are paid eight cents per hour at least. The paper would cost extra labor, one-sixtenth of an hour, per day, or less than one half hour per week?

How many articles are purchased by every person during a year? A few cents in the quality will amount to the yearly subscription of the paper.

There is greater waste from every table in the country than would equal the cost of the paper.

It is very common to hear it said "I cannot do without this or that," when its use may be a serious damage to health. We should not allow appetite, ease or pleasure, to be our dictator.

We should study to know what will please the Savior when he comes, not how to gratify our worldly inclinations.

Allow me to present two cases to illustrate my idea of what can be done to increase the circulation of THE RESTITUTION.

I know a lady that is over three score years and ten, that does her work, washing, cooking and all other kinds of labor connected with housekeeping, works in her garden and attends to raising vegetables and poultry, dresses plain, does voluntarily without her tea and coffee, and uses no tobacco in any of its forms, that she may have means to pay for THE RESTITUTION, The Christian, and other papers for her own reading, and to supply others. I need not say that she is blessed in her efforts. This is the promise, and she gets it.

I know of a man that takes a similar course for a similar reason.

I do not present these cases with the idea that every one can do as much, but to induce all to do what they can for so benevolent a cause.

If all who professed to love our coming King, would enter the work in earnest THE RESTITUTION would never want support while it is needed. If we want the "well done" at the appearing of our blessed Redeemer, we must "occupy."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." In this advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and its immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

"The Word--In the Beginning--Was God."

It may be possible, it seems more than probable, that orthodoxy has made some mistake in its comments, by Justin Edwards, D. D., on the first part of the first chapter of John's gospel, as in the following words: "In the beginning; before creation--from eternity. The Word; the eternal Son, who afterwards took upon him human nature, and dwelt among men. With God; in holy union, communion and fellowship. Was God; truly deity."--See "Brief Notes and Instructions." This brief, but clear comment, leaves nothing in doubt or uncertainty, of the ideas of orthodoxy.

It is no matter of importance whether we deem "the beginning" as a reference to the first opening of gospel messages in Judea or to a time before creation, as Mr. Edwards has located it; as it was a divine beginning in any case. But it is obvious that John intended to make apparent by his reference to "the beginning," that the gospel originated from God was of God, in its conception and its call to men; that man's enterprise or agency had nothing to do with its inception or its bringing forth.

It was God's Word agency, flashing light into Judean darkness, illumining some with power to know how to become sons of God, while the density of general darkness did not comprehend the light. It was a source of some wonder and perplexity; as is an uncommon electrical phenomenon, or a meteoric ball passing athwart the skies, we may suppose; which might be no more in their estimate, than a superabundance of moral heat charging the intellectual atmosphere too heavily, till convolved in a mass of passionate fanaticism, which must ere long explode and dissipate. So doctors of the law, with zealous, mock gravity and an aping of wisdom, said: "Search and look; for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet."

"In the beginning was the Word." But the question of truth or error, is, was the Word "the eternal Son?" Surely the Word which was God, was in Christ; for Paul says, that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself," etc. But this is no proof that the Word, or God, which was in Christ was the eternal Son from eternity. We know that thousands do fully believe the Word was a pre-existent Christ; but truth, whatever it may be, is better than a whole continent of belief; and for truth and its proofs we must look. We quote from Luke iv.: "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor," etc. And ask: What is the inference that must be deduced from this text? Would the eternal Son--truly deity before creation, require a Holy Spirit anointing from the Lord, ere he was prepared to preach the gospel? The apostles each did. But would the truly deity--the eternal Son, if his divine existence antedates the creation? Whatever may be answered, we do know, that Christ ascribed his speaking and miracles to the Father and not the Son dwelling in him, saying: "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." John xiv. 10.

Where is the evidence of an eternally pre existent son? since it is the Father that Christ claims for the efficient agent doing the work?

I know an answer will be disingenuously twisted in by some, thus: That the Father and Son are both one, and that when Christ says "myself" he means, not his divinity, but his flesh. The latter is true of the myself. But it is not true that the eternal Father and an eternal, pre-existent Son are both one, and speak as one in Christ's manhood. It is not denied that Christ said: "I and my Father are one." But the oneness is not of that kind, but an interest oneness. Christ gives a full explanation of his oneness with the Father. John xvii. 11, 22. "Holy Father, keep . . . those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are one." "And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one." Christ's glory is the gift of the Father. The idea is not of identity of persons. Disciples cannot be identical as individuals; the being of each is distinct. But they should be one in harmony and interest, as Christ was with the Father, not disagreeing.

There is an expression in the fifth verse of this chapter that is strongly claimed as proof of the pre-existence of Christ; it is "the glory which I had with thee before the world was." "Had," means no more than "hast" in other places, and "hath," as, "For he hath put all things under his feet." Not yet: "And when all things shall be subdued unto him," etc. See 1 Cor. xv. 27, 28. "Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet." Not yet, for, "But now we see not yet all things put under him," shows it to be the arrangement for the future. So, "the glory which I had with thee" does not mean past or former enjoyment, but that allotted and designed for him, in the Father's pre-arranged plan. He had it, as he had all things put under him, a yet future consummation.

The Word, or Logos, that was in the beginning--was with God--was God--was the divine execution. By it all was done that was done. In it was life, power, and the light of men. "And the Word became flesh and dwelt among us," says John. It was constituted in flesh so as to dwell in Judea. If I am not mistaken, the Word--the Logos--always has the idea of the divine with it. Even in such cases as these, "And many more believed because of his word"--"Logon." "And ye have not his word--"Logon'--abiding in you." In these passages the divinity of truth is expressed in that word. John iv. 41 and v, 38. It is not the mere words of mouth that are indicated.

Peter makes the distinction very clear between the divine Word and the message word. "The Word--"Logon"--which God sent to the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ." He says: So this divine Logos was the peace preached by Christ. When Peter says in the next verse: "That word . . ye know which was preached throughout all Judea." "The Word which God sent," and "that word which was preached," are not the same, as the messenger and the message are not both one. The first is "Logon"--Word, and imports speech, speaking or preaching. The second is "Rehema," a spoken word, message or facts declared. Diaglott.

Peter seems to explain how it was that the Word--"Logos"--came to Israel to preach by Christ. He says: "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed with the devil; for God was with him," that is, God was with him by the God-word, which was the anointing and the power. See Acts x. 36-38. Peter does not c..." Christ the eternal Son.

God spoke to the Jewish people first by the prophets, afterwards by a Son. Heb. i. 1, 2. The "great salvation (of the future kingdom,) began to be spoken by the Lord" (Jesus) and was confirmed to that people by apostles that heard him, God bearing them witness with signs and gifts of miraculous powers. God spoke in all by the Word; for the Word was God, as says John. Heb. ii. 3, 4; John i. 1.

In 2 Cor. v. 18-21, Paul says that the Word--the "Logos"--which was in Christ had been committed to the apostles. He affirms these several things:

1. "All things are of God," that he is speaking of; that they have fixed nothing.

2. God had reconciled them to himself by Jesus Christ, by sending Christ.

3. And had given to them the ministry to reconcile others besides themselves.

4. The explanation more fully, to-wit: "That God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, and hath committed unto us the Word--the "Logon"--of reconciliation, not imputing their trespasses to them who become reconciled."

5. "Now then we are ambassadors for (instead of) Christ, as if God through us" speaking, calling, or inviting you, we entreat you instead of Christ, be reconciled to God. The reason of their having the Word of reconciliation put in them.

6. "For he (God) hath made him to be sin (bearer) who know no sin, for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." That being so, he could no longer act as the Word--the Logos--bearer in the ministry of reconciliation. But substitutes of the same authority to men--God speaking by the Word in them--must act in Christ's stead, he taking a more exalted position after his death. As the apostles, so Jesus had spoken by the Spirit Word. "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words (rhemata, the messages) of God, for God giveth not the spirit by measure unto him." John iii. 34.

We are taught in the Christian Scriptures that, "To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we (Christians) by him." "For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." 1 Cor. viii. 6; 1 Tim. ii. 5.

Let no one conceive that what is offered in the foregoing puts a diminished value on our Savior, or tends to lower him. A falsely constructed character given him, in what way soever it may aim to exalt, only in reality lowers him, by making him wear a false dress. He has been made the center of a mass of errors, and errors make a false Christ. If the views expressed in what is stated, are wrong, let them be criticised by some of the better instructed brethren.

As to soundness of views, I believe with Peter, (Acts ii. 36,) that "God hath made that same Jesus, . . . both Lord and Christ," a phrase that means everything. He differed much from prophets and apostles, because he "was the only begotten of the Father," "born of woman," and "without robbery made himself equal with God" by claiming God for his Father, though born of "sinful flesh." And though thus highly related in paternity, yet he "was made a little lower than the angels" in the inferiority of "the seed of Abraham." And says the apostle: "We do not yet see all things put under him." But we see him already "crowned with glory and honor" in high exaltation.

He is no longer lower than the angels, but having "been made perfect" by rising from the dead, he is equal to them in body, and far above them in rank, dignity, and honor, and glory. "Being made so much better than they, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they;" for God never said to any of them: "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee."

All possible dignities, all honors, and all possible possessions and power are in his inheritance, biding the time of redemption. Glory, honor and dominion to him who is to come.

"The One Hope."--No. 8.

I have said that it is very natural for man to indulge hope, so much so that there is no class of men but that in them is some sort of a hope, and all of the different religious classes of men possess their different hopes, none having the least suspicion that his hope is to prove worthless at that day when only one out of the many will stand the test. "Even as ye are called in one hope of your calling," saith the word of the Lord. If this is so, is it not vastly important that we know what that "one hope" is, and not only know what it is, but whether it is our hope or not? I think this is a proposition to which no one will object, but all will readily accede to the fairness of the same.

We all know that there is quite a difference between my faith or our faith, as we sometimes say, and the so-called orthodox faith, and yet we all profess to believe the Bible and obtain our faith therefrom. Is it possible that the Bible can mislead the mind of any man so much that he will hate his fellows on account of the faith that generates his hope, and at the same time his hope be the one hope of the Bible? If not, then I ask why are we so hated by those who claim to be more orthodox than they are willing to admit that we are? That this is stated fairly I shall prove by appealing to the late prophetic conference of New York.

A gentleman from England, said: "But we would cross the Atlantic to bring a man nearer to Christ." Well, says one, what fault can you find with such a sentiment? Not any; it is to be commended. But in the next breath the same speaker is reported to say: "Were this conference or subject mixed up in any way with the rash predictions concerning annihilation or Universalism certainly I would not countenance it."

As to Universalism, it may plead its own cause. I have done my duty towards it and all men, in the foregoing articles, by showing that there is no Christ in their hope, and this I consider much fairer than as though I had dealt out blows to them by denouncing their "sins" in a wholesale manner. But the gentleman from across the Atlantic is to be understood by all that he is so purely orthodox that he does not mix up in any way with it nor its erroneous sister, annihilation, in her rash predictions. If he had said that he did not nor would not in any way mix up with the statement of Paul's "rash prediction," that "death was the wages of sin," or that Christ would adjudge the wicked to an "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power," or had he said "I am so orthodox that I will not mix up in any way with King David or the Prophet Malachi, who rashly predicted that "a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place and it shall not be;" for "the wicked shall perish," that is, "they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away" when they are "burned up root and branch," "as the fat of lambs, in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of Hosts."

I say, again, if he had said that he did not in any way mix up with such sayings, let them come from what source they might, his remarks would be intelligible, but now as it regards annihilation, they need an explanation; for they either mean to contradict the statement of Bible language, or they are to be understood in an unqualified sense, that he did not mix up in any way with the doctrine of the annihilation of matter. If the latter is his meaning, I have only to say that I do not know of any body or class of men that hold or teach any such doctrine; so if that is his meaning, he is not different from all other people that I know of in all the world, but it is his imperative duty to say so and thus not cast a slur upon the Word of the Lord and those that hold it. He should always specify whether he uses terms in a qualified or unqualified sense, and if he does not, he does not do well, and in that case the sin will lie at his own door when every man shall receive according to his deeds.

His words remind me of a conversation that I held with a class-leader some thirty years ago while I belonged to the M. E. church. I was quoting David and other Scriptures (as above) in his presence, when he exclaimed with an air of contempt, "Away with it; it is annihilation." With surprise I replied: "It is the Bible." He replied: "I do not care if it is the Bible; I do not believe it." I find there are more unbelievers of the statements of the Bible on that subject than almost any other; but only those that see the truth on that subject can possibly indulge "the one hope," which, as we have seen, is a "hope of eternal life" from the dead, and to be like Christ at and after his appearing, as at that time the dead will receive it by means of the resurrection. SELECTIONS.

[S. S. Times.]

Unconscious Farewells.

Every hour there are partings, thought to be only for a little season, which prove to be forever. One morning a gentlemen bade his wife and child good-bye, and went out to his work. There was an accident on the street, and before midday his lifeless body was borne back to his home. It was a terrible shock, but there was one sweet comfort that came with wondrous power to the crushed heart of the young wife. The last hour they had spent together had been one of peculiar tenderness. Not a word had been spoken by either that she could wish had not been spoken. She did not know at the time that it was their last conversation; and yet there was nothing in it that left one bitter recollection, now that she should meet her husband no more. And through all these years of loneliness and widowhood, the memory of that last parting has been an abiding joy in her life, like a fragrant perfume, or a bright lamp of holy peace.

Life is very critical. Any word may be our last. Any farewell, even amid glee and merriment, may be forever. If this was burned into our consciousness, and if it ruled as a deep conviction and real power in our lives, would it not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not oftentimes put a rein upon our rash and impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the miserable suspicions and jealousies that now so often embitter the fountains of our love? Would we allow trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street, without recognition, because of some real or fancied slight, some wounding or grief, we bore against grudge? Or would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathy, our comfort, when weary hearts all about us are breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have it in our power to give?

We all know how kindly it makes us feel toward any one to sit beside his death bed. We are spending our last hour with him. We would not utter a harsh word, nor cherish a single grudge against him, for the world. All our coldness melts down before the eyes that have death's far-away look in them. All the long-frozen kindly sentiment in our hearts toward our friend is thawed out as we have our last intercourse with him. Then we all know, too, how slumbering love awakes, and cold spirits warm, and all the chill of selfishness dissolves beside a dead man's coffin. Every one feels kindly then. Not a trace of grudging or bitterness lingers in any heart. Slights and wrongs are forgiven. Icy winter changes to mellow summer. Loving words of gratitude or appreciation flow from every tongue. Praise and commendation, never spoken when the weary spirit needed them so much, find free expression when the heavy ear can hear them no more. Men feel themselves awed in the presence of eternity, and heartily ashamed of their wretched spites and petty animosities, and cold mechanical friendship.

Now how it would bless and beautify our lives if we could carry that same thoughtful, grateful, patient, forgiving, loving spirit into our every day intercourse with the same gentle consideration, with the same manly sincerity, as when we sit by their death bed; if we could bring the post mortem justice, appreciation, gratitude, charity, and unselfish kindness back into the vexed and burdened years of actual toilsome life! And it would be impossible to live otherwise, if we but realized that any hour's intercourse with another might be the last. If a man truly felt that he might be spending his last day with his family, taking his last meal with them, would not his heart be cleansed of all harshness, bitterness, and selfishness? and would not his feelings, his very tones be charged with almost a divine tenderness? If a mother felt that to-day might be the last that she would have her child with her, would she be so impatient of its endless questions, so easily annoyed by its pranks, so fretted and vexed by its faults and thoughtless ways? Would we be so exacting, so calculating, so cold and formal, so undemonstrative, so selfish, in our intercourse with our friends, if we truly believed that to-night's sunset might be the last, we should ever behold, or that we should never meet our friends again?

"If thou dost bid thy friend farewell;--
But for one night though that farewell may be,--
Press though his hand in thine;
How canst thou tell how far from thee
Fate or caprice may lead his steps, ere that to-morrow comes?
Men have been known lightly to turn the corner of a street,
And days have grown to months,
And months to lagging years, ere they have
Looked in loving eyes again. . . .
Yea, find they always time to say some earnest word
Between the idle talk, lest with thee henceforth,
Night and day, regret should walk."

With many a lonely heart, regret does indeed walk night and day, because of the memory of unkind words spoken which can never be unspoken since the ears that heard them are deaf to every sound of earth. Friends have separated with sharp words or in momentary estrangement, through some trivial difference, and have never met again. Death has come suddenly to one of them, or life has set their feet in paths divergent from that moment. Many a bitter and unavailing tear, bitter because unavailing, is shed over the grave of a departed one, by one who would give worlds for a single moment in which to beg forgiveness or seek reparation.

So uncertain is life and so manifold are the vicissitudes of human experiences, that any leave-taking may be forever. We are never sure of an opportunity to unsay the angry word, or draw out the cruel thorn we left rankling in a tender heart. The kindness we felt prompted to do to-day but neglected or deferred, we may never again be able to perform. The only way, therefore, to save ourselves from unavailing sorrow and regret, is to let love always rule in our hearts and control our speech. If we should speak unadvisedly, giving pain to another heart, let reparation be made instantly, and upon the spot. The sun should never go down upon our wrath. We should never leave anything over night that we would not be willing to leave finally and forever, and which we would blush to meet again in the great disclosure.

We all want to have beautiful endings to our lives. We want to leave sweet memories behind, in the hearts of those who know and love us. We can only make sure of this by living always so that any day would make a tender and beautiful "last day;" that any hand-grasp would be a fitting farewell; that any hour's intercourse with friend or neighbor would leave a fragrant memory. For after any heart-throb God may write "Finis."

Sometime.

It is a sweet sweet song, warbled to and fro among the topmost boughs of the heart, and filling the whole air with such joy and gladness, as the birds do when the summer morning comes out of darkness, and the day is born on the mountains. We all have possessions in the future, which we call "sometime." Beautiful flowers and singing birds are there, only our hands seldom grasp the one, or our ears hear the other. But, O reader, be of good cheer, for all the good there is a golden "sometime," when the hills and valleys of time are all past; when the wear and fever, the disappointment and sorrow of life are over; then there is the place and the rest appointed of God. O homestead! over whose roof falls no shadows or even clouds, and over whose threshold the voice of sorrow is never heard; built upon the eternal hills, and standing with the spires and pinnacles of celestial beauty among the palm-trees of the city of God, those who love God shall rest under thy shadows, where there is no more sorrow and pain, nor the sound of weeping "sometime."

The violet cannot become the rose, the daisy cannot be the lily; and if each could be the loveliest flower, earth would lose half its beauty. Without variety, a scene however fair within itself soon wearies us. Knowest thou the moral? Be content in thy proper sphere: thou mayest be the violet or the daisy; but envy not the rose or the lily; all are beautiful when in their appointed places.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 12, 1879.

YESTERDAY the sad news was telegraphed to us announcing the death of our brother, J. P. Chaplin. We must go to-day (Tuesday) to see him consigned to the house prepared for all living. How the past rises up before us as we remember when we lived under the same paternal roof, surrounded the same board spread by our own mother's tender care and loving hands, and slept on pillows smoothed by maternal love. Our parents long since were consigned to the beds in dust, sisters have been laid by their side, and to-day our brother will be with them in that sleep upon the dreamless pillow. We, of course, have no opportunity to write editorials. Shall we ever reach the sorrowless shore?

The Second Birth.

St. John, iii. 1: There was a man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus. The same came to Jesus and acknowledged him to be a teacher come from God, and Jesus tried to teach him. John iii. 3. Jesus answered and said unto him, verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. How many times must he be born? Once more, or again, and that birth is the resurrection. See Romans, viii. 20. "That he might be the first born among many brethren." How could this be unless this alluded to the saints that arose when he did, or the same day. Colossians, i. 15. "Who is the image of the invisible God? The first born of every creature." Abraham, and many other creatures were born before Christ, but not from the grave. Is not this birth the resurrection of Jesus, and many of the saints who arose and were seen of many after Jesus was resurrected? To make it sure, Paul said in the same chapter, 18th verse. "The first born from the dead." This settles this point, that the resurrection is the second birth, and unless a man obtains this birth he cannot see the kingdom of God. Why? Because it is the other side of the resurrection, and no man can see the kingdom of God until he is resurrected or born again. He cannot see it while in the flesh. St. John, iii. 5. Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. And this birth of water: what is it? Is it the [illegible] You there is no place for a third birth, and no man can get it in Christ's teachings. Did Jesus say when baptized he was born of water, or again? Or did Peter say when converted, he was born the second time, or again? Or where can you find any such thing in all the word of God. I will affirm that it is the first birth. Why? Because man is surrounded with water from conception until birth, and when the water breaks he is in the process of being born of water and of flesh at the same moment. Is not this synonymous to the birth of flesh? Is not this the first birth? Then away with your baptismal birth. I do not wish to undervalue baptism. It is for remission of sins, and to get into Christ, and is essential to salvation. Jesus says, to make it more plain, (St. John, iii. 6): that which is born of the spirit is spirit. How plain Jesus talks. There is but one body for man at the same time—that is, a flesh body, and after that a spirit body. All mankind on earth are now in the flesh body, and cannot be otherwise until raised from the dead, or caught up to meet the Lord, changed to a spirit body. See 1 Cor. xv. 44. It is buried or sown a natural body; it is born again, or raised, a spiritual body. I have heard this text preached from ever since a little boy—am now seventy-one years past—but never in its true light. But I wanted to understand Jesus, and I studied patiently and alone until I came to the above conclusion. It is my own conclusion, and I think it cannot be much out of the way. Please correct me if I am.

The World Without a Christian—The Christian Without a World, John xvii. 15.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Christ's Prayer.—Christ besought his Father not to take his followers out of the world, but to keep them from the evil.

Why not remove Christians from the world? They are not of it; it is not his home. Why keep him in this damp, unhealthy prison?

Let our Master give the answer: "Ye are the light of the world," its lamp-bearer, its moral instructor, the awful angel of his commission—go disciple, go instruct all nations.

A world without a light! lampless, rayless! Its condition who could paint? a moral chaos without a brooding spirit, a putrid ocean without salt.

What would the earth be without a sun? Were that bright luminary to recall his messengers, and hide his face for a year, the living creation would be in a sleep of death. The light of the sun is the life of our planetary system.

Put the two zones, equatorial and polar, side by side and mark their fauna and their flora. Whence the wide contrast? The life of the one, feeble and stinted, follows a precarious sunlight, while in the other, air, earth, and ocean teem with an endless variety of beings, sporting in the vigor of sunlit paradise. All animated nature is but organic sunlight, the treasured fuel is the sunlight of ages that belong to the earth's infancy. What the sun is to the physical world, the sun of righteousness is to the moral world. Christians are that radiated light. Remove Christians and the world falls back into the night of paganism. No moral life; no light, no heat, it is shrouded in an arctic winter. How benevolent the prayer, how God-like, not to take them out of the world.

Jesus left the interests of his cause in the hands of his people; and though they have suffered persecutions through their entire pilgrimage, they are still the light of the world.

The Christian without a World.—The world has always been an enemy to the Christian. Their interests are opposite. God and Mammon are at enmity; their subjects are, therefore, hostile; hence no Christian can serve the world without apostatizing. How, then, can the world be utilized by the Christian? The hatred and persecution of the world have always been a benefit to the Christian life, since their enmity keeps them apart.

It is an outside pressure that makes Christians more intimate and loving, it is a girdle to his loins, his external compress. Remove the world's pressure and the Christian body swells and flies to pieces.

This principle has been exemplified in every persecution for the last eighteen centuries. The greater the external pressure the more compact the body; this is a law, in morals as well as in physics, it acts as a centripetal force to draw them to Christ their centre. The world, therefore is designed to develop purity of Christian character. When properly used it is his school of instruction and discipline. If you make it a friend, its seductions draw you away from Christ and poison your affections and destroy your happiness.

If the world is a dangerous friend, why not retire from it rather than make it an enemy? This has been tried, and utterly failed to secure the intended results. Monks and nuns have attempted to retire from the world, only to develop an inside world more corrupting and deadly than the external.

Take us not out of the world, but keep us from the evil.

Light Wanted.

Will some of the readers of THE RESTITUTION, who disbelieve in the resurrection of the wicked dead, tell me what Paul means in the fifteenth chapter of Corinthians, commencing at the twenty-first verse and ending with the twenty-sixth verse? Can it be said that death is destroyed while it holds one of the human family?

Your brother, who has been a reader of THE RESTITUTION for the last year, and one who is waiting for the restitution of all things brought to view in in his word.

"The Restitution."

Under this caption Brother Weethee fails to mention the most important class that read "our paper,"—those who take and pay for more than one copy, and to whom it is a sacrifice, though a willing one, to do so. It is no injustice to Brother W. to have them mentioned, and is a source of comfort to them to know their labors are appreciated. Then the case would stand thus: There are three classes that support the paper, instead of two. I opine it was only an oversight in Brother W. in stating that the paper was supported by two classes.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution: We are about thirty strong here now, some have moved away and some have gone back to the beggarly elements of the world who could not stand the pressure of persecution, verifying the parable of the sower of the seed that fell on the thin soil. Death also has taken one sister away. She was one of the young ladies that came out during Bro. Haughawout's preaching Jan. '78. She did not take a stand for the truth until near the close of his preaching. She said she was not ready to give herself to Jesus, but wanted to enjoy the world a little longer, but finally chose the better course and before a year passed she too laid in the dark and silent tomb to await the joyful sound when the dead in Christ shall arise. We hold meeting every first day at 11 a. m. Bro. Prime speaks on the last Sunday, and social meeting the balance of the time. If any of the preaching brethren come this way would like to have them stop off and preach for us; could give more food than money.

Ed. Restitution:—You will find enclosed three dollars—two for RESTITUTION, and one for tracts. I wish you to send a variety, such as the Nature of Man, Life and Death, Restoration of Israel, the Kingdom, etc. I am expecting to go to Minnesota before long to spend the summer, and those tracts are for distribution. I think THE RESTITUTION is the best paper in circulation for getting Bible truth before the minds of the people, as it is very clear on the different subjects it advocates, and, although the Bible is a very plain book to me, yet I have received a great deal of light from reading THE RESTITUTION, for which I feel very thankful to the giver of all blessings. I should not know how to live without it. I am almost impatient for its arrival sometimes, although it makes its regular weekly visits. I am in hopes to get some subscribers for it in Minnesota, as there is quite a number there who are interested in the coming and Kingdom of our blessed Lord. I feel quite unqualified to say anything that would edify anyone; still I would say by way of encouragement—Be patient, dear brethren and sisters, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Dwell on the promises of God—let your faith be strong for he will surely come, he will not tarry. Yours in the blessed hope of seeing Jesus.

MILTON SOUTHWICK.

Edgerton, Wis.

Ed. Restitution:—By request, I drop you a few lines for publication in your most valuable paper. We have here some four or five candidates for the kingdom of God; they are anxious for immersion. Should any of the brethren pass this way they would be kindly received and cared for. As we are poor in this world's goods we do not feel able to pay expenses, but if any of the brethren were passing this way, and could lay over, we would make them some recompense. There is a good opening here for a lecturer, as the people have been stirred up by a Seventh Day Adventist. One Elder Fuller has been holding a course of lectures in this place. Much good might be done here by some able defender of the truth. We have no meetings, no one to cheer us but the welcome visits of THE RESTITUTION. Your brother in hope of eternal life.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—Since my last report of labor I have visited the brethren in Thorold and Fonthill. Had a joyful time in presenting the truth on the First day to an intelligent audience, closing our services with the memorial supper.

Spent ten days with the congregation of the Lord in Darlington. Visited them all at their own homes, conversing upon themes which are in advance of Adventism. On each First day I preached twice, and at the close of each evening service we ate the memorial supper. A good turnout and a joyful time. The Lord reward them for their kindness to me and mine, is my prayer.

Visited the brethren in Bowmanville and Clark at their own firesides, where I endeavored to do my duty as an evangelist. And on the First day I delivered two discourses. One of them was delivered after I had listened to a skim-milk sermon. I invited the preacher to stop and listen to my message, but he fled. Nevertheless we had a blessed meeting. Yet in the midst of our enjoyment, I was made sad because death had taken to its embrace, January 8, 1879, Brother Joseph Powers. His age was seventy years and eight months. He was a good man. Therefore the grave will not hold him eternally. But his loss is felt by Sister Powers and his children, the Church of God (of which he was an ornament), and the neighborhood.

I gave two discourses in a private house in a rural district in the township of Whitby. Some sixty out to hear the word of life. Never saw better attention given to any message of love, and I was kindly received.

Called on some of the brethren in Toronto. Had a pleasant time with them, which was highly appreciated on their part and mine. The Lord willing, I am to visit them and preach the word—the gospel.

Fraternally yours,

Simple Honesty.

Above all things we should cultivate honesty and simplicity, truth and faithfulness, in ourselves and all with whom we have to do. Falsehood, fraud, and subterfuge permit at no rate; be zealous of wit and humor, and all equivocal forms of representing things. I have sometimes devoutly wished that I were so stupid as not to understand a joke, that I were honest enough to perceive nothing but the falsehood of what the French call a jeu d' esprit or playfulness of mind. I tell you, brethren, be honest in your dealings, take no advantage even of a child. Be conscientious in your bargains. Have a single eye and a single heart. Seek not to be shrewd. Be not ashamed to be called simple. And let me tell you a secret, which ought not to be a secret, seeing it is written in the Scripture, that your whole body will be full of light; and this in every kind; you will actually see further, and see clearer than shrewd and cunning men, and you will be less liable to be duped than they, provided you add to this another part of character which is proper to an honest man,—namely, a resolution to protect honesty and discountenance every kind of fraud.

A cunning man is never a firm man; but an honest man is; a double-minded man is always unstable; a man of faith is firm as a rock. I tell you there is a sacred connection between honesty and faith; honesty is faith applied to worldly things, and faith is honesty quickened by the spirit to the use of heavenly things.

In all that I have said upon this quality, I have not said enough of it. I have but given the clue to the proper way of discoursing upon it. Meanwhile, let me press it upon you in the words of our old ballad, "'Tis gold to be honest and true."

And that wherever we find an honest-hearted man, however sunk he may be in wickedness, we should have hope, and there drop the seed of the word of God; but as to all manner of political and double-minded people, wise in their own conceit, and prudent for this world, clever, intellectual, and active minded though they be; have more hope of a fool than of such an one. They are too knowing to believe; they are too shrewd to be charitable, they are to prudent to hope against hope. You may as soon expect corn to grow upon the sea-beach, as the seed of the word to take root there.

Be on your guard then, and remember you have been warned against these forms of character to which this age is so very prone.

You cannot be of this character, and be after God's image; the thing is utterly impossible. Therefore, choose after which you will be conformed: the wisdom from above, which is first pure, then peacable and gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and of good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy, or after the wisdom that descendeth not from above, which is earthly, sensual, devilish.

An African's Prayer.

At a recent gathering of the Bishops of the Anglican Church in London, J. T. Haley, Bishop of Hayti, a full-blooded African, preached by request of Dean Stanley in Westminster Abbey. His text was Matt. xx. 21, "And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She said unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left, in thy kingdom." He closes his discourse in these prayerful words:

"O Thou Savior Christ, Son of the living God, who when Thou wast spurned by the Jews of the race of Shem, and who, when delivered up without cause by the Romans of the race of Japheth, on the day of thy crucifixion, bedst thy ponderous cross borne to Golgotha's summit on the stalwart shoulders of Simon, the Cyrenian, of the race of Ham, I pray thee, O precious Savior, remember that despised, dejected and forlorn race, whose son thus bore thy cross, when thou shalt come in the power and majesty of thy eternal kingdom to distribute thy crowns of everlasting glory! And give to me, then, not a place at thy right hand nor at thy left, but only the place of a gatekeeper at the entrance of the holy city, the New Jerusalem, that I may behold my redeemed brethren, the saved of the Lord, entering therein to be partakers with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob of all the joys of thy glorious and everlasting kingdom."

GENTLE WORDS.

It takes long days of golden sun,
And many a drop of rain,
To start one flower from winter's blight;
To bud and bloom again.

If once from out a trusting eye
We cause a tear to steal,
A hundred words of warmest love
May not the anguish heal.

Then hurl no hasty, cruel shaft,
To give another pain,
Let gentle words, like rain drops, swell
Cold hearts to life again.

An Endless Book.

Mr. Cauger tells us: "A couple of infidels were standing together on the deck of a vessel as she glided past a desolate island of the sea. One said to the other: 'Suppose you were condemned to live upon that island alone, and had the choice of but one book for your companion, what book of all books would you choose?' The other replied: 'I would select Shakespeare, because of the variety of his themes.' 'Well,' rejoined the other, 'although I do not believe the Bible, yet I would choose it for my companion, for the Bible is an endless book.'"

How true it is that the Bible is an endless book. For fifteen hundred years men inspired of God were working to build this volume. In it the very inspiration of God joins with the genius of genius, of culture of self-devotion and moral heroism, and the book touches man at every point in his character, in every phase of his existence, and at every stage of his career. It deals with him in relation to his past, his present, and his future; it finds him in whatever condition he may be; it enlightens his eyes, it instructs his judgment, it moulds his life, it changes his heart. Millions have been regenerated by its renewing power, individuals have been transformed by its saving energy; and what it has done in time past it is still doing and will do, for all who put their trust in God and repose their faith in his promises.

This endless book will never be outgrown nor outworn, till heaven and earth shall pass. The writings of philosophers have been discarded and sent back to the dust of by-gone ages; the works of men of science have been displaced by newer productions; but there is nothing yet discovered, invented or contrived, which can take the place of the book that was a lamp and a light so many thousand years ago, and which is still the guide of trusting souls;—the word of truth, the revelation of God to man.

Unnoticed Beauties.

Many passages of Scripture are like hundreds of wayside flowers, which for months and years are unnoticed by us, simply because we have been accustomed from our childhood to see them, without stooping to pluck or to examine them. We were taught to read the Bible so early, in the family and in the village school, and we have so often and often walked along the chapters, that we have beaten a dusty path in them, and some of their most precious and beautiful things are neither precious nor beautiful to us, simply because we look at them, and not into them. Many parts of the Bible may be compared to those exquisite creations of art which are sometimes found in old cathedrals; they have collected dust and grime and weather-stains and hundreds of persons go past them every day, never cleansing them, never restoring feature nor color, nor bringing out the artist's embodied thought, till some enthusiastic Ruskin teaches us how beautiful are the things that we have slighted as uncomely. So the Scriptures are often overlaid, and frequently some of the passages that really are the most resplendent are those which seem only common and ordinary.

NEWS ITEMS.

PANAMA, Feb. 25.—A famine is raging in the most fertile portion of Bolivia. In the district of Cochabamba in the different localities of the department, from eight to ten persons die daily of starvation. In one small town 200 persons died from want of food in twenty days.

Mr. Heap, United States consul general at Constantinople, in a dispatch to the department of state, says alarming rumors prevail of the progress of the plague in Astrakhan. Constantinople was thrown into a panic recently by the report of the case near Salonica. Mr. Heap believes it was not a case of the plague, but of malignant typhus fever. The effect of the report has been to increase the vigilance of the authorities. This is much needed. Should the disease reach Constantinople, its ravages would be frightful. The condition of the city is of itself sufficient to breed an epidemic. The winter has been mild, with little rain, which presages in any event a sickly summer. The sanitary improvement of the city begins to awaken attention.

From the best information the consul general has been able to obtain, it would appear that the pestilence has, in consequence of the energetic measures taken by the Russian authorities, been confined to the localities where it made its first appearance.

The focus of the epidemic has a bad reputation for insalubrity. All previous epidemics there have been of a virulent character.

BREVITIES.

The whole number of Indians in the United States, not including those in Alaska, is estimated at 278,000. The whole number of schools among them is 330; scholars, 11,615; amount spent for their education the last year, $337,-376; number of church members, 23,-000; land cultivated, 202,500 acres; bushels of wheat raised, 688,278; of corn 4,656,951; of oats and barley, 340,217.

"Dr. Kane, finding a flower under the Humboldt glacier, was more affected by it, because it grew beneath the ice and cold known of the ice, than he would have been by the most gorgeous garden bloom. So some single, expanding grace in the heart of one far removed from Divine influences may be a cause to God than a whole conclave of virtues in the life of one more favored of heaven."

An infidel said: "There is one thing that mars all the pleasures of my life." "Indeed!" replied his friend, "what is that?" He answered: I am afraid the Bible is true. If I could know for certain that death is an eternal sleep, I should be happy. My joy would be complete! But here is the thorn that stings me; this is the sword that pierces my soul:—If the Bible is true, then I am lost forever."

DAVID'S PROPHECY CONCERNING TELEGRAPHY.

On the occasion of the opening of a new telegraph station at Raszkow, complimentary and congratulatory telegrams were exchanged between the municipal authorities of that town, and Dr. Stephen, the Postmaster-General at Berlin. The former alluded in their telegram to the fulfillment of what is believed to be David's prophecy concerning telegraphy, and quoted the verse from Psalm 19: 4: "Their line is gone out through all the earth and their words to the end of the world."

THE ANTIQUITY OF WEAVING.

The earliest records of the art of weaving are to be found in the Old Testament. Pharaoh arrayed Joseph in "vestures of fine linen," and Job lamented that his days were swifter than the weaver's shuttle, the use of the simile proving that the shuttle was a common and well known object at the time. Portions of woven cloth and a weaver's shuttle have been found among the remains of the Lake dwellings, and as the latter are believed to belong to the stone age, the origin of the art may possibly have been nearly coincident with the existence of man. Few if any savage races have been discovered altogether ignorant of the art, and many of them have brought it to a considerable degree of perfection; while the relics of the ancient Peruvians and Egyptians show that they were skilled weavers. Some fragments of Egyptian cloth were found on examination to be woven with threads of about 120 hanks to the pound, with 140 threads to the inch in the warp, and 64 in the woof. Although the art was practiced extensively, and with no mean skill, in very ancient times, it progressed slowly and gradually—by small steps at long intervals. The great advances in the art of weaving have been made during the past 300 years, mainly during the last century.

E PLURIBUS UNUM.

Mr. A. London Snowden, of Philadelphia, thus describes the origin and use of the motto, E Pluribus Unum: "It is ascribed to Col. Reed, of Uxbridge, Mass. It first appeared on a copper coin struck at Newburg, New York State, where there was a private mint. The pieces struck are dated 1786. In 1787 the motto appeared on several types of the New Jersey coppers, also on a very curious gold doubloon, or sixteen-dollar piece, coined by a goldsmith named Brasher. It was there put 'Unum E Pluribus.' Only four of these pieces are known to be extant and they are very valuable. One of them, in possession of the mint, is supposed to be worth over $1,000. When Kentucky was admitted, in 1791, it is said copper coins were struck, with 'E Pluribus Unum.' They were made in England. The act of Congress of 1792, authorizing the establishment of a Mint and the coinage of gold, silver and copper, did not prescribe this motto, nor was it ever legalized. It was placed on gold coins in 1796, and on silver coins in 1798. It was constantly used thereafter until 1831, when it was withdrawn from the quarter-dollar of new device. In 1834 it was dropped from gold coins to mark the change in the standard fineness of the coin. In 1837 it was dropped from the silver coins, marking the era of the revised Mint Code. It has been thought proper to restore it, recently, to our new silver dollar, without any special sanction of law, although the expression is one very proper for our coin."

POETRY.

Come.

JOHN L. WISCH.

Hark, humble Nazarene!
Wilt thou our eyes have never seen,
Look'd for, longed for fast these been.

Bridegroom of the waiting bride—
She whom thou hast purified
By the blood from out thy side.

Come, in answer to her prayer
Robe her in thy raiment fair!
Let her in thy glory share.

Sweetly as the morning light,
Ever true through the shades of night,
Come in splendor to our sight.

Come with glory, and with grace;
Let us to thy heav'nly place;
There to see thy smiling face.

Yes, the glories of that day!
When the mortal puts away
From the spirit's pure fair ray.

Hasten, Lord, to us and free
The house for spirit's thrall,
Purge out the mortal all.

Then in yond to love and be,
In the freedom of the free;
In eternal harmony.

Through the age of ages long,
Join me with the holy throng;
Chorusing the heavenly song.

There I see the storm-free sky,
In the new earth paradise;
Wondrous scenes shall greet our eyes.

Zion and the Salvation of Israel.

"—and I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory." Isa. xlvi. 13.

From a careful and unbiased consideration of this passage of Scripture, together with some others to which we shall refer presently, it would seem to indicate that in that glorious future age unto which we are fast approaching that the blessed God had purposed to inaugurate a method of salvation for man entirely different from any other heretofore introduced as yet, and that the human feature of that economy of the redemption of men would be that they would be saved no. by faith so much as now, but by sight; that is, that they would not be saved so much by internal and invisible agencies as by external and visible agencies. You will notice that the expression or rather prediction,—"and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced," Zech. xii. 10. We shall find here, that this looking upon the Messiah at his second appearing on the part of the Jews results in their belief on him unto their salvation as the context makes clear; and their salvation by sight here at this time was obviously pointed out centuries ago, in the cases of Thomas and Paul. John xx. 24–29, Acts ix. 1 Cor. xv. 8. The expression, "as one born out of due time," i. e. before the time, indicates the way and manner in which his brethren according to the flesh will be converted. These evidents are samples of how the Jews are to be brought in.

It may be well here to notice the terms which are used in this promise of Jehovah: Salvation, Zion and Israel. We shall all agree perhaps on the meaning of the first expression, that it means being redeemed from the effects of sin, saved from ruin and death, a deliverance from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. The meaning of the second expression Zion, is much controverted by theologians as to its true meaning and application. The popular application is to the Church, and the worst of all is, it is made to mean visible and popular organizations, the vast corporate bodies, which secure the civil arm for their protection;—the whole of Sectdom, which we are pleased to style "the great Diana of the Ephesians," a part and parcel of mystical Babylon,—"the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth" of which we read. Rev. xvii. There are places in the word where Zion is used to designate the true Church or people of God, and where the term may so very properly be applied. The context of these passages or places where these terms are found, will always enable us to determine in what sense we should understand them, whether general, local, spiritual, figurative or literal. That the latter is the sense in which we should understand the term in our text is obvious.

At the time this prophecy was uttered heathen idolatry was very prevalent, each nation having its "gods many" which they manufactured as in the chapter before us we have so graphically described, and which they worshiped with no little reverence and respect, in their respective localities where they have "set him in his places;" and wherever that place may be, there the devotees must resort in order to do them homage and to find deliverance from their various grievances. Dagon, perhaps, was one of the most popular of these gods of the heathen, set up in Ashdod long before the utterance of this prophecy. I Sam. v. It is strange what a hold upon the affections of those poor heathen these image gods had, and how prone the children of Israel were toward offering them service. And what a snare they always proved to be to them. so predisposed ever is the human mind to seek after the visible which their corporal natures alone recognize, though it be found in an image as vile and hideous in form as can be made, and to whom they may cry, like Baal's prophets of old, with all their might, (1 Kings xviii. 26, 27,) "yet can he not answer nor save him out of his trouble," while they wholly overlook the invisible and ever-living God who can save to the uttermost, whose "counsel shall stand" and who "will do all his pleasure."

It seems to have been the most difficult task devolving upon the leaders of God's people to keep them from running after strange gods. No sooner is Moses' back turned to ascend the mount and commune with God than the people at once make a golden calf and begin tossing about of their deliverance from Egypt, attributing their relief from bondage to this image (Exo. xxxii.). And hence I would say, by way of gentle admonition and for the benefit of the present generation, that there is just as much idolatry and promotion of it by the so-called christian nations to day as there was with Israel in the days of which we speak; for although it was said of Israel and Judah,—"according to the number of thy cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem, have ye set up altars to that shameful thing; even altars to burn incense unto Baal." (Jer. xi. 13); and although the heathen nations had their almost countless gods of every conceivable form, name, size and color, ranging from an ant to an elephant, from a dwarf to a giant, yet I do not see that christendom is any better off in this respect to-day than they were, or than the heathen nations are now. There are great allowances to be made for the heathen nations, while there is none to be made for the so-called christian. If covetousness or selfishness is idolatry, and I think God's word stigmatizes it as such. (Eph. v. 5; Col. iii. 5), then I think that Christendom can present a great army numbering many more perhaps than the great army of the dry-boned ones of Ezekiel in the valley of vision; for it would seem that these nations were given to this passion without restraint. Where we might count on one as a worshiper of the true and living God, a thousand are devoted to the undivided service of the "almighty dollar!" and what renders it still less excusable for these civilized and enlightened nations is that they have set up their idols in their hearts and hypocritically feared the Lord, while they have served these other gods. Ezek. xiv. 3; 2 Kings xvii. 33.

Should the Lord Jesus visit our world again as in the days of his flesh, it would be no stretch of imagination to believe that he would find the so-called christian temples, their priests and devotees, in no better condition than he found the Jewish temple, priests and people; and his first step would be as then, to clean them all out and reinstate the primitive gospel with such additions as circumstances might require, which would at once abolish all sects and denominations, take away the many names of Baal, forbidding the Canaanite forever more a place in the house of the Lord. Hos. ii. 17; Zech. xiv. 21.

Excuse these slight digressions, but I am anxious to make an impression here in urging this point, as it is deeply important, to enable us men from "the snare of the fowler," lest ye be carried away with the giddy multitude who keep holiday (Psa. xci. 3; xlii. 4.), the sum and substance of all their religion consisting in this. From such a delusive hope may the Lord deliver us.

We return with the repetition, that wherever these heathen idiots were set up there the poor benighted ones supposed was deliverance; so, as an offset and in contradistinction to this the mighty one of Jacob establishes his places or place of deliverance. It may change its location betimes or become movable, as with the tabernacle in the wilderness, but Zion and Jerusalem are the most notable places of which the bible speaks. It has invariably proved so in the past. Zion has been the stronghold and impregnable to the enemy when God's people were found in the way of obedience. It is memorable in the sacred annals for the numerous victories achieved there, and though it has been desolated, pillaged, "ploughed as a field" and trodden down of the Gentiles for many centuries past, and the harps of its people have been suspended in mournful silence upon the willows along Babylon's dark streams; yet the night of Israel's captivity is well nigh spent, and the morning of his deliverance is about to break with ineffable resplendence in the eastern skies,—when those silent harps will be attuned anew with the music of a new song, to be sung in the land of Judah, the burden of which will be, "We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks. Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in." Isa. xxvi. 1, 2. And when that day is ushered in, Zion will arise and shine; and the glory of the Lord shall be seen upon her, illuminating her towers, battlements and palaces with the beautiful and genial light of the celestial spheres; and the Gentiles shall come, being attracted toward that light, and kings to the brightness of its rising. Isa. lx. 1–3. Here is where the Shekinah glory after the lapse of ages will again return to Jerusalem and Zion. Eze. x. 18; xi. 23. These references mark when the glory departed, while the return of that same declarative and visible glory is definitely marked by this same prophet in chapter xliii, which we find is subsequent to the finishing of the temple described in the three preceeding chapters. This is the same glory that is to be manifested also in in the building up of Zion, as it is said, "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory. Psa. cii. 16.

We remark: Zion has a remarkable historic record in the word, a place of hallowed memories and of many wonderful transactions both in the political and ecclesiastical history of this world; and is the scene of many deeds in connection with the Church of God and of his dealings with his people and the surrounding nations. But whatever of interest Zion may have attained on the page of sacred history, it is nothing when compared to her destiny as portrayed on the prophetic page. Her past has been marvelous but her future glory eclipses in glory all her past. In the word of God Zion is assigned the centre and seat of the future and incoming government that is to rule the world in righteousness. Jehovah has chosen it as the place of his residence during the millennial age; where he will appear in visible manifestation, and where the Lord Jesus is to be enthroned as the King of kings and Lord of lords. It is the most favored spot on earth, "beautiful for situation." Psa. cxxxii. 13–18; ii. 6; xlviii. 2; i. 2. There the glory of the Lord shall rest "as a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night," rendering it a place of refuge. Isa. xl. 5. There the name of the Lord is yet to be declared in such a way and manner as never before. Psa. cii. 21. We read: "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered; for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance as the Lord hath said." Joel ii. 32; compare third chapter, verses 16–21. Where has the Lord promised this? In our text and numerous other places, as in Oba. verse 21. "And saviors (or the deliverer) shall come up on Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau; and the kingdom shall be the Lord's." "And the Redeemer shall come to Zion." Isa. lix. 20. That this and the other passages has reference to the future of Zion, the Apostle Paul quoting it in Rom. xi. 26, makes clear. And so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written: "There shall come out of Zion the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness (or blindness) from Jacob, i. e. Israel. The returning of the Lord to Zion must of course be preparatory step to making Zion a place of deliverance, or where salvation can be found Zech. viii. 3.

There are numerous passages which I would like to call attention to in this connection, but should I attempt so to do it would swell this article to such proportions as that the limits of our paper might not warrant it a place; but will the patient reader please consult Credenden under the word Zion, and he will be surprised to find the number of times it is spoken of in God's word, and that the most of these places all relate to her glorious future. It would seem that here the Sun of the millennial age was to arise and set, here the glory is to be revealed so that finally all flesh will behold; here the Lord Jesus is to return. Isa. xxiv. 23; here the law is to go forth and the word of the new economy unto the ends of the earth. Isa. ii. 3; here the nations that are saved are to assemble and pay homage to the great King. Psa. cii. 21, 22; Zech. viii. 20–22; xiv. 16; here the redeemed are to be gathered. Matt. viii. 11; Heb. xii. 22. They shall come with songs of praise and with joy upon their heads and in their hearts. Isa. li. 11; Jer. xxxi. 12. "And I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on the Mount Zion and with him a hundred and forty-four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven as the voice of many waters and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps, and they sang as it were a new song before the throne." Rev. xiv. 1-3. Hallelujah, amen!

"And I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory."

Admitting that the term Israel signifies a prevailer with God as in the case of Jacob. Gen. xxii. 28; and that we may be entitled to a change of our name by way of distinction for the reason that we may prevail—overcome, yet that does not militate in the least against the fact of the natural descendants of Jacob and his brethren being designated by that name, as the Scriptures uniformly call them by such name. We have no authority from the New Testament to call the followers of Christ Israel; but we have to call them Christians, as they were first called such at Antioch. Acts xi. 26; Gentiles invariably after their conversion to God were called Christians; but the natural descendants of Abraham after their conversion still retained the name Israel, as in the case of Nathaniel, Paul and others. John i. 47; Phil. iii. 5. The one hundred and forty-four thousand yet to be sealed and gathered out from the twelve tribes as a first installment still retain the name Israel. The fact of their being brought in by the zeal of the living God through the "angel ascending from the east," which will prove the most expeditious, authoritative and perfect mode of salvation hitherto brought to bear upon the race, does not take away or destroy their original name given by their ancestry. They are still Israel, and always will be. (R v. vii.) The simple fact—though it be an important one—of a man being converted to God does not destroy that man's identity neither as respects his name, country, color, kindred, nor sex; he will always possess these though he may have other titles added by way of distinction.

It seems to me that I shall always be known as William Shepherd, of the state of New Jersey, of the United States of America, though I may have little to boast of in that respect, and I shall be more fully identified and known from these circumstances throughout all future ages.

Jews will be Jews and Gentiles will be Gentiles all the time, whatever moral change they may pass through. They may put off the old man and put on the new man, but retain forever all else but sin and its deformities. The fact that we read "they are not all Israel that are of Israel," and that "he is not a Jew which is one outwardly," does not annihilate either, but leaves them intact. And when the apostle is making these statements that are so much distorted and misunderstood by many (who are trying to sustain a theory that has no Scripture standing), he is saying no more in other words than that "they are not all Christians that are of Christendom," "they are not all Christians neither who are Christians outwardly, or they are not all Christians who profess Christianity." This is just the idea that the apostle would have us to understand, and nothing more. So that the Israel here means the natural posterity of the twelve patriarchs, which consists of the two houses—both the house of Judah and the house of Israel. And this salvation which is to be placed in Zion is especially for the restoration and salvation of both "the dispersed of Judah" and "the outcast of Israel;" not but what others, such as the left of the nations that have not heard of Jehovah's fame nor seen his glory (Isa. lxvi. 19), may also be called to enjoy the benefits of this new plan of redemption. We hold that it will be for all people to participate, but especially for Israel. Isa. xxv. 6; see iv. 1–5. We must not suppose that the force of these invitations, and others of a similar character with which the Scriptures abound, are all to be expended and filled out in the present gospel age. No, this is only like the glimmering light of a star to the full blaze of the sun when its fulness shall come, when the everlasting gospel will be proclaimed by God's own ministry, in the new age, which will be ushered in in God's own time, and which is nigh at hand. Hallelujah!

The words of our text contemplate a work yet in the near future, and in that work God will be glorified; even as in the salvation of Israel is his glory. Notwithstanding Israel hath gone astray, and polluted himself, yet God will yet bring him back, will yet glorify himself in Israel, Isa. xliv. 23; xlix. 3; Ezek. xxviii. 22, for "he delighteth in mercy," and "will not always chide." "For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee." He will perform the truth to Jacob and the mercy to Abraham, which he hath sworn unto the fathers from the days of old. Micah vii. 18–20. Every succeeding age has been marked with a step in advance of the preceding. This present one went far beyond the Jewish age in light and knowledge: "The ministration of the spirit . . . (is) glorious, but as this so far excelled the glory of the Mosaic economy, so the age to come will more than excel in glory the present, which is about to close, having accomplished its purpose. 2 Cor. iii. 7-12. But praise the Lord! while the Sun of this age is about to sink beneath the western horizon, it will arise with renewed strength in the oriental splendors of its seven-fold light (Isa. xxx. 26), beautifully illuminating "the dark places of the earth," baptizing the world with a flood of dazzling glory. Hallelujah! Nuts. xiv. 21; Ezek. xliii. 3.

In view of this glory and the ineffable splendors of the coming age which is about to be ushered in, when the sunshine of God's glory shall cover the earth as the waters cover the mighty deep, should we stand unmoved? Should we be indifferent? But should it not rather prompt us to redouble our diligence in the work of the Lord that we may be steadfast and immovable, that all of our affairs should be regulated and carried out to this end and with a view to the coming glory. We have but a few short hours yet to work; then let us work more heartily than ever, knowing that the dark night of this dispensation is far spent, and the bright day of redemption, and God's brighter glory, is at hand. Let us toil on then, and work, walk, watch and pray with acceptance to God and to Christ, so that we may enjoy an "unction from the holy one" day by day; so that we may stand free in Christ, who is our life, and know of that salvation from sin which makes us one with him by the same spirit which makes him one with the Father; so that when God shall act salvation in Zion for Israel his glory, we may then and there be the happy recipients of his more abundant grace (Eph. ii. 7), and be permitted to participate in that august and redundant glory that shall never end. Amen.

There are parts of California where the beasts of the forest exist in their primitive glory. Panthers and lions recently made a descent from their mountain home upon some fine and costly Angora goats belonging to a farmer of Carpentaria, and left only six out of twenty-two.

DIED.

LEDERER—At New York City, Feb. 23, 1875, Gideon R. Lederer, for more than twenty years a missionary to the Jews in New York City.

Many readers will remember him as the editor of "Nathaniel, or, The Israelite Indeed," a monthly publication, bravely sustained during many years of financial discouragements, which caused its discontinuance.

Mr. Lederer was a Hebrew, born in Pesth, Hungary, in 1801. His father was a Rabbi, and educated his son for the same position. After some experience as a Rabbi, the son became disgusted with the Mishna and the Talmud, resigned his position and engaged in business. At length he was led to accept the crucified Jesus as Israel's glorious Messiah, and conferred him publicly as his personal Savior. A Scotch missionary society employed the young Hebrew as a missionary to the Jews in Hungary, and he traversed the country as lay preacher and distributer of Bibles until about 1849, when the influence of the Jesuits arrested his work, and he removed with his family to London, and soon afterward to the United States of America. In the employ of the New York City Mission, his work was chiefly among his own people. His hearty sympathy with them and devotion to their welfare, won their respect and confidence, and they opened to him their houses, and in many cases their hearts, as he taught them out of Moses and the prophets, should it them that Christ must needs have suffered all these things, and entered into his glory; and that His Jesus, whom he preached unto them is Christ. His magazine, "Nathaniel," read by many a Jew and Gentile, exalted Jesus of Nazareth as the world's life-lecturer, while it explained many Hebrew customs and obscure texts of Scripture. His associate missionaries can testify to his Christian zeal, faith and patience, under all the assaults of opponents, false friends, and the infirmities of age. Continuing his pastoral visits almost to the day of his rest, he endeavored to fulfill the Master's command, "Occupy till I come."

Among his spiritual children are several Hebrew preachers of the Gospel, one of these is Bishop Shereshewsky, of the American Protestant Episcopal Mission in China, and translator of the Bible.

Brother Lederer believed the kingdom of God on earth to be nigh at hand; and he lived to see the beginning of the restoration of Israel.

"Soldier of Christ, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
And while eternal ages run,
Share in the Master's joy."

POETRY.

The Word of Life.

TO S. A. C.

Ah! the day of Christ is coming,
Hist, you weary tolling one!
See! His fingers touch the heavens,
Soon your tolling will be done.

Soon, the message you are bearing,
You will bear to men no more;—
Past and done your weary labor;—
Reached the everlasting shore.

Then, rejoicing in his presence,
You will press the hands of men
Who have heard from you the tidings—
Won—through you—the diadem.

Not in vain the word is sounding,
It is life to such as hear;
Life, that never has an ending;
Life, with never thought of fear.

Hold it forth! for time is closing!
Glory lights the eastern hills.
Zion's light way stretcheth onward;
Soon will burst the singing rills!

Hold it forth! the world is mourning!
Hearing its countless dead away.
Pallid faces hide in sackcloth—
Tokens sure of coming day!

COMMUNICATIONS.

Man's Responsibility Under the Christian Dispensation.

In the final day, the world will be judged by Christ and his Gospel upon this principle, "to whom much is given, of them much will be required." The man who had but "the one talent," was condemned in the parable for not improving it. These with other passages of similar import, plainly teach that God requires a diligent use and a proper improvement of the means of grace placed within our reach.

The willful neglecters of these means cannot, in that day, avail themselves of the plea of ignorance. The inquiry I wish to make is this: the extent of man's accountability in this christian dispensation, after the Holy Spirit was poured out, and the Gospel was preached.

Christ said if he went away, the Father would "send His Spirit," which should convince the world of sin of righteousness and of judgment—"of sin because they believe not on me." Paul says "there is none other name given than that of Jesus," whereby men can be saved; that they must hear before they can believe. Further, he said to the Athenians, that prior to Christ's day, "the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent. Because he hath appointed a day in which he will "judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead."

By putting these passages together, with others of like import this fact is taught, that after the Holy Spirit was poured out and Christ had been preached, "that all men everywhere" that heard of his name, were required to repent and believe in him as their Savior—else they would be condemned. This condemnation would cause them to come short of the promised eternal life, and bring them under the power of the second death which would be eternal in its results. In all this, there is no allusion to the sin of "ignorance" of the past or present ages. This is a question by itself.

The inquiry now arises as to how extensive has the name of Jesus been proclaimed in this dispensation, and what will be the results of that proclamation to the nations of the earth now in existence, or others that have enjoyed like opportunities. Let us see.

By the introduction into the calendar of the world's history, of the birth of Christ, as the great event from which all other events are to be dated, and by inserting B. C., or A. D. into that calendar a broad confession of faith is made of a savior born at the time and for the purpose revealed in the Bible. The observance of December 25th as Christmas is a confession of faith as to the day of his birth; this is definite time. The error of four years does not alter that confession. It only proves that the arrangers of that chronology, were (like us), imperfect in knowledge, but honest in their conclusions.

Again: By following the example of the apostles, and in the keeping of the first day of the week as a day of worship instead of the seventh, confession is made in the belief that Christ rose from the dead according to the Scriptures on that day. All who adopt this arrangement in their every day affairs of life are indorsers (whether ignorant of its real import or not) of this universal form of confessing Christ according to the Scriptures. The question now suggested is this: those who have this knowledge, is it not sufficient to hold them responsible for an improvement of this means of knowledge sufficient for salvation? Those who neglect to follow this light, can they be guiltless in the final day?

A further thought. The confession of the resurrection of Christ by this change of the Sabbath, is based upon the Bible record of that event, in manner and in form there revealed.

Let us see the testimony of the inspired apostle upon this subject. 1 Cor. xv, 13. "But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain and your faith is also vain. Yea and we are found false witness of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised." Mark: This testimony makes the resurrection of the dead the predicate of the resurrection of Christ. Hence if the dead are not resurrected, the testimony of the apostles as touching the resurrection of Christ is false—they are found false witnesses "of God." This point may be stated according to Bible testimony, thus:

If there is no future harvest, there can be no first-fruits of that harvest, consequently the offering of a sheaf of the first-fruits of the barley harvest under the law, which pointed to the resurrection of Christ, and had its fulfillment in that event, is all a mistake. The united testimony of Moses and the prophets, of Christ and his apostles, is all falsified by the assumption that there will be no future resurrection or raising up of the dead, and that too just as literally as was the resurrection of Christ, the first-fruits.

Question:—Those who acknowledge the resurrection of Christ by the change of the Sabbath; do they not confess their belief in a literal resurrection of the dead according to the Scriptures? This testimony is hard to go back upon. Its rejection, and the substitution of a spirit resurrection at death, as is taught by Orthodoxy, is making void God's most holy word.

Again: In the resurrection of Christ, we have the beginning of the new creation, which secures the reproduction of the entire race of man from the Adamic death, and also the restoration of the earth to its Edenic excellency, which will be a second Genesis, when "all things are made new."

In this light we can readily see the propriety of the church in following the example of the apostles in meeting together for worship on the first day, as is and has been done. God has most evidently accepted and blessed this measure to the accomplishment of the results of a world-wide confession of his revealed purpose of a resurrection and "the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all of God's holy prophets since the world began." In this he has compelled (though unwittingly) the christian world to confess and endorse his own revealed purposes.

Question:—Has God had any hand in bringing around this arrangement and this confession; or has it all been wrought by the adversary, under the supervision of the Papacy?

If God has directed, He himself has approved of the continued use of the first day of the week, as a day of worship, instead of a continued "resting" on the seventh day, as under the law of Moses (or of God) after Israel's exode from Egypt. In this light I fail to see how it is possible for those who observe the Christian Sabbath as a day of worship, to be guilty of "worshipping the beast or his image," or of this being the mark of the beast, as is alleged by some of our good brethren.

Neither can I see any force in the assumption that in turning back to the law and the keeping of the seventh day, is the victory over earthly governments (ecclesiastical and civil), and secures the "seal of the living God in their forehead." All this looks much more like the blinding work of the Adversary, through the agency of erring mortals, than the other.

May the good Lord open all hearts and all eyes to the real truth in this matter is my earnest prayer.

P ALLING.

Norwalk, O.

P. S.—The keeping of the first day of the week as a day of worship by the Church is a confession of faith in the New Testament Scriptures.

The Kingdom.

Jesus began at Galilee, and traveled through every city proclaiming the glad tidings of the kingdom of God. This kingdom that he preached about was none other than the restored kingdom of Israel of which he himself was to be the king. Many believed on him and were anxious to raise him at once to the throne, and when Jesus perceived that they would make him king, he departed again into a mountain himself alone. The time had not yet arrived for this glorious consummation. We may learn the nature of the kingdom from our Lord's preaching. The people could scarcely be restrained from using physical force to accomplishing his claims to the kingdom of Israel.

When we remember the alarm created among the Chief Priests and Pharisees when they saw that multitudes believed on him, and recognized him as the legitimate heir of David's throne, and when they held a council and said, if we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him, and the Romans will come and take away both our place and nation, can we suppose that they would have been alarmed if they had believed that Christ's claims to a throne and kingly honors were to a throne and kingdom in the skies? But we can readily see cause for alarm if a large proportion of the nation should acknowledge allegiance to this new king, as it would result in their ultimate separation from the Roman yoke, and the establishment of a separate kingdom, and the Romans would certainly come, and take away their place and nation as soon as they should discover any tendency in the people towards throwing off their allegiance. Consequently, we must conclude that Christ taught that he himself was the one whose right it was to reign and sit upon the the throne of his father David, and it is manifest that his disciples so understood him. This hope Christ built up and encouraged. When Peter said to him, "Behold we have forsaken all and what shall we have therefore?" Jesus says, "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

Supposing any minister of our day should be asked concerning the reward that should be given the follower of Christ, what reply would he make? Would he not point up to heaven above and declare that at death his soul would enter there and rejoice forevermore? Yet Christ taught no such doctrine nor did he propose any such hope to any one of his followers, but he did promise them a position in that restored kingdom of Israel in that day of regeneration that was coming. This was the kingdom they were looking for, and of which he was to be the king; hence the promised reward was in harmony with his teachings, with their own hope, with every line of prophetic testimony, and with Israel's hope for hundreds of years.

The only question of doubt was whether he was the promised Christ; hence they said, "How long dost thou make us to doubt? if thou be the Christ, tell us plainly." Jesus answered, "I have told you and ye believed me not." However many believed on him, and were going to take him by force, and make him a king. When he went to Jerusalem the last time previous to his crucifixion, they spread their garments and branches of the palm tree in his way, crying out, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

It was but a short time till he was arraigned before Pontius Pilate by his enemies who said, "We found this man perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Caesar, saying that he himself was king." They brought no charge of immorality against him; the only charge was, that he claimed to be a king. Pilate examined him carefully, and sought three times to release him. When questioned, he neither denied nor evaded the point, but confessed.

"Art thou the king of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest." And again—"Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world that I should bear witness unto the truth." Pilate said, "I have found no cause of death in him; I will therefore chastise him, and let him go." But the Jews said, "If thou let this man go, thou art not Caesar's friend; whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Caesar."

Here was proof conclusive that Jesus had proclaimed himself as king, and that his kingdom was of such a nature as to affect Caesar's interests, and that, therefore, it was to be established upon the earth. If Christ had preached for three and a half years that the kingdom was in heaven, and that the souls of dead men could enter there, and that those Jews who had become his followers would become, after death, his subjects in a spiritual country "beyond the bounds of time and space," is any one insane enough to conclude that Pilate could have supposed that such a kingdom could have, in any way, interfered with Caesar's interests? Surely not; common sense would teach us better. The conclusion then must be that neither Jesus nor his apostles ever taught that the kingdom is in the skies, and that they never preached any other kingdom than the restored kingdom of Israel. The Jews had no faith in any other kingdom.

The point at issue was as to whether Jesus was the Messiah. When Pilate wrote his declaration in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, and placed it over the cross—"Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews"—the chief priests besought him to change it saying, "Write not king of the Jews; but that he said, I am king of the Jews." The chief priests and scribes mocking said, "He saved others himself he can not save. Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross that we may see and believe." But he died while those that had ministered to him stood weeping and astonished. Such a tragedy was unlooked for. The disciples had expected that he would assume kingly power. Knowing nothing of the predicted sufferings, they had looked for the redemption of Israel from their enemies. A dark and trying hour had come upon them, which tried their faith. They seemed now to doubt the claims of Jesus. After his resurrection when two were journeying to Emmaus, and Jesus, being unknown to them, overtook them, they opened their hearts to him saying "We trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." This expression revealed their disappointed hopes. For forty days he spoke unto his disciples concerning the kingdom of God, and enlightened them on many points about which they had previously conversed. But he never told them to prepare for, or to fix their hopes on, a kingdom in the skies instead of the kingdom to be restored to Israel.

Had he done so, it would have falsified his own promise to his apostles that they should "sit on twelve thrones ruling the twelve tribes of Israel." As proof that Jesus had not divested them of this hope, we find them asking him just before his ascension, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Jesus did not say you are mistaken; my kingdom is in the skies; no; but he said, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father has put in his own power. But ye shall receive the power after the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth."

The Apostle Peter, on the day of Pentecost, preached concerning the throne, "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit upon his throne; He seeing this before spoke of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell (hades), neither did his flesh see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore, being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed abroad this, which ye now see and hear. For David is not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool. Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made this same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ."

Again this same apostle says "And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." But when will Jesus return to establish his throne and kingdom is now the question which we shall endeavor to answer.

"One Body and One Spirit."—Is this a Mistake or an Essential Truth to each One?

To my apprehension it is one among other manifold and kindred assertions of absolute and fundamental truth. Nay, more, it includes us all who are obedient believers in Christ, or else is not our faith that we are heirs of promise a presumption, and our hope a delusion? But we claim to take the promise as ours as really as did believers 1800 years ago, and need the same spirit.

If the end, Matt. xxiv. 14; xxviii. 20, and the second coming, and the withdrawal of the spirit and like prophetic events transpired about 1800 years in the past, then surely we are not in the one body and may have no ground to expect the one spirit! Nay, then we may not please God, nor confess Christ, nor be filled with the spirit!

Our amiable and gifted brother, S. H. Reeve, does not need that any one quote a catalogue of texts to him. But as he has given his thought that some are too literal, so it seems proper to add a further thought in all courtesy, and in hope of a more perfect understanding of the doctrine.

1. Good fruit is always the product of a good tree. Matt. xii. 33. Of course, the fruits of the spirit things of the spirit—in us not proceed from the spirit which he hath given us. 1 John iii. 24; iv. 13; Rom. viii. 9; Gal. iv. 6, 6; 2 Cor. ii. 12-16. Or is this too literal?

2. The head must connect with and control the members of the body; for "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit." It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing, etc. Hence, "the helmet of salvation and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God," belong together.

3. Here, Brother L., is the authorized discrimination. We take the word as spirit and law, the letter killeth, but the spirit gives life. No honor to the Holy Spirit can equal that given to and by its word. On the one hand we must not [illegible] so literal the word as to [illegible] which is spoken Father, Son and Holy Spirit—the baptismal formula; also in the apostolic benediction, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you?" No, no; there is no error here. This is the very truth of the word itself. In this use of the word, we have the mind of Christ. The word and spirit coalesce, concur and harmonize. Hence, it seems perilous to arouse here the least antagonism; for "what God has joined together let no man put asunder" by darkening counsel. Can the sword of the spirit be turned against the hand of him who wields it? No, indeed.

4. The subject points of truth reach into the invisible and eternal, quite beyond our apprehension, except by faith. Thus, by faith we understand how the worlds were framed, that is, by believing the record, Gen. 1. Thus, by faith we accept the word that reveals the everlasting God, whom no man by searching, can find out. Job xi. 7; Psa. cxxxix. 1-16. We read of "the hand of God, the finger of God, the power of God, the grace of God, the word of God, the wisdom of God and the spirit of God!" And to faith these all adjust themselves easily, just as the one orb of day distributes its beaming rays on our clouded sky to make out the one revered rainbow of covenant-promise! Gen. ix. 12, 13.

5. Now, let me ask, is it wise to exalt one of the seven primal colors in disparagement of another? or is it well to set treat one of the seven-fold emittes that sustain our faith in the one body and one spirit, and so combine to set forth the galaxy of glories that beam forth from the glorious gospel of the blessed God? Surely, not.

6. My reverence for the word forbids that I covertly and indirectly cut out the spirit from the blessed name into which we are all baptized, or the formula of apostolic benediction by which we are comforted concerning our faith in the divine word, as to the unsearchable riches of grace therein.

7. Please read, "What man knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so, the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God! 1 Cor. ii. 9-16. If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his!"

To close and crown this note on this primal truth, I ask all those who see danger in it, if there is not the spirit of truth and the spirit of error?—the spirit of God and the spirit of the world? Yes, of course, there is. Now, as Jesus is the head of the body—the church, and as all its members are baptized and made to drink into one spirit, let us ask which, or what spirit are we of? 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13; Luke ix. 55. Answer: Surely, the spirit, which is of God! Is it safe, then, to raise a question of this? Shall the dependent member cut itself away from the head of the body, or from the spirit that animates it? No, says faith; by no means. Hence, it is for your life! We must hold the head and grieve not the spirit by which we are sealed. Amen.

Submitted in loving confidence by your fellow helper to the truth.

"The National or the Lost Tribes."

This is the title of a book published in 1851, by Harper & Bros., New York, and written by Dr. A. Grant, a missionary of the A. B. C. F. M., who returned home in company with Mar Yohanan, (St. John,) a Nestorian bishop. The visits of these brethren to many of our churches, with the publication of Dr. Grant's book, aroused a deep missionary interest in the welfare of the Nestorians, the remnant of that grand old church, who received the gospel from Thomas, the Apostle of the circumcision. They maintained and spread abroad the Christian faith for 1,000 years, observing also many Hebrew customs, not inconsistent with Christianity, but aiding on the contrary to preserve their faith and their race unsullied, and proving the truth of the Nestorians, claim to be "sons of Israel." The most important of these Mosaic laws forbids intermarriages with other races, whether Jews, Mohammedans, or Papists. These faithful people, like the Waldenses of Italy, who also are said to be of Hebrew descent, found a safe refuge, during the middle ages, in the mountains of Assyria where their forefathers were located after the revolt under Jeroboam. There a large number of them still remain, awaiting the [illegible] to return to Palestine, over the highway, see Isaiah xi, 16, and xix. 23, which the English are about to build from the Mediterranean Sea to the Euphrates Valley, and eastward to India.

Whoever wishes to find the ten tribes, must begin with their captivity in Assyria, whence many of them have been scattered abroad into all the countries from which they are to be gathered into Palestine.

The Nestorians claim descent from Naphtali, the Afghans from Benjamin, through King Saul, the Saxons, says Wilson, on "Our Israelitish Origin," from Isaiah, and the Jews from Judah and Levi.

Let us admire the wisdom and love that sent the Israelites into captivity, not only as a punishment, but in order to preserve them from the fatal blindness of the Jews, who rejected their King to their own destruction; while the ten tribes scattered in Assyria and many other countries, instructed the nations in their ancient faith, and many of them gladly hearing the Gospel from the Apostles and other Jews, "Became obedient unto the faith," a light to lighten the Gentiles.

Every Bible student should read Dr. Grant's "Nestorians," which throws a flood of light upon the history and people of Israel and the church.

Habit is a cable. We weave a thread of it every day, and at last we cannot break it.

Man has created by writing an artificial memory, more faithful, more durable, more credible than natural memory.

As to be perfectly just is an attribute of the Divine nature, to be so to the utmost of our abilities is the glory of man.

Man purely give me,
More strength to overcome;
More freedom from earth vision,
More longing for home;
More fit for the kingdom,
More used would I be;
More like God and holy,
More, Saviour, like Thee.

W. M. Punshon: When I think of the agencies which are ceaselessly at work to make this bad world better, I am thankful that I live.

It is, after all, the person who stakes the least, who loses most. In the affections this is wholly true. He who risks nothing loses everything.

Wherever you go, endeavor to carry with you a sense of God's presence, his holiness, and his love; it will preserve you from a thousand snares.

Hooker: Every good and holy desire, though it may lack the form, hath in itself the substance and force of a prayer with God, for he regards as prayer the meanings and sighings of the heart.

Let every dawn of morning be to you as the beginning of life, and every setting of the sun be to you as its close; then let every one of these short lives leave its record of some kindly thing done for others, some goodly strength or knowledge gained for yourself.

Some work in the shadow, and some in the sun;
Some to joy, some in pain; but the Master is one,
Calling all to their tasks, portioning each his reward,
As he counts his toil at the word of his Lord.

Beauty thou art twice blessed; thou blessest the gazer and the possessor. A sweet disposition, a lovely soul, an affectionate nature will speak in the eyes, the lips, the brow, and become the cause of beauty.

As we stand in the midst of the rushing currents of history we hear an inspired voice crying through the confusion and the strife of life—"The night is far spent, the day is hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light."

Oh, golden color of the eventide sun,
Spare me the day a little longer yet!
The tasks to me appointed are not done,
And night flings down her shadows cold and wet.

Richter: Hope is the ruddy morning ray of joy, recollection is its golden tinge; but the latter is wont to sink amid the dews and dusky shades of twilight, and the bright blue day which the former promises breaks indeed, but in another world and with another sun.

Behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow,
Keeping watch above His own.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the incarceration of the Adversary, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

GREAT IMPENDING CRISIS.

Apocalyptic Chart.

J. P. WEETHEE.

The church of God, during the Christian era, has had to contend with the following enemies: 1. Internal, or the apostasy. 2. External, or Paganism, Mohammedanism and Atheism. All these have used the civil arm to oppress the saints. The civil power has been principally the fourth monarchy. If John had a correct view of the persecutors of the true church, they are delineated on his chart. Since the chart is written in symbols, it must contain symbols of these agents. The unity of our subject requires that we follow the chieftain of the apostasy, noting civil agency, so far only, as they are associated. The symbols, required to be examined, are found in Rev. xii., xiii. and xvii. chapters.

The symbol of the fourth Gentile monarchy is a sea monster, with seven heads and ten horns. The position of the crowns denote where the supreme power is located at the transpiring of any noted event. It is, therefore, our chronological table or guide. Civil and ecclesiastical agents have each their appropriate symbols. The sea monster has seven heads, denoting seven administrations, and ten horns, symbolizing his family of kingdoms; the symbols of civil rulers are the beast, his heads and horns; those denoting ecclesiastical bodies, are mouth, dragonic, leopard, and scarlet coats, and the harlot. The church symbols demand our special notice.

The struggles of the church of God with the Pagan priesthood sustained by the fourth monarchy, are painted in the visions of Rev. xii.

The transition age of the Roman empire is brought to view in Rev. xiii. It exchanges the dragonic coat for the leopard. The empire becomes outwardly Christian, though the senate was Pagan.

The first seven Christian emperors were high priests of Paganism. The empire, in its transition age, sustained two religions, and persecuted a third. The period of the passing of the diadem from the head to the horns, we denominate the transition era. During this period the sixth or imperial head, received its deadly wounds, (denoted by the first four trumpets).

Daniel sees the rise, agency, and fall of empires. John sees the struggles of the true and apostate churches under the symbols of a sun-clad woman, and of a drunken harlot.

The sun-clad woman is first persecuted by imperial Rome, in the days of his greatest power. Rev. xii.

In these visions no harlot is seen. The Pagan priesthood instigates the persecutions. They are called the ten Pagan persecutions.

During the breaking up of the empire and rising of the ten kingdoms the conflicts were principally between falling Paganism and the rising apostasy, (harlot). These struggles are described in Rev. xiii.

The judgments of the civil and ecclesiastical powers are recorded in Rev. xvi. and xvii. The xii. chapter we pass without any further notice. The xiii. requires more particular attention. Let us examine. Two classes of symbols (civil and ecclesiastical) are here brought to view.

Symbols of Civil Rulers.—Beasts, (leopard and two-horned,) heads and horns. There are two beasts, seven heads and twelve horns; ten on the one beast, and two on the other. The identity of the leopard with the fourth beast of Dan. vii. is so clear that we shall not attempt to prove it. Daniel names no head, but gives another horn; this horn had eyes and a mouth. A beast may be said to do that which is done by any of its members. Daniel attributes to the little horn the words and actions which John ascribes to the beast. John says it was given to the beast to make war, and Daniel says the horn made war; it was the agent used by the beast. The war agent or the apostate chieftain is, therefore, connected with this beast.

The two-horned beast has some other territory over which to rule. That territory is not Latin; for the Latin beast rules at the same time, and there cannot be two supreme powers on the same territory at the same time. We do not intend, at present, to identify that power denoted by the two-horned beast, but simply to say that it is not the papacy.

Symbols of Ecclesiastical Rulers.—1. The leopard covering is a symbol of church relationship; so of the dragonic and the scarlet. The fourth monarchy was first Pagan, then Pagan and Christian, and finally Papal.

2. The "month" given to it is an adjunct. So is the power to "make war."

3. The "image," verses 14, 15, is a symbol of ecclesiastical rulers. It was made by the authority of the two-horned beast, and for the leopard or Latin beast.

The scarlet covering (Rev. xvii. 3,) denotes the fourth monarchy under Papal rule. The harlot is the Papal hierarchy at the time of its civil supremacy, and just anterior to her judgments. God's national judgments are seen and narrated in chapters xiv., xvi., xvii., xviii., xix.

We have given the history of the Papal apostasy in former numbers. We have here stated those points in John's visions where the same apostasy is brought to view. We are not able to see any feature in the prophetic and historic photographs, not in exact agreement. John saw in vision what are now matters of written history. We do not wish to repeat what we have said, on Dan. vii., relative to the little horn, nor is it necessary to consume any further time in establishing an identity of the chieftains of Daniel and John.

A few general remarks will bring us to Paul's chart of the "man of sin." Time is in the charts of Daniel and John. It denotes the duration of certain agency, the identity of which seems to be admitted. The question which appears to divide us in our expositions (not in our Christian fellowship) is, whether the time is literal or symbolic?

We have been called to teach the demonstrative sciences, and are, therefore, inclined to reject all views that do not carry with them the force of mathematical proof. We, too, should adhere to literal time in visions were we not absolutely driven from that position by plain historic facts, as well as by Divine authority. As there are new readers of THE RESTITUTION, we give some reasons for saying that, in the visions of Daniel and John, time is symbolized.

This law is established by God himself. While we admit that, in Sacred Scriptures, as in other writings, king means king, day means day, door means door, bread means bread, wine means wine, beast means beast, horn means horn, and woman means woman, etc., the question is, Have they no other meaning? Does an image always mean an image when God, by his servants, says image? We know that it does not, for he says that it means something else. See metallic image, Dan. ii.

A woman does not always mean woman, (Rev. xii. 1).

Bread and wine, in the Lord's Supper, mean something else. The Bible is a book of God's thoughts concerning man. The Book is the record of the thoughts—the medium through which the thoughts are seen. It is not the medium that is to meet us, but the thoughts themselves. We want to know what God means when he speaks. The Bible is the book to tell us his mind. The language of that book, when correctly translated, tells us what he means. But the language of the Bible is governed by the same laws that are used to explain other writings. Words generally mean what they say, but often they mean what they do not say. The language of the Bible forms no exception.

A beast, in the Bible, sometimes means a beast, and at other times it means something else. So it may be said of a horn, door, bread and wine, a woman, etc. Now, we say that words expressing time form no exception to the general law of language. Words have a literal and a tropical meaning. It will not do to say that a word is always literal. God has expressed himself in both kinds of language, and we do well to take heed that we do not violate God's own laws of interpretation.

Did God ever make a day stand for a year?

1. The spies "returned from searching the land after forty days." Num. xiii. 25.

"After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, (even) for forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities (even) forty years." Here the divine scale is divided into forty equal parts called days. The chart of their wanderings in the wilderness is constructed on this scale, each division of the scale measuring, in time, one fortieth of the chart, or 360 days. So, also, the spies represented the Jewish people. The spies and their time of searching the land were an exact photograph of the Jewish tribes and their wanderings in the wilderness. Here God himself puts a day for a year. A day, therefore, is not always a day; it is here put for a year.

2. Let us take another divine chart, constructed by a similar scale.

God commanded Ezekiel to do the following: "Lie also upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it; according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it thou shalt bear their iniquity. For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days; so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel. And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days; I have appointed thee each day for a year." Ezek. iv. 4-6. Two scales of equal parts are here used; the one for Israel divided into 390 equal parts, the other for Judah divided into forty equal parts, each part measuring on the charts one year.

3. The Savior's right to be called Messiah, as to the time of his birth, rests upon the year-day interpretation.

"Seventy weeks are determined (cut off) upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy. Know, therefore, and understand (that) from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah, the Prince, (shall be) seven weeks, and three-score and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after three-score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off." Dan. ix. 24, 25.

The time here revealed must extend from the going forth of the command to restore and to rebuild Jerusalem to Messiah the Prince. This space is sixty-nine weeks of years, or four hundred and eighty-three years.

That the Jews generally understood these weeks of years is evident from the fact that they were looking for their Prince when Jesus of Nazareth was born. In this prophecy, therefore, a day stands for a year. If a week means a week in this noted prediction, then the Messiah should have come six years after the edict to restore and rebuild Jerusalem. The prophecy must have failed, or some Jewish high priest must have been intended.

Bishop Lowth, on Isa. xx. 3, has the following: "It is, not probable that the prophet walked uncovered and barefoot three years; his appearing in that manner was a sign that within three years the Egyptians and Cushites should be in the same condition, being conquered and made captives by the king of Assyria. The time was denoted, as well as the event; but his appearing in that manner for three whole years could give no premonition of the time at all. It is probable, therefore, that the prophet was ordered to walk so for three days, to denote the accomplishment of the event in three years; a day for a year, according to the prophetical rule. Num. xiv. 34; Ezek. iv. 6. The words שלש ימים three days, may possibly have been lost out of the text, at the end of the second verse after יחף bar-foot; or, after the same word in the third verse, where, in the Alexandrine and Vatican copies of LXX. and in MSS. Pachom. and I. D. 11, the words τρεις ετη are twice expressed. Perhaps, instead of שלש ימים the Greek translator might read שלש שנים, by his own mistake, or by that of his copy, after יחף in the third verse, for which stands the first τρεις ετη in the Alexandrine and Vatican LXX. and in the two MSS. above mentioned."

Time in two forms is connected with the principal symbolic visions of Daniel and John, the one to denote when the vision is seen; the other is in the vision itself, and is connected with the principal symbolic agents. The latter we call symbolic time, as it is a part of the symbolic chart. Every chart is constructed on the same principle. All parts of the chart are taken from the same scale of equal parts.

All objects must be reduced alike, or they are not true to nature. If a beast symbolizes an empire, the actions of the beast symbolize the acts of the empire, and the life of the beast the duration of the empire. The photograph, or beast, is much less than the empire, and his life, or the duration of his acts, must be diminished to the same ratio.

Put a day for a year, and we have that reduction. We examined this view in a former article, to which we refer those readers who have THE RESTITUTION for 1878.

A few remarks relative to antichrist may not be out of place. The rise of a personal antichrist is anticipated by some or our brethren. We shall not now extend our remarks on this point. It will come under review more particularly when speaking of the events of the seventh vial. A few preliminary thoughts will be stated.

Antichrist—ἀντιχριστος—is used only by John. 1 John ii. 18, 22; iv. 3; 2 Jno. vs. 7. The preposition ἀντι means "in the place of," and "opposed to," and it may be used by John in both senses. This first epistle was written, according to Dr. Lardner, about A. D. 80, and the second about 90 or 91. Soon after the overthrow of the Jewish nation, and the fall of Jerusalem, heretics, such as are described by John, appeared in the church.

The point at issue is this: Does the term ἀντιχριστος mean one particular person? Macknight has the following: "When the apostle mentions these false teachers collectively, he calls them the antichrist, in the singular number, as St. Paul called the false teachers collectively of whom he prophesied, 2 Thess. ii. 3, the man of sin; but when John speaks of these teachers as individuals, he calls them many antichrists, in the plural number."

John says that in his day there were many antichrists. Papacy is against Christ, and in the place of Christ, hence that apostate succession might be called the antichrist.

There have been twenty-four false Christs, and many false prophets, as opposers of Christ.

John uses one expression which causes us to use some caution as to what he calls the antichrist. "He is the antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son." 1 Jno. ii. 22. This indicates an infidel power; and such, we are inclined to think it will be, if future; not any one single personal endowment of supreme power, but rather a national development. National infidelity will constitute the chief element in the final struggle.

No personal chieftain can gather the hostile world to the battle of that great day. The tendency of the world is against it; so are the Scriptures. Three enemies fight against Christ—the dragon, the wild beast and the false prophet. These are evidently civil powers owning the entire earth when Christ appears. The coolest is for the diadem of the whole earth. The metallic image is composed of civil powers. The four beasts of Daniel are civil powers. The little horn has a previous judgment and is overthrown. The false prophet has a civil empire. This triple power contends with Jesus for universal dominion; the stone is victorious, and the mountain fills the whole earth. In our next, and final number, we shall investigate Paul's "man of sin," and compare and identify his chieftain with those of Daniel and John.

SELECTIONS.

Gethsemane.

Lieut. Lynch, of the United States Exploring Expedition to the River Jordan and the Red Sea, in 1848, visited the garden of Gethsemane, about the middle of May. He says:

"The clover upon the ground was in bloom, and altogether the garden, in its aspects and associations, was better calculated than any place I know to soothe a troubled spirit. Eight venerable trees, isolated from the smaller and less imposing ones, which skirt the Mount of Olives, form a consecrated grove. High above, on either hand, towers a very lofty mountain, with the deep, yawning chasm of Jehoshaphat between them. Crowning one of them is Jerusalem, a living city; on the slope of the other is the great Jewish cemetery, a city of the dead.

"Each tree in this grove, cankered and gnarled, and furrowed by age, yet beautiful and impressive in its decay, is a living monument of the affecting scenes that have taken place beneath and around it. The olive perpetuates its elf, and from the root of the dying parent stem, the young tree springs into existence. These are accounted one thousand years old. Under those of the preceding growth; therefore, the Savior was wont to rest: and one of the present may mark the very spot where he knelt and prayed and wept. No cavilling doubt can find entrance here. The geographical boundaries are too distinct and clear for an instant's hesitation. Here the Christian, forgetful of the present, and absorbed in the past, can resign himself to sad, yet soothing meditation. The few purple crimson flowers, growing about the roots of the trees, will give ample food for contemplation—for they tell of the sufferings and the ensanguined death of the Redeemer."

[S. H. Tyng, Jr.]

A Living Christ.

A living Christ is the great need of every sinner. It will not do to tell him alone of the dying Jesus on Golgotha. That does not satisfy every cry of the soul awakened to a sense of condemnation, and writhing under the pressure and power of sin. A dying Christ is undergoing the penalty which he, the Just One, has voluntarily assumed for the unjust. It will not do to point the sinner merely to the body of Christ upon the cross, now pulseless and motionless; for the dead Christ was accursed; the law of God had done its worst, the sword had awaked against God's fellow, and death has been the result. The Christ of the manger, and the Christ upon the cross, are not sufficient for the needs of sinners in respect to their sins, or for saints in relation to their service. We must have a living Lord. We must welcome him coming from the sepulchre. We must watch him ascending the skies; and, with Stephen, we must behold him at the right hand of God, ever living there to further the same purpose for which he came to earth. When he took that glorified form from earth, he placed for our faith a living Christ in the heavens. We can look up to him who is, and was, and is for evermore; before him we bow, in whose intercessory power is all our confidence, from whose smile we gain our present heaven, and in whose actual and unveiled presence we shall know the joy that is unspeakable. To him every soul may come, as to an actual, ever-present friend; and better than all, with the influence and power of his Spirit, He, as a living person, comes to every sinner.

A man that has the love of God in his heart, is like the sun that shines and warms, though it does not speak.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Character dictates destiny.

Repentance is the heart's sorrow.

Trust in God; thy friends may leave thee,
And the heartless world deceive thee.
But he will as ever remain;
Trust him—know'ledge not in vain.

Many have suffered of talking, but few by silence.

Truth has never need of error, and shades add nothing to light.

Four things come not back: the broken word, the sped arrow, the past life, and the neglected opportunity.

To do good to our enemies, may be said to resemble the incense whose aroma perfumes the fire by which it is consumed.

The soil that produces the rankest weeds would by proper care and cultivation produce the richest crops: so will the human heart when regenerated by grace and truth.

As a storm following storm, and wave succeeding wave, give additional hardness to the shell that incloses the pearl, so do the storms and waves of life add force to the character of man.

A man once said to Dr. Kirk: "I am perfect, I have not sinned for five years;" and the Dr. replied: "I am sorry to hear you say that, for I always before had a high idea of perfection."

Sing, my heart, for the day cometh wherein the night shall be no more at all remembered; the clouds shall melt like vapor, and the voice of the mourning and lamentation shall be heard no more forever. Awake and sing!

A great thought is better than a good fortune; and the blessing of it is perpetual. The presence of it in the soul is like converse with an angel. He who has one such guest to dwell with him, will not go abroad for society.

Childhood is like a mirror, catching and reflecting images all around it. Remember that an impious, profane, or vulgar thought, may operate upon a young heart like a careless spray of water thrown upon polished steel, staining it with rust that no after effort can efface.

ASHES OF ROSES.

Soft as the sunset sky
Bright daylight closes
Leaving, when light doth die,
Pale hues that mingling lie,
Ashes of roses.
When Love's warm sun is set,
Love's brightness closes;
Eyes with hot tears are wet,
In hearts that linger yet
Ashes of roses.

—Elaine Goodale.

The faith to which the Scriptures attach such momentous consequences, and ascribe such glorious exploits, is a practical habit, which, like every other, is strengthened and increased by continual exercise. It is nourished by meditation, by prayer, and by the devout perusal of the Scriptures.—Robert Hall.

Sometimes God puts such wonderful sweetness into the doing of or the refraining from some little thing for his sake, that we wonder what makes us so happy about it, and cannot but be conscious that it is not exactly one's mere natural feeling; is it not a precious experience of great reward?—F. R. Havergal.

Get to the root of things. Gold mines are not in the top soil; you must open a shaft. The precious diamonds of experience are not picked up in the roadway; their secret places are far down. Get down into the vitality, the solidity, the veracity, the divinity of things, and seek to possess all the inward work of the blessed Spirit.

WHAT THE TRUE POET TEACHES.

He teaches love to suffer and be pure;
That virtue conquers if it but endure;
That noblest gifts should serve the noblest ends;
That he is richest who the most befriends;
That through life's journey, dark or bright the day,
Fate's not unkind, whatever men may say,
If goodness walks companion of their way.

TRUTH AND GRACE.

Truth discovers the evil; grace puts it away. Truth unfolds what man is; grace unfolds what God is. Truth brings out into the light the hidden workings of evil in the heart of man; grace brings out in contrast the rich and exhaustless springs of grace in the heart of God; both are needful. Truth for the maintenance of God's glory; grace for the establishment of our blessing. Truth for the vindication of the divine character and attributes; grace for the perfect repose of the sinner's heart and conscience. How blessed to know that both "grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. OSLAPLEE, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 19, 1879.

We have been compelled to be absent from home several days since our last issue. Consequently our time for writing full editorials has been limited.

Gray's Elegy.

If Thomas Gray had never written any other composition than the "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," that piece alone would have secured for him a time-enduring fame, as, perhaps, no piece more powerfully and beautifully descriptive was ever written by inspired man. It is said that it was commenced seven years before its publication, in the churchyard of Stoke-Pogs, Buckinghamshire, where his mother was living. We give an extract from the New York Observer containing three beautiful verses sometimes left out of the printed copies believing our poetical readers will be glad to see them, as they were originally a part of this most splendid poem:

In a reading at Hawthorne Hall, Boston, Mr. James T. Fields spoke of the lives of the poets Gray and Goldsmith. He said that in 1750 Gray showed his friends, in manuscript, the "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard." He felt a shrinking timidity with regard to its publication, but its sudden popularity when it appeared from the press filled him with delight as well as with surprise. The poem was instantly translated into Greek, Latin, Italian, Portuguese, French, German, and Hebrew, so that the whole world read it contemporaneously. When he first handed about the poem in manuscript, it contained a lovely verse which he discarded in the printing. It seems to me, said Mr. Fields, one of the most perfect in the poem, and why he chose to omit it is still a mystery:

There scattered oft the earliest of the year
By hands unseen are showers of violets found.
The redbreast loves to build and warble here,
And little footsteps lightly print the ground.

In an edition of Gray's poems, published in 1843, by John Locken, of Philadelphia, occurs a reference to this verse, which, it is said, was printed in some of the first editions just before the Epitaph, but was afterward omitted because Mr. Gray thought it was too long a parenthesis in this place. The edition also gives two other verses not found in most editions. The first of these appears as the fourth, and is as follows:

Hark! how the sacred calm that breathes around,
Bids every fierce tumultuous passion cease,
In still small accents whispered from the ground,
The grateful earnest of eternal peace,

The other verse occurs near the close of the poem, following that which commences:

There, at the foot of yonder nodding beech,

It is as follows:

Him have we seen the greenwood side along,
While o'er the heath we hied, our labor done
Oft as the woodlark piped her farewell song,
With wistful eyes pursue the setting sun.

Anglo-Israel.

To those who are persuaded that the Anglo Saxons are the lineal descendants of some of the ten tribes of Israel the following selections will be interesting. There is certainly quite a strong point made in the argument relative to the wonderful receptivity of divine truth so characteristic of the English people. If this receptivity be necessarily the result of some previous training and education, the conclusion of the writer seems quite a legitimate deduction. Whether the Anglo-Saxons are the children of Jacob through Joseph and Ephraim or not, their political position demonstrates that they are a people of destiny who will act a grandly important part in the all-important scenes of the near future. Though undecided as respects the identity, we feel a great interest in the question relating to Anglo-Israel:

(New York Observer.)

ENGLISHMAN AND HEBREW.

John Milton writes: "The Englishman of many nations is least atheistical, and bears a natural disposition of much reverence and awe towards the Deity." The celebrated Monsieur Taine says of the early settlers of England: "They possess the idea of God." "They have only to look into their own minds in order to discover an emotion sufficiently strong to raise their souls to the height of their Creator." "More than any people in Europe, by their innate concentration and rigidity, they realize the Semitic conception of a solitary and almighty God." "A race so constituted was predisposed to Christianity." Therefore this element of the national character of the English people has fitted them to be, above all other nations, the most active promoters of Christianity.

But this element was the distinguishing characteristic of the Hebrew mind, and it had been started there by the peculiar state of things which the people had lived under for centuries. This element, therefore, fitted them to play the most important part in the promulgation of Christianity. Since it was necessary that a people should be educated in order to become endowed with this great characteristic (Deut. xiv. 23), and since, after the breaking up of the Hebrew commonwealth by the Assyrian, there was no other state of things competent to instill such a disposition or tendency of mind in any other people,—therefore the settlers of the English isles, whose national character was built upon the same principle, could have become invested with it only by inheriting it from that people who once lived under such a state of things as was capable of developing it; that is, the English people must be Hebrews, the Lost Tribes of Israel. If the Lost Tribes are not now in existence as a Christian nation, they have not even had a chance offered them of profiting by the means of salvation extended to every one by the work which was consummated on Calvary. And this too, although we are expressly told that, shamefully as they had transgressed against God by their incorrigible idolatry, they had yet not committed, even in that, half so much sin as their brethren of Judah (Ezek. xvi. 46-51; Jer. iii. 11). Palestine, therefore, during the Mosaic dispensation, ought to be considered as a school, where the children of Israel were prepared to carry out their mighty destinies in the present dispensation (Rom. iv. 13).

The Mother land.

The point, or location, from which the descendants of the sons of Noah diverged to settle in different countries, and divide the earth among themselves after the flood, is, perhaps, not to be ascertained so as to leave no room for doubt. The expression as to where the ark rested after the waters of the flood were assuaged, is recorded, Gen. viii. 4: "And the ark rested in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, upon the mountains of Ararat." This name is now used to designate a famous mountain of Asia in Armenia, on the confines of the Russian, Turkish, and Persian empires; Lat. 39 deg. 42 min. N.; Lon. 43 deg. 35 min. E. There are two cones, or peaks, whose summits are about seven miles apart, though their bases blend together. The summit of Great Ararat is elevated 17,323 feet above the sea level. After many fruitless attempts to scale the lofty eminence, the feat was accomplished in 1830 by Prof. Parrot. The whole upper region is covered with perpetual snow and ice, and is the scene of tremendous avalanches. There is, however, another passage that evidently places the early descendants of Noah to the east of Babylon which reads: "And it came to pass as they journeyed from the east, that they found a plain in the land of Shinar, and they dwelt there." Gen. xi. 2. Taking this latter passage as descriptive of the true motherland, other authorities have identified the mountain as being Aryanvarta in the north of Hindostan, and thus this holy land, as the Hindoo word is said to signify, would be connected with the Hindoo Koosh range of mountains extending northwesterly through Afghanistan and Persia, under other names, to Ararat itself in Armenia. Without any more than thus prefacing the subject we give the selection below. This gives some additional interest to the conflict now going on in Afghanistan, and more particularly when we learn that the Afghans are termed Beni Israel and Aristophylli—Sons of Israel, and Noble tribes:

THE CRADLE OF OUR RACE.

If the general verdict of modern philologists is a true one, then Afghanistan is our motherland, the cradle of the Indo-European race. The earliest articulations of the Aryan language, the parent of all the learned languages of the earth, Sanskrit, Persian, Greek, Latin, German, French and English, first woke the air into ripples of human thought and music amidst the valleys of the ancient Oxus and Jaxartes, and along the mountain sides of the Hindoo-Koosh, or Indian Caucasus. And the scene being enacted to-day, when the Celt and Anglo-Saxon, after having wandered westward from their cradle-place to the farthest verge of the continent, have returned to struggle for repossession of the land of their fathers, may be regarded as one of those verities of history which are stranger than romance.

Just northward of Cabul towers, to the height of 20,000 feet above the sea, the snow-helmeted head of the Hindoo-Koosh proper, which gives its name to the entire range of almost impassable mountains that stretches from the headwaters of the River Indus to a little west of Cabul. On that lofty crown, say Turkomans and Afghans, Noah's ark rested, and through those defiles which the British are endeavoring to force, the only survivors of the great flood descended to repossess the earth. A mosque is erected in honor of the event, and pilgrimages are made to this sacred place from all parts of the east. Ararat is to them an impostor. European scholars are divided as to which of the rival mountains has the best claim to the honor of being the patriarch's landing place, but that the region of the Hindoo-Koosh was the primeval home of the Aryan family, to which we belong, scarcely one of all the great philologists disputes.

The radicals of the several languages referred to, their structure and laws of growth, all mark them as of one stock, and constitute a living monument of the common origin of Hindoo and wild Celt, polished Greek and savage Saxon, ancient Persian and modern German, Frenchman, Englishman and Yankee, which is as enduring as the Hindoo-Koosh itself.

COMMUNICATIONS.

What is the Full Import of the Term Soul?

At this late date it may seem to be an hackneyed subject and one which ought not to be exhumed from the rubbish.

About twenty years ago, any one, who should call in question the inherent or natural immortality of the human soul, was denounced without rhyme or reason, as an infidel of the very worst type. All the Orthodox (self-styled) sects, made common cause against this heresy as it was then termed. Preachers waxed their respective flocks to be ware of this innovation upon their stereotyped standard of interpretation. Their declaration of the term was, that the soul is immortal and immaterial, which cannot come in contact with matter; or be in the least affected by it; entirely independent of the body, and able to perform all the functions pertaining to man as man, and perform them too, when the body is dead and lies mouldering in the grave, like the late John Brown, whose career is embodied in song:

"Oh! John's body lies mouldering in the grave,
And his soul goes marching on."

I shall endeavor to show that the above definition is not only devoid of reason, analogy and common sense, but last, though not least, it is unscriptural. The spiritual use of the term of which the occurrence is several hundred times, will admit of only three classifications, viz: first the whole man, or in other words, person, whether dead or alive. See Num. xix. 11-16. "He that toucheth the dead body of any man, (Margin soul) shall be unclean seven days." The same is repeated in the verses following. "Eight souls were saved in the ark (persons). 1 Peter iii. 20.

"And we were in all two hundred three score and sixteen souls," (persons). Acts xxvii. 37. "The soul that sinneth, shall die," (person). See Ezek. xvi. 4. It will readily occur to the reader, that God Himself uses the expression: My Soul; but none are so absurd as to even suppose, that he meant to convey the idea of a dual nature. Christ used the expression "My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death." No dual nature is warranted by this expression.

2. Soul and life are often used interchangeably. For instance: "And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life" (Margin, soul). Gen. i. 20-22. This occurs in the history of the creation before anything was said with regard to man. No distinction is here made, so far as to the terms that were employed expressive of man's superiority over the beasts, except in the expression, "In the image (or form) of God," as this is the only definition which can be given of the word. I am well aware that many of our good friends say that the expression, God breathed into his (man's) nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul, means that God put a living soul into the man; yet it is expressly stated that he (the man) became a living soul; not, that he had a living soul breathed into him. The whole man, not a part of him, became a living in contrast with a dead soul.

3. Heart, mind, etc., are attributes, not separate entities, and are often employed—as a part is often taken for the whole—as characteristic of the man. For instance: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul."

The above was suggested to my mind by hearing a sermon preached at the Congregational church by my good friend Mr. Webber, pastor of said church in Rosendale, Wis. His text was taken from Mat. xvi. 26: "For what is a man profited if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul; or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" I shall not attempt to give even a synopsis of the preacher's sermon, as many of his points were well taken and well met. But I took exception, to one, viz., the dual nature of man. He said the language of the text warranted this inference. Had he consulted the parallel passage in Luke, "For what is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away?" instituting a thorough and independent criticism of it, he could have found no warrant for such an inference—no such thing could possibly be deducible from the premises.

I fully believe the doctrine of life eternal only through Christ the Life-giver—the resurrection of the dead as the only means to that end—the soon-coming of Christ, or the pre-millennial advent, which occasioned the call for the late pre-millennial or prophetic conference in Brooklyn. I was agreeably disappointed and surprised, upon reading the papers which were read there. When I read the call for this conference I supposed there was only one subject or topic on which we were in unison; but their being right on this doctrine, the other kindred doctrines, or many of them, fell into line as readily as effect follows cause.

Brethren and sisters, let us unfurl this banner, the banner of the cross—the soon-coming of him who is the resurrection and the life—and all other doctrines will readily adjust themselves, or subordinate themselves to it.

Your brother, waiting for the return of the Lord. M. I. LEWIS.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I am back again after a three months' sojourn among the pines and cedars of the Sierras; back to the familiar faces who greet us with delight, after our short absence from each other. But, nevertheless, long it seemed to us, who were isolated, you might say, from the little body at this place, except by letter; but that was poor consolation. It is not, by any means, like seeing each other in the flesh, and face to face. Well, there have been some changes; Brother Kimball and wife have removed to Sacramento, and Brother Stone and wife to Stockton since our absence from them. The brethren and sisters at this place are all well, and I hope, steadfast as ever. Oh, friends, these are the trying times, not for the world at large, but for earnest believers in the true gospel; these are the times that are to try men's work whether it will stand the ordeal or not, because temptation is compassing us on every side, and we, who are not strong, will yield. First comes poverty staring us in the face, then wealth and its many feelers, reaching out in all directions, endeavoring to envelop us in its gilded embrace by its glittering inducements to do that which is wrong in the sight of God, because it is an impossibility, almost, to get rich now, but by fraud and deception, so corrupt has everything become. Next comes popularity. How is one going to become popular but by mingling with the frivolities of the day and by taking part in their festivities, and other things of a like worldly character. There might be a large volume written on these points, but I must be brief.

Now, the works of the flesh are manifest (or made known) which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, (take notice) variance, emulations, (rivalry competition). Wrath, (look out) strife, (be careful) seditions, heresies, envyings, (look to this) murders, drunkenness, (watch) revellings and such like. They that do these things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Gal. v. 19-21. Paul knew what he was saying when he uttered these words, being led by the spirit. Friends, let us beware on these all-important points: "for God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints." 1 Cor. xiv. 33. "Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another." Verse 26. Read Gal. vi. through. Now, these all-important points should not be overlooked. There is too much of a willingness to throw the blame all on others, and not examine ourselves and see if we are not some to blame. Let us do this, brethren, if we are to blame also. Come out with it; do not hide it from men. You cannot from God. We are admonished to let our light shine that others may see it. How are we to do this if we have no light to let shine? We cannot serve two masters. Let us study the material it takes to be in full possession of a Christian character; one that we need not be ashamed of when arrayed before him, the "Mighty One," who is to judge all. Oh, brethren and sisters do this for his sake and your own sakes, for "The fruit of the spirit is love, (the great lever moves all the others) joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, temperance, against such there is no law. If we live in the spirit, let us also walk in the spirit." Gal. v. 22-25. Oh, I would I were gifted to write more and oftener in my feeble way but I do the best I can. Pardon me.

Yours as ever,
THOS. HUGHES.

Editor Restitution:—We here in Hamilton are still striving to hold fast to the faith once delivered to the saints, and we are looking and praying for the soon-coming of our King in his great power and glory, when he will take to himself his great power and reign. Truly, society cannot get much worse than it now is, and most thinking and honest people are wishing the Deliverer would come and change the order of things. I find multitudes making inquiry after the truth, and concerning those things that are coming on the earth. They want to learn, but they do not want to obey. They want to patch the truth on to their old doctrines, and remain in their churches. They cannot give up all for Christ. They want to be saved, but on their own conditions. Brother Wilson's communications give me great pleasure. Some have taken the address of THE RESTITUTION, intending to send for it. It is solid, deep and glorious truth that leads the humble believer rejoicing in the faith leading to eternal life.

Your humble sister in the Lord Jesus Christ. MRS. C. LEE.

Hamilton, Ont.

Editor Restitution:—Your paper grows more interesting as the end of the age approaches. The plainest of all signs, one would think, (miracles apart, such as the darkening of the sun, etc.) and one which must open many blind eyes, is the English protectorate, and now the purchase of Palestine by English Jews.

As I write your paper comes in again, with my "End of the World" in part, omitting, however, the quotation marks, which should have been given.

You gave us a good article last week on the "End of the Age."

Now comes startling news from Egypt. The Khedive having violated his agreements with the civilized powers that were trying to help him, and thus brought the English and French fleets to his doors. England can, if she will, be to Egypt "a savior, and a great one." Isa. xix. 20. England controls the Suez canal, and should she take Egypt she would be fully in a position, so far as we can now see, to fulfil the promises of a highway in Isa. xix. 23; xi. 16; xl. 3.

The English Jews have bought Palestine, we hear. How much does this mean? We look for an explanation soon. It can scarcely mean that Palestine, still in the Turkish empire, can be separated from it, and become a foreign imperium in imperio.

I have read and thought much on the Anglo-Israel theory. Beginning with the ten tribes in Assyria, of whom the Nestorians, still there, are a most interesting part, we can find traces of some tribes emigrating to other countries. The Anglo-Israel theory grows more credible constantly, especially in the light of those ancient promises of Rebecca's descendants numbering thousands of millions, and possessing the gates—sea ports and strongholds: Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus, Aden, Alexandrette, Khyber Pass, sea coast over all the world—of their enemies.

The facts and truths published in THE RESTITUTION should arouse a mighty missionary spirit. A vast amount of idle capital seeks new outlets. Mexico, receiving the gospel from American Christians, now feels the want of American productions, farm machinery, etc. That visit of Americans to Mexico, and the exhibition of our machinery there, must be of great benefit to both nations, commercially. And commerce, as Rev. Joseph Cook says, referring to China, "Commercial intercourse is the candle-stick destined soon to bear up the light of religious and political regeneration to many millions of the human race."

Mr. G. R. Lederer, the faithful Hebrew missionary to the Hebrews in New York, made me acquainted with THE RESTITUTION. I have often given it to friends, who read it with interest. I know not whether I have secured any permanent subscribers.

Elder Grant, I hear, is lecturing in Hartford, Conn., and using a very large Latorie chart. I wonder if he and his "Advent" friends are not getting some new light to make them adopt our "Millenarian" views. The progress of events, throwing new light on the Bible, should enlighten their minds.

Brother Lederer wrote me a very clear and well written letter Feb. 19. He fell asleep Feb. 25, as I learned by a brief note from his son-in-law. I may send you some extracts from his recent letters.

I learn that the committee's volume of addresses made at the late prophetic conference will be issued in Chicago, in a few days. When it appears, please notice it in your paper.

In Christ, yours truly.
M. R. STEELE.

NEWS ITEMS.

LONDON, March 13.—A calamity to which Hungary has long been considered peculiarly liable has overtaken Szegedin, the second commercial town of that country. At nightfall last evening total darkness eclipsed what was a few hours before a prosperous city, but is now little more than a waste of rushing waters. The river Theiss overflowed yesterday morning, despite the precautions that had been taken from the moment the danger of such an occurrence was observed, and within three hours the town was inundated. The scenes that ensued defy description, for, to add to the situation, the tremendous current undermined the foundations of the buildings in which the inhabitants lived or had sought shelter, and amid shrieks, cries, and frantic appeals for aid that it was impossible to render, the structures went crashing into the flood, carrying with them the inmates. Even the synagogue, to which many people had flown for refuge, was not spared by the waters and fell in, burying hundreds in its ruins. The practical obliteration of the gas works suggested a new distress to the minds of the survivors, and this proved only too real. When daylight faded they were left at the mercy of the torrent, unable to perceive what fresh danger threatened them, and in a state of prostration from which death would have been a relief. The government has sent 40,000 florins for the relief of the inhabitants. This generosity does not save it, however, from being violently attacked by the Radicals in the Diet for having neglected to take precautions against the calamity. Every hour brings intelligence of fresh disaster. It appears that 100 square miles in the vicinity of Szegedin are flooded and the crops in that district totally ruined. At latest accounts the water had risen five feet more, and the situation was becoming more and more critical. Sixty thousand persons were without a roof to cover them. The upper floors of all high houses were crammed with spectators in momentary fear of death. It was thought that some few stone houses might stand. The loss of life had, it was feared, been terrible, and was certain to be increased during the night of terror.

PESTH, March 18.—The Hungarian Minister of Finance has left for Szegedin with 200,000 florins to be distributed among the sufferers by the inundation.

The greater part of the town of Szegedin was destroyed and several hundred persons perished.

Relief parties are actively at work succoring the survivors. No official report of the extent of the calamity has yet been received.

The wretchedness in Szegedin is increasing. Rescuing boats continually strike ruins, so that in many cases the rescue of sufferers is impossible. One boat capsized, by which seven women were drowned. A violent storm is raging. The flood is continually rising and is now two feet above the level of the Theiss. The unsubmerged area has been reduced to six hundred square metres, which continually decreases. At the first irruption of the water, thirty-five soldiers were drowned.

The State railway carried, gratuitously, ten thousand fugitives yesterday.

The Standard's correspondent at Szegedin states that the Government authorities report that 300 persons have been drowned. At noon on Thursday there were still people on the roofs of houses and in trees. Some persons have died from exposure to the cold. A number of incendiaries have been arrested.

The towns of Csongrad, at the confluence of the rivers Theiss and Koros, thirty-two miles north of Szegedin, and Szentes, two miles nearer Szegedin, are also threatened.

Accounts from Vienna say that 6,000 persons are still surrounded by water at Szegedin.

THE SIBERIAN PLAGUE AT ST. PETERSBURG.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 11.—The Golos publishes the mortality statistics of this city during the past week. These show that typhus has increased in virulence. Spotted typhus is also prevalent, and the Golos declares that there have been two fatal cases of the Siberian plague.

LONDON, March 12.—The Daily Telegraph's St. Petersburg dispatch says: "At Saturday's meeting of the medical faculty, Dr. Botkin reiterated his previous declarations that a certain infectious disorder (whatever the people might choose to call it) exists in our midst, though hitherto it has taken a very mild form, in this part of the country at least."

THE ZULU WAR.

CAPE TOWN, Feb. 18.—Colonel Pearson was attacked at Ekowe by a large force Zulus. The latter were defeated with enormous loss, and pursued to Entamedi, one of the Zulu military kraals. Col. Woods reports that he has captured a large number of cattle. The attitude of the native tribes in the Transvaal is disquieting, and it is feared the chiefs have formed a league against the British.

LONDON March 10.—The correspondent of the Standard at Cape Town says that Colonel Pearson, after repulsing the Zulu attack, which occurred on February 13, burned Entamedi.

A dispatch from Kimberly reports that the Zulus have burned eight kraals belonging to friendly Caffres near Doornberg and killed the inhabitants. All fears of a successful invasion of Natal have disappeared.

A member of Parliament at Rome says that Italy is so dirty that one-third of its population would die if the plague should once gain a foothold in the peninsula.

POETRY.

Comfort.

L. M. BURGESS.

I have no other friend but Thee,
Then must be all in all to me.
Once I had friends, but fortune frowned,
And soon I felt myself unwound.
I walked and met but shadows there
Where all had seemed so wondrous fair.
My hands were now no longer pressed;
My head drawn to no loving breast;
No gentle whispers thrilled my ear,
No tender glances told I was dear.
With humbled pride and broken heart
I strove to hide the sudden smart;
The sponging tear I could not stay,
The pains that even yet delay.
As then I felt that life for me
Henceforth could only sorrow be;
And the best refuge I could find
Would be in death, for death was kind.
But while I smile my piteous moan
Forth to the darkness sudden shone
A golden light, a day was born,
Rivaling Eve's creation's morn.
Then sable wrath: "Let there be light,"
And there light was! An angel bright
Stirred the deep waters of the pool
And healed therein no wounded soul.
Then Nothing no, no heavenly sky
I saw Face, oh, Heavenly fair!
Oh, gray one eyes! They seemed to be Filled with a pleading "Come to me!
Come and be saved. I died for thee;
The scrapes I've borne, come thou to me!"
Since that blest hour each note of bird,
Each strain of music music heard,
Each blooming flower, the waving grass
The cooling breeze as they pass,
The laugh of children, everything
Up to my lips I'm some cloth bring,
And then Thou'rt ever by my side;
I wish no more that I had died:
I ask instead that I may stay
There till Thou comest, till the day
When Thou shalt come to earth again
A conquering King to reign.
Then I shall meet at last with Thee,
Forevermore with Thee to be,
Lord, till that glorious day I see,
Oh, be Thou all in all to me!

The Manner of Christ's Second Coming. No. 2.

Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think to have eternal life, and they are they that testify of me.—Christ.

In this, as in every other great subject relating to Bible truth, we cannot get the whole in detail from the New Testament, but must study the Old with the New and live by every word of God.

In our first article we think we have made it clear, that Christ, when he leaves the holy of holies, will descend to the aerial or clouds, send out his angels and gather his elect, the church, the Bride, the Lamb's wife; first the introduction of the Bride to the Bridegroom, then a grand festival, called in Scripture the marriage of the Lamb. Then the marshaling of the hosts for the great battle and day of God Almighty, Armageddon's war. Reasoning from the great work to be accomplished, and other considerations, we can see no good reason for believing they will remain long in the air. The earth is to be the scene of conflict for its supremacy between Christ and antichrist.

The Revelator gives a graphic description of Christ and his army. Chap. xix. 11. He sees heaven open, or the heavenly state; the first resurrection in which Paul was so anxious to have a part, with the changing of the living saints are accomplished facts; they appear with Christ in the vision.

We will quote the Revelator's own words: "I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called faithful and true, and in righteousness he doth judge (or rule) and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written that no man knew but he himself; and he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood, and his name is called the word of God; and the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen white and clean; and out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written King of kings and Lord of lords."

What power can s and before God's host of holy immortal ones? If they fall upon the sword or dart it will not hurt them, for they are armed, marshaled and prepared for the great work of subjugation; first to clear the rebels out of the land covenanted to Abraham, and establish the kingdom of God in Palestine. The reader, by this time is asking, where will these mighty hosts first touch the earth? We think it will be Mount Sinai. We will quote the Scriptures and arrange them in their proper order, and let the intelligent readers judge for themselves.

There is a large amount of Scripture and historic information relating to Mount Sinai and its surroundings, but it would swell our article beyond a reasonable length. Many of the Old Testament writers prophesying of the coming of Christ, speak of his first and second advent without referring to the interval of time between the two, but the careful reader will have no difficulty if the truth is his object.

Our first quotation is from Deut. xxxiii. 1: "And this is the blessing wherewith Moses, the man of God, blessed the children of Israel before his death. And he said the Lord came from Sinai and rose up from Seir unto them; he shined forth from Mount Paran and came with ten thousand of his saints." Note carefully Sinai, Seir and Mount Paran. He comes from there with ten thousand of his saints. But, says a very able writer, this was at the giving of the law, and is not applicable to the thing under consideration. How readest thou? Did the Lord come from Sinai, rise up from Seir, and shine forth from Mount Paran and come with ten thousand of his saints at the giving of the law? If so, let the same writer give us the evidence, where they came to, and what has been the result of such a coming! Does not this prophesy of Moses strictly harmonize with that of Enoch the seventh from Adam, that Jude speaks of in verse 14, of his short Epistle? "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints to execute the judgments written," etc. Yes, that is for the very purpose for which he is coming, not simply to hold a court, a great assize of men, to hear all the evidence for and against the just and the unjust, and then award them immortality or sentence to eternal death, as the case may be. There is no precedent establishing the idea of a court of judicature to try individual men and women in the flesh to prove their guilt or innocence.

Let the reader carefully examine the manner of judgment on the first age of men that lived before the flood. God saw that the wickedness of man was great; in his own words, that all flesh had corrupted his ways before God. He makes known his purpose to Noah, and then sends the flood and sweeps the race (Noah and his family escape) as with a besom of destruction from the earth; so with Sodom, so with Egypt, Babylon and Nineveh, the judgments were of an executive character. Will God change his course of procedure with or in the execution of the judgments written against the ungodly Gentile nations that now inhabit the world? I trow not.

Our next quotation is from Habakkuk, third chapter. The prophet begins in the form of a prayer, second verse: "O Lord I have heard thy speech and was afraid; O Lord revive thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy." God's work is to create, arrange, and set in order or re-create. Our world is fallen, is out of harmony with the balance of God's universe. The prophet utters a prayer in sympathy with the groaning creation for a revival of God's work, to bring back the planet and the race of men to their allegiance to their Creator. The prophet is in Palestine, the former and the future capital of the kingdom of God. He is wrapped in vision; he turns his gaze southward; he sees what the Revelator has so graphically described in the nineteenth chapter.

Mount Sinai is about three hundred miles south of Jerusalem. Let the reader forget all other localities, fancy himself in Jerusalem by the side of God's prophet, take your gaze towards the south (the margin reads from the south), and you will see a sight more grand and glorious than ever mortal eyes gazed upon. Read again Rev. xix. and keep it vividly before your minds; read also Solomon's Songs iii. 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness like pillars of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all the powders of the merchant? Chap vi. 10. Who is this that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners? And again, viii. 5: Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon the breast of her beloved? Let the prophet answer Solomon's deeply interesting questions. God came from Teman and the Holy One from Mount Paran, just where Moses said he would come from.

There is much valuable information to be obtained, both from Scripture and history in relation to Mount Sinai and the great wilderness through which Israel passed on their journey to the promised land. A late traveler says there is several, or a group, of mountain peaks; and it is but lately that the real Mount Sinai has been identified, at the base of which is a level plateau or plain, large enough to hold a million of men. It seems clear to us that this is the starting point where the invading army of the Lord of hosts takes up its line of march for Palestine. But to the Scripture under consideration; "God came from Teman and the Holy One from Mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise. And his brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hand, and there was the hiding of his power. Before him went the pestilence, and burning coals went forth at his feet. He stood and measured the earth; he beheld and drove asunder the nations; and the everlasting mountains were scattered; the perpetual hills did bow; his ways are everlasting."

Our next quotation is from Isaiah lxiii. "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah; this that is glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength? That speaks in righteousness mighty to save? Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the winefat? I have trodden the winepress alone; and of the people there was none with me; for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment; (the reason for) the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come." This whole scene is highly descriptive of battle and of war.

The reader will keep in mind that this occurs in the time between the translation of the saints and their arrival at Jerusalem. Just how long that will be we do not know. Some have made it the antitype of David's reign, forty years, and others the antitype of Israel's journey through the wilderness. As there is no Scripture proof upon this point, we give them for what they are worth. Bozrah is on the line from Sinai to Palestine. Here the hosts of God have a battle with their enemies and defeat them. The description given by the prophet of earth's future glorious, all-conquering King, agrees with that of the Revelator. Chap. xix. "He is the lion of the tribe of Judah, the bright and the morning star; King of kings and Lord of lords."

What occurs after the battle at Bozrah until they arrive at the gates of Jerusalem, we must leave for the present for others better posted than ourself. There is enough to employ the ablest pens. Joel, under the figure of an army of locusts, gives a graphic view from one standpoint. Ezekiel another in the battle of Gog and Magog. Read Rev. xix. 17-21. What a fearful description is given by these writers and many more, both of the Old and New Testament! Alas, who shall live when God doeth these things? We ask, who that understands the dreadful scenes that will be enacted when the righteous, the pure and the holy are taken away from the earth, and all restraint is withdrawn and men are left to the worst passions of poor, fallen humanity? Then will be held that last great prayer meeting of the wicked. Read Rev. vi. 12-17: O flee; escape for thy life; look not behind thee; remember Lot's wife. Will Christ and the immortal hosts, his Bride, be visible to the outer world before they reach Jerusalem, the city of the great King?

This is a question to which we cannot give a definite answer. From the nature and condition of the country through which they pass from Sinai to Palestine, and from some Scripture allusions, we incline to the belief they will not. Zechariah says: "Then shall the Lord my God go forth and fight with those nations as when he fought in the day of battle (chap. xiv. 3), and his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, the day of the Lord, the millennium, the restitution, the judgment day or age."

If the prophet alludes, and we think he does, to the different battles and slaughter of Israel's enemies, he was not visibly manifest to Israel or their enemies. One thing is very certain, Judah will be in profound ignorance of who their Messiah is or the manner of his coming, till he is manifested to them in Jerusalem. This point we will make clear in our next article.

THE EASTERN PLAGUE.

Surgeon General Woodworth on its Origin and Progress—It Began in China and Came Through Persia to Russia—American Ministers Say the Disease is Extremely Violent and Contagious—And Urge the Government to Establish a Strict Quarantine.

The report of Surgeon General Woodworth, of the United States Marine Hospital service, for this week, contains the following interesting history of the plague:

Official reports of European medical officers in China show conclusively that the true "bubonic plague" has prevailed extensively in that country during the thirty years preceding 1873, when it was supposed to be wholly extinct. The reports also show that, owing to the meager facilities for communication with Central Asia, virulent epidemics may ravage extensive districts of that country without any knowledge of their existence reaching Europe. The reports present records of the disease having prevailed in the Province of Yunnan twenty of the thirty years in question, varying in intensity in the different parts of the province, and in different years. The appearance of the disease was coincident with the breaking out of the rebellion against the Imperial Government, and suppressed with more violent measures in Yunnan than in any of the other provinces; conditions which undoubtedly contributed greatly to its virulence, as did also the superstitious practice of refusing to bury the dead, who are exposed on a bier to the sun until completely decomposed. The plague was very prevalent in Yunnan in 1871-2-3, and in the latter year suddenly reappeared in Mesopotamia and Persia, gradually extending its area until, in 1877, it reached the shores of the Caspian Sea, prevailing especially at the town of Resteh, which has a direct trade with Astrakhan. In May and November, 1877, a fever of intermittent type, accompanied with glandular swellings, prevailed in the port of Astrakhan and in Wetlyanka and other villages of that province, and in November, 1878, a similar affection again appeared at Wetlyanka; few deaths had occurred up to this time, but about December the disease assumed the malignant character that has marked the present outbreak. The report of the Russian Medical Service of the Interior for 1877, which has just been made public, announces that 241 cases of Siberian plague were reported during the year, the mortality being 21 per cent.; the principal outbreaks occurred in the Provinces of Vfatka and Tcherizow, which are at a considerable distance from each other, and were contemporaneous with, or occurred soon after, the virulent prevalence of the disease in Persia.

From the above facts, which have been obtained from official sources, and are in the main well attested, it seems proper to conclude that, instead of the late outbreak being due to the spontaneous regeneration of the virus of the plague in the valley of the Volga, or, at the farthest, in Persia, the disease was reintroduced from China into Persia and thence to Russia, local conditions in each instance probably favoring its development. Of these conditions no authentic account will be obtained until the International Commission of Experts who are visiting the infected district make their report. The return of cold weather, together with the stringent measures adopted by the Government, seem to have confined the late violent outbreak to the limited district where it first appeared. The American Ministers to Austria and to Russia report that the disease has manifested such an extremely virulent and contagious character that great alarm exists in the whole of Eastern Europe, and urge upon the Government the necessity of taking measures to prevent the possibility of the introduction of the disease into the United States. The measure already taken by this Government for preventing the importation of goods from the infected districts, except under proper precautions, are, for the present, considered sufficient for this purpose, especially, if the ports of entry are kept free from the unsanitary conditions that favor the spread of epidemic diseases.

Silence to God.

The whole law for a noble and devout life is not altered by reason of any new circumstance. It still remains true that a mind silently waiting before God is the condition without which such a life is impossible. As the flowers follow the sun, and silently hold up their petals to be tinted and enlarged by his shining, so must we, if we would know the joy of God, hold our souls, wills, hearts, and minds still before him whose voice commands, whose love warms, whose truths make fair our whole being. God speaks for the most part in such silence only. If the soul be full of tumult and jangling noises, his voice is little likely to be heard. As in some kinds of deafness a perpetual noise in the head prevents hearing any other sounds, the rush of our own fevered blood and the throbbing of our own nerves hinder our catching his tones. It is the calm lake which mirrors the sun, the least cats paw wrinkling the surface wipes out all the reflected glories of the heavens. If we would mirror God, our souls must be calm. If we would hear God, our souls must be in silence.

There are some 14,000 periodicals published in Europe, of these only fourteen are Roman Catholic. Of the 8,500 on this continent but 116 are of that faith; and of the 1,000 in South America only eleven. So much for the comparative intelligence of Protestantism and Roman Catholicism.

A Free-Will Offering.

We, the undersigned, having the good of the cause of truth at heart, and believing that it is our duty to sustain the gospel with our means as well as our tongues, and believing that God will bless us for all the offering we make in behalf of the truth, have paid the sum set opposite our names for the purpose of freeing THE RESTITUTION from debt, and the offering we make in behalf of the truth, hoping it may be a messenger of truth to those sitting in darkness, and to comfort those who are walking in the light of life:

DIED.

SKEELS.—At Fruitport, Muskegon county, Mich., Feb. 17, 1879, brother James Skeels, in the fifty-seventh year of his age, of cancer in the stomach.

His health had been declining for about a year previous to his death. During the last two or three months, his sickness was, at times, of the most distressing character. He leaves his wife with whom he has lived very agreeably during all the years of his married life, and five sons to grow up to manhood, to mourn his loss.

Brother Skeels was a man of strong religious convictions. He early became a member of the Methodist church in the state of New York, and was baptized by immersion. He removed a member of that church until he came to Michigan some twenty-five years ago. Soon after coming here he embraced the doctrine of the coming of the Lord, the mortality of man, the sleep of the saints, the resurrection of the dead, and the establishment of the kingdom of God over all people, nations and tongues, that they might serve him. He believed in the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of the prophets. After believing the Gospel of the kingdom, he could not for a long time give up his baptism into the Methodist church, as being of no account. He had given up the Methodist faith, as not being the faith of the Gospel, and yet he could not see that a baptism in obedience to a faith which is not the faith of the Gospel, could not be acceptable to Gospel obedience. At length he saw that a Gospel obedience must follow, and precede an Gospel faith. That without a Gospel faith there can be no Gospel obedience or Gospel baptism. With this conviction in his mind, strange as it may appear, brother Skeels had layed his baptism until January 12, 1879, just seven weeks before his funeral. Aside from this neglect of duty, brother Skeels was a good man. He was kind in his family, obliging to his neighbors, honest, upright, and honorable in all his deal. The Gospel of the kingdom was his theme. Through his influence many have been led to accept the faith, and as we understand, are ready to obey that form of doctrine which has been delivered them. He wanted to live, but principally that he might preach the Gospel.

His funeral was attended on Sunday March 2, by a large concourse of people. The history of a good man was made the theme of discourse. The good man was born of parents under the sentence of death. He had been sold of them, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, so death hath passed upon all men." In this way he became a child of wrath even as others. He was then an enemy by wicked works. But he was honest and had ears to hear. In process of time he heard the word of the kingdom, the gospel of his salvation. He understood it, he received it in his good and honest heart. He committed himself to its purports and plan. He began to obey its precepts by being baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and in this way became a member of Christ's body, and joint heir with him to his inheritance, to his position and work. He now brings forth fruit with patience, some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold. He now denies himself of ungodliness and worldly lusts, and lives soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope—the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. He loves Christ and the objects Christ has in view, more than he loves his father or his mother, his wife or children, his houses or lands. His sympathies flow in harmony with what God and Christ have enjoined; he loves what they love and hates what they hate. When he comes to die he can say with the Apostle, I am now ready to be offered, the time of my departure is at hand, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. He has overcome. He falls asleep in Christ—becomes dead in Christ. Let no one enquire how death has affected him? What has it done for him? What has happened to him? He has died so as not to live. His thoughts have perished. He knows not anything. His consciousness is gone. He has returned to dust.

Thus we have traced the history of a good man through this world, till he has returned to the ground from which he was taken. Can we trace his history any further? Is there any thing more of a good man? Will he ever live again? Will his history be revived? The Bible assures us that all who die in Christ will be made alive; that all who overcome will be raised up, as Christ who overcame was raised up; that all who are found worthy to attain unto the resurrection of the dead, will attain unto it. Then, a good man will live again. His history will be revived. When will he live again? When the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, then those who are dead in Christ will be made alive. What will they do after being made alive? They will be caught up into the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, after which, they will remain with him forever. What next will they do? They will come back to earth with him, when the Lord comes and all the saints with him, and his feet stand upon the mount of Olives, and he is made king over all the earth. What will they do then? They will sit down with him on his throne, and have power over the nations and in this way judge the world. They will reign jointly with Christ. For what object will they reign? That all things may be subdued unto God; that all people, nations and languages may serve him, that the knowledge of the Lord may fill the whole earth, that every knee may bow, and every tongue may confess that Jesus Christ is God, to the glory of God the Father, that the curse may be removed so that the whole earth may be filled with his glory, that the restitution may be accomplished so that the will of God may be done in earth as it is done in heaven, and that this result may be continued for ever and ever.

Thus, the Bible furnishes the history of a good man in this world and the world to come. It is of great value to be worthy of such a record. These are the words of comfort which are to be spoken to the living friends of one who has fallen asleep in Jesus.

POETRY.

Coming.

At even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning.

What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch. Mark xiii. 33, 37.

"It may be in the evening,
When the work of the day is done
And you have time to sit in the twilight
And watch the sinking sun,
While the long, bright day dies slowly
Over the sea,
And the hour grows quiet and holy
With thoughts of me.
While you hear the village children
Passing along the street,
Among those thronging footsteps
May come the sound of my feet;
Therefore I tell you, Watch!
By the light of the evening star,
When the room is growing dusky
As the clouds afar;
Let the door be on the latch
In your home,
For it may be through the gloaming
I will come.

"It may be when the midnight
Is heavy upon the land,
And the black waves lying dumbly
Along the sand;
When the moonless night draws close,
And the lights are out in the house;
When the fire burns low and red,
And the watch is ticking loudly
Beside the bed;
Though you sleep, tired out, on your couch,
Still your heart must wake and watch
In the dark room,
For it may be at midnight
I will come.

"It may be at the cock-crow,
When the night is dying slowly
In the sky,
And the sea looks calm and holy,
Waiting for the dawn of the golden sun
Which draweth nigh;
When the mists are on the valleys, shading
The rivers chill,
And my morning star is fading, fading
Over the hill;
Behold, I say unto you, Watch!
Let the door be on the latch
In the chill before the dawning,
Between the night and morning
I may come.

"It may be in the morning,
When the sun is bright and strong,
And the dew is glittering sharply
Over the little lawn;
When the world are laughing loudly
Along the shore,
And the little birds are singing sweetly
About the door,
With the long day's work before you,
You rise up with the sun,
And the neighbors come in to talk a little,
Of all that must be done;
But remember that I may be the next
To come in at the door,
To call you from your busy work
For evermore:
And as you work your heart must watch,
For the door is on the latch
In your room,
And it may be in the morning
I will come."

So He passed down my cottage garden,
By the path that leads to the sea,
Till He came to the turn of the little road,
Where the birch and laburnum-tree
Lean over and arch the way;
There I saw Him a moment stay,
And turn once more to me,
As I wept at the cottage door,
And lift up His hands in blessing—
Then I saw His face no more.
And I stood still in the door-way
Leaning against the wall,
Not heeding the tall white roses,
Though I crushed them and let them fall,
Only looking down the pathway,
And looking toward the sea,
And wondering, and wondering
When He would come back for me,
Till I was aware of an Angel
Who was going swiftly by,
With the gladness of one who goeth
In the light of God most High.
He passed the end of the cottage
Toward the garden gate,—
(I suppose he was come down
At the setting of the sun,
To comfort some one in the village,
Whose dwelling was desolate),
And he passed before the door
Beside our place,
And the likeness of a smile
Was on his face:—
"Weep not," he said, "for unto you is given
To watch for the coming of His feet,
Who is the glory of our blessed Heaven;
The work and watching will be very sweet
Even in an earthly home,
And in such an hour as ye think not
He will come."

So I am watching quietly
Every day;
Whenever the sun shines brightly
I rise and say,—
Surely it is the shining of His face!
And look unto the gates of His high place,
Beyond the sea,
For I know He is coming shortly
To summon me.
And when a shadow falls across the window
Of my room,
Where I am working my appointed task,
I lift my head to watch the door and ask
If He is come;
And the Angel answers sweetly,
In my home,—
"Only a few more shadows,
And He will come."

COMMUNICATIONS.

Incongruous Thoughts.

Elder M. E. Lord, who stands well to the front in the Christian or Disciple church, has of late written a very neat commentary on the book of Romans in which he, as we conceive, has set forth some incongruous thoughts.

I. On vi, 23, He remarks on the phrase "For the wages of sin is death," "Sin is still conceived of as a master whom the human family serving, and it never receives any service for nothing. It always pays. Whether the sinner stipulated for his wages or not, he is sure to receive it. What the wages of sin is, the apostle here tells us: it is eternal death." So far the thought is good and is evidently justified by the Bible. And again on the expression, "And death by sin entered," v. 12. He says: "That is, death entered into the world by sin. Not only so, it entered into the world by one sin. It was not from sin as an aggregation or widely prevalent power that death resulted. It resulted from sin as a unit, a single thing, one act. For if, after his first sin Adam had never committed another, still the death of the whole human race would have followed. It followed not from his second sin, nor third, nor from all. It followed from his first only."

"Nor must the word death be here taken in any unusual sense. By it simple ordinary death is meant, no more. To say that it signifies mortality, or spiritual death, is to speak without warrant. It implies mortality, and no doubt much besides; but here it expresses only death. When it is said of Adam, Gen. v. 5, "and he died," we have the exact meaning of the word death in the preceding clause."

Here we again say, good. In harmony with the Bible, and a truth set forth which many of his brethren do not see. But incongruous to this he still writes in another paragraph: "But it would be inadmissible to assume that death, common death, was the whole penalty of Adam's first sin. He suffered, besides, the expulsion from the presence of God, and from the garden, and became an outcast on the earth, now cursed on his account. But it is not to these things that I refer. As to the present life, death was certainly the great penalty of Adam's sin; still it was not the whole. His death did not cancel his sin. On the contrary, his sin survived its temporal penalty; and he lived after his death. For that subsequent state, too, his sin had its penalty. Now it is just here that the redemption effected by Christ emerges into view. By that redemption Adam's sin, while he yet lived, was canceled (a fact assumed), and with the sin its future penalty. This now restored him to the favor of God, and gave him title to all other blessings secured for him in Christ. Thus we must look even beyond death for the whole penalty of sin."

Now, in addition to the incongruities, which are manifest to every reader, between the first quotations and the last one, I desire to present a few questions.

1. Of the sentence, "But it would be inadmissible to assume that death, common death, was the whole penalty of Adam's first sin." Is there such a thing as uncommon death? Does the Bible anywhere talk of uncommon death? If not, then why the term common death?

2. "As to the present life, death was certainly the great penalty of Adam's sin, still it was not the whole." What more? Where does the Bible talk of more? What other than the then present life did Adam have? If any future life to Adam wherein did the penalty comprehend any end to it? Nowhere.

3. "His death did not cancel his sin." True the act of dying (which was not the penalty) did not cancel the effect of sin, but death as a state or condition which was the penalty, if ever ended will free the party from the effect of sin.

4. "On the contrary, his sin survived its temporal penalty." But who has written temporal penalty? God did not so talk to Adam. The Bible does not talk of the penalty anywhere calling it temporal. What does the author mean by the term sin when he says it survived? Does he not mean the effect of sin? He cannot here mean anything else. Then can the effect of sin which is contained in the penalty last any longer than the penalty itself?

5. "And he lived after his death." Where is it so stated? The Bible is as silent as the grave on this. What new revelation has the author to this effect? What evidence from nature or the Bible, by positive declaration, by example, or circumstantial evidence that any one ever did or ever will live after death except by a resurrection from the dead? And this, Adam never had that any one knows of. But enough on these points.

II. Again. "On the expression: "He that raised Christ from the dead will also make alive your mortal bodies," viii. 11. Elder Lord writes beautifully and truthfully: "He will make them alive in the general resurrection of the just at the last day. The identical body in which we now live is to be literally restored to life. No hope touches the Christian to the quick like this. Not only so, but on being restored, the body will be peculiarly endowed. It will be a spiritual body. What this means we do not know; but we have confidence that it augurs some strange good."

But how incongruous with this is the next sentence. "Into this renewed body the spirit is to return—the spirit that is a living, conscious entity, learning all the while from the moment in which it leaves the body at death, until that in which it returns."

And indeed we are curious to know where the necessity of a resurrection of the old tenement of clay and its refitting as a habitation for this spirit, if the spirit possesses the power without the old body to know, to think and to reason? And again, if the spirit while out of the body is enabled to think more rapidly, to reason more clearly and profoundly, to know more, and to enjoy more freedom than while encaged in the prison of the body, will there ever be any desire on its part to return back to its old prison? I think not, and therefore that the resurrection could not be a matter of hope, and that Christ's effort to become the resurrection—or the source of the resurrection—would stand unappreciated. Solomon, it is true, in Ecc. xii. 7, says that "the spirit returns to God who gave it." But he does not undertake to describe its condition when it gets there. But he does undertake to tell of the condition of that part of man which goes to the Hebrew sheol, the Greek hades, where Elder Lord locates all his disembodied spirits, both good and bad.

Solomon says: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor reason, nor knowledge in sheol—hades whither thou goest." Solomon and Elder Lord do not talk much alike.

Of this spirit which returns to God, Eccl. xii. 7, Gesenius in his definition of it says, it is the same principle possessed in common by both man and animal.

Further, there is a text that talks of spirit coming at the resurrection and getting into the body, but it does not sound in its reading much like the Elder's talk. Let us quote. "Then he said unto me, Prophesy unto the wind; prophesy, Son of Man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God, Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live. So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath (ruach spirit) came into them, and they lived and stood upon their feet an exceeding great army."

Much more might be said with profit, but this must suffice for the present at least.

G. M. MYERS.

The Coming of the Lord.

Question of all questions! How much it ought to engage our attention, and inspire our hearts with joy and rejoicing. Jesus is coming! This has been the solace of the waiting church through all the centuries of sin and suffering since his feet were lifted from the brow of Olivet. It has called forth the sweetest songs, and inspired the most fervent prayers of God's believing children. It was the grand anthem, and the soul-enrapturing strain of the prophets of the old and new dispensations. And well it might be, in view of the glory to be revealed when he comes. Angels will re-echo the birth-anthem which greeted the ears of Judean shepherds eighteen hundred years ago: "Peace on earth and good will to men;" but this time in a loftier strain; for the fact of the Redeemer's birth was but a pledge and promise of a distant future event, when the redemption of the church would be the wonderful fact in the great plan, and the crowning act in the drama of salvation.

Old-fashioned people in Bible times rejoiced at the birth of a manchild in view of what he might become—a king, a prophet, a priest, a counselor, or a soldier. What the new-born king of the Jews might become was no shrewd guess of human wisdom. The prophets of God had drawn a portrait of him so plain in all it parts, so exact in every line and shading, that the devout, humble and teachable among that people, saw in the Nazarene, in his birth, life, character, death and resurrection, the real substance of the one foreshadowed on the pages of inspiration. These gave promise of a future glorious mission in which the loftiest strains of prophetic song, and the most enrapturing scenes in heaven-inspired vision would find their accomplishment.

In view of this future mission of the Messiah the Apostolic church prayed earnestly: "Thy kingdom come, and thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." What he did at his first advent; his preaching of the gospel; the miracles he wrought, which for a time rekindled the national hope of Israel; and his resurrection, which revived the sinking faith of his own disciples, were preliminary steps looking toward carrying out the grand scheme of heaven's high council.

To the Christian in particular, and to the nations in an important sense, there is much in prospect, much to be hoped for; and it pleased God, in the arrangment of the plan, to connect the fulfillment of the promises, relating to a future state, with the second coming of His Son. The reward, the eternal weight of glory, the crown of righteousness, and salvation, or whatever expressions are employed to set forth these promises they are associated with that event. Take the word salvation as one to which all professed Christians claim to attach an eternal weight of meaning, and we find it connected with words which do, in the most explicit manner, declare the literal coming of the Lord from heaven. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin (sin offering) unto salvation." Heb. ix. 28. Nearly all who fight under the banner of Orthodoxy agree with us that this Scripture teaches the personal coming of the Lord. This being a fact, then the coming of the Lord is important in a sense that human language can not fully express. The Scriptures nowhere connect salvation with the death of the believer; nor do they teach that the reward, or crown is given then. If any man thinks otherwise let him take his concordance and trace the words reward, recompense, salvation, redemption, crown, glory and grace, through the New Testament, after which he ought to think that death has been arrayed in false colors by poets and preachers. Paul says: "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death;" not the voice that Jesus sends; nor the gate to endless joy, as the poets have sung. From my earliest recollection I have been hearing good people close their prayers, by saying: "In death save us." Can anything be more unscriptural? Death is a condition from which God proposes to save man by a resurrection.

If salvation; if the eternal weight of glory; if all that goes to make that future life infinitely more desirable than the present state of being, is important beyond our feeble powers to express, then, that event, which precedes them as a cause, without which, in the divine arrangment, they could not be realized, is equally important, and becomes at once, to the faithful child of God, an object of earnest desire, and of joyful anticipation. He longs for the coming of his Redeemer through whom so glorious an inheritance comes and such blissful associations are entered into. Estimate the event by what hinges upon it, and it appears to me that no consistent believer in the Christian religion can be indifferent as to the relative time of its occurrence. He will want to know whether it is imminent and premillennial, or postmillennial, and far away beyond the world's conversion by human instrumentalities. He will want to know how the subject was regarded by the apostles, and what the attitude of the primitive believer in reference to it.

The most cursory reading of the Apostolic epistles will reveal the fact that, the church of the first century regarded the subject in a light quite different from that in which the churches now regard it. If it should be selected as a topic it is treated in a manner out of all harmony with God's inspired word. The event is placed a thousand years beyond the world's conversion, and connected with the resurrection of the body as a mere tenement, and with the destruction of the material universe. It is robbed of its power as a motive bearing upon the attitude and conduct of the Christian. With the mass of the professed Christian world it is not the "blessed hope." If it is proper to say they look at the event, it is with cold indifference, or with trepidation and fear, or only as a subject of ridicule. They treat as fanatics and visionaries God's servants who proclaim it as a precious truth in which the dearest hopes of the waiting church are involved.

Some ministers plume themselves on their ignorance of the subject, claiming that their minds are employed on matters vastly more important. As if anything could be more important than this doctrine! I know of no subject having greater power as a formative of Christian character than this when rightly apprehended. The believer, whose affections have laid hold of this truth, whose understanding has been enlightened, is not found on the side of scoffers of the doctrine, nor does he say "It makes no difference if we live right," as many say, when we press the claims of this transforming truth upon their attention; nor does he show signs of weariness, indifference, impatience or disgust under the preaching of one whose pathos and power is born of the glorious subject he is handling. No, no! On the contrary, his eye beams with the radiance of heavenly light; his soul is in raptures over the prospect of soon seeing the King in his beauty, and he feasts on the vision as on the food of angels.

One year ago last June, at a house in Columbia City, I read and glanced through a score or more of letters, in a religious paper, all of which were expressive of the hope entertained by the writers, not one of which made any allusion whatever to the Lord's second coming, and its associated events. Contrast this with our dear Letter Box in THE RESTITUTION, or with the inspired epistles to the churches in Paul's day. I have been present at the "experience meetings" of the popular churches and heard hundreds express their hope, but listened in vain for one word which showed the speaker in sympathy and love with this heart-enrapturing doctrine. How plainly this shows an apostasy from the truth in this direction. The day of the Lord can not come otherwise than as a snare and a thief on the churches, as well as on the world. It is no wonder that they should look upon the recent premillennarian conference as a fanatical movement of time-setters, instead of sober-minded, thoughtful men, coming together to calmly discuss questions of the most thrilling interest; propositions of grand truths which have dropped out of the preaching, if not wholly out of the creeds, of christendom.

SELECTIONS.

Prof. O. Mitchell;

Prediction of the First Eclipse.

To those who have given but little attention to the subject, even in our day, with all the aids of modern science, the prediction of an eclipse seems sufficiently mysterious and unintelligible. How, then, it was possible, thousands of years ago to accomplish this same great object, without any just views of the structure of the system, seems utterly incredible. Follow me, then, while I attempt to reveal the train of reasoning which led to the prediction of the first eclipse of the sun, the most daring prophecy ever made by human genius. Follow, in imagination, this bold interrogator of the skies to his solitary mountain summit—withdrawn from the world—surrounded by his mysterious circles, there to watch and ponder through the long nights of many—many years. But hope cheers him on, and smoothes his rugged pathway. Dark and deep as is the problem, he sternly grapples with it, and resolves never to give over till victory crowns his efforts.

He has already marked that the moon's track in the heavens crossed the sun's, and that this point of crossing was in some way immediately connected with the coming of the dread eclipse. He determines to watch, and learn whether the point of crossing was fixed, or whether the moon, in each succeeding revolution, crossed the sun's path at a different point. If the sun in his annual revolution could leave behind him a track of fire, marking his journey among the stars, it is found that this same track was followed from year to year, and from century to century, with undeviating precision. But it was soon discovered that it was far different with the moon. In case she, too, could leave behind her a silver thread of light, sweeping round the heavens, in completing one revolution, this thread would not join, but would wind around among the stars in each revolution, crossing the sun's fiery track at a point west of the previous crossing. These points of crossing were called the moon's nodes. At each revolution the node occurred further west, until, after a cycle of about nineteen years, it had circulated in the same direction entirely around the ecliptic. Long and patiently did the astronomer watch and wait; each eclipse is duly observed, and its attendant circumstances are recorded, when, at last, the darkness begins to give way, and a ray of light breaks upon his mind. He finds that no eclipse of the sun ever occurs unless the new moon is in the act of crossing the sun's track. Here was a grand discovery. He holds the key which he believes will unlock the dread mystery, and now, with redoubled energy, he resolves to thrust it into the wards, and drive back the bolt.

To predict an eclipse of the sun, he must sweep forward from new moon to new moon, until he finds some new moon which would occur while the moon was in the act of crossing from one side to the other of the sun's track. This certainly was invisible. He knew the exact period from new moon to new moon, and from one crossing of the ecliptic to another. With eager eyes he seizes the moon's places in the heavens, and her age, and rapidly computes where she crosses at her next change. He finds the new moon occurring far from the sun's track; he looks around another revolution; the place of the new moon falls closer to the sun's path, and the next closer, until, reaching forward with piercing intellectual vigor, he at last finds a new moon which occurs precisely at the precise time of the passage across the sun's track. Here he makes his stand, and on the day of the occurrence of that new moon, he announces to the startled inhabitants of the world that the sun shall expire in dark eclipse. Bold prediction! Mysterious prophet! with what scorn must the unthinking world have received this solemn declaration! How slowly do the moons roll away, and with what intense anxiety does the stern philosopher await the coming of that day which should crown him with victory, or dash him to the ground with ruin or disgrace. Time to him moves on leaden wings; day after day, and at last hour after hour, roll heavily. The last night is gone—the moon has disappeared from his eagle gaze, in her approach to the sun, and the dawn of the eventful day breaks in beauty on the slumbering world.

This daring man, stern in his faith, climbs alone to his rocky home, and greets the sun, as he rises and mounts the heavens, scattering brightness and glory in his path. Beneath him is spread out the populous city, already teeming with life and activity. The busy morning hum rises on the still air, and reaches the watching-place of the solitary astronomer. The thousands below him, unconscious of his intense anxiety, joyously pursue their rounds of business, their cycles of amusement. The sun slowly climbs the heavens, sound and bright, and full-orbed. The lone tenant of the mountain-top almost begins to waver in the sternness of his faith, as the morning hours roll away. But the time of his triumph, long delayed, at length begins to dawn—a pale and sickly hue creeps over the face of nature. The sun has reached his highest point, but his splendor is dimmed—his light is feeble. At last it comes! Blackness in eating away his round disc—onward, with slow but steady pace the dark veil moves, blacker than a thousand nights—the gloom deepens—the ghastly hue of death covers the universe—the last ray is gone, and horror reigns. A wail of terror fills the murky air—the clangor of brazen trumpets resounds—an agony of despair dashes the stricken millions to the ground, while that lone man, erect on his rocky summit with arms outstretched to heaven, pours forth the grateful gushings of his heart to God, who had crowned his efforts with triumphant victory.

Search the records of our race, and point me, if you can, to a scene more grand, more beautiful. It is, to me, the proudest victory that genius ever won. It was the conquering of nature, of ignorance, of superstition, of terror, all at a single blow struck by a single man. And now do you demand the name of this wonderful man? Alas! what a lesson of the instability of earthly fame are we taught by this simple recital. He who had raised himself immeasurably above his race—who must have been regarded by his fellows as little less than a god, who had inscribed his fame on the very heavens, and had written it in the sun, with a "pen of iron, and the point of a diamond"—even this one has perished from the earth—name, age, country, all are swept into oblivion; but the achievement stands. The monument reared to his honor stands; and although the touch of time has effaced the lettering of his name, it is powerless, and cannot destroy the fruits of his victory.

A thousand years roll by; the astronomer stands on the watch-tower, of Babylon, and writes for posterity the records of an eclipse; this record escapes destruction, and it is safely wafted down the stream of time. A thousand years roll away; the old astronomer, surrounded, by the fierce but wondering Arabs, again writes and marks the day which witnesses the sun's decay. A thousand years roll heavily away; once more the astronomer writes, from amidst the gay throng that crowds the capital of Europe. Record is compared with record, date with date, revolution with revolution, the past and present together—another struggle commences—another triumph is won. Little did the Babylonian dream that he was observing for one who, after a lapse of three thousand years, should rest upon this very record of the successful resolution of one of Nature's darkest mysteries.

The Beauty of the Heavens.

How delightful it is to contemplate the heavens! They are "stretched out as a curtain to dwell in!" Not only as far as the human eye can see, but beyond the remotest boundary which the highest telescopic power can reach, does the ethereal firmament extend! We can find no limit, no boundary. Millions of miles may be traversed from any given point of space, and still the heavens appear illimitable. Infinity is stamped upon them. And with what gorgeous splendor and magnificence is that curtain adorned! In every direction it is studded with worlds, suns, and systems, all harmoniously moving in perfect and undeviating obedience to the Almighty will. The soul in such a contemplation is absorbed. Earth ceases to hold us with its silver chain. The mind, set free from groveling pursuits, mounts up, as on the wings of an eagle, and soars away through immensity of space, surveying and admiring the innumerable revolving orbs, which, like so many "crowns of glory" and "diadems of beauty," bespangle that firmament "whose antiquity is of ancient days," and which so powerfully attest that "the hand that made them is divine!"

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the governme nt of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruct on of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Who Is Lucifer?

B. WILSON.

A short time ago I received by mail the following note:

BENJ. WILSON—Dear Brother:—Will you give us an exposition of Isa. xiv. 12-14, in THE RESTITUTION?

Who is Lucifer?
What is meant by son of the morning?
How did he fall?
How did he weaken the nations?
What heaven is meant?
Who or what are the stars of God?
What is meant by the sides of the north?

I ask these questions in order that you may know what I wish to learn, or what you understand by the teaching of all that is in the text.

The prophecy from which the above text is taken was delivered by Isaiah in the days of King Hezekiah, a few years after the subversion of the kingdom of Israel, and about the time when Sennacherib came against Judah and Jerusalem. In the preceding chapter we have "the burden of Babylon," in which is graphically foretold the destruction of the city and kingdom of Babylon. "And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldee's excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation." Isa. xiii. 19, 20. Then, by way of contrast, the fourteenth chapter is introduced by a prophecy respecting the restoration of Israel to their own land. "The Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land," etc. The oppressed nation would survive, and become great and prosperous, when their oppressors should be no more. This restoration includes more than the return of the Jews from the seventy years' captivity in Babylon. When the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, he will "set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people;" "and he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." Isa. xi. 11, 12. When the whole house of Israel is thus restored, the prophet says: "And it shall come to pass in the day that the Lord shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage, wherein thou wast made to serve, that thou shalt take up this taunting speech (margin) against the king of Babylon." This proverb or taunting speech reaches from the fourth to the twenty-first verse. The exposition asked for is of verses 12-14, found in the midst of this language, and which will be used by Israel when they shall be at rest, and ruling over their oppressors.

1. Who is Lucifer? Answer: The king of Babylon. The speech is against this king. Verse 4. The word Lucifer signifies light-giver or light-bringer. The planet Venus was formerly called Lucifer, probably on account of its brightness, and which is, when a morning-star, the herald of the day. In the figurative language of the Scriptures an illustrious prince is denoted by a brilliant star. "There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall rise out of Israel." Num. xxiv. 17. "I am the root and the offspring of David—the bright and morning-star." Rev. xxii. 16. The kings of the Babylonian empire were renowned among men, and at the head of the nations, and so will be their antitype, the Assyrian of the latter days. But though this last oppressor of Israel may have "power over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations," (Rev. xiii. 7,) and may be a star of the first magnitude, for a short period, yet his light shall go out in darkness, being totally eclipsed by the rising of Jacob's star—the Sun of Righteousness. The name Lucifer is only tauntingly given, however, as though this king claimed the name belonging to another. Jesus, Jehovah's anointed one, alone will bear this glorious name—"the bright and the morning-star."

2. What is Meant by Son of the Morning? This has already been answered. "Son of the morning" is only a definition of the word Lucifer. A Jewish translation gives this rendering—"O morning-star, son of the dawn!"

3. How Did he Fall? The falling of a symbolic star denotes the taking away of the ruling power or kingdom. When the king of ancient Babylon fell, he was slain, and his kingdom taken away. Daniel told Belshazzar, when interpreting the hand-writing upon the wall of the king's palace, that God had numbered his kingdom and finished it; that he was weighed in the balances and found wanting; and that his kingdom was divided, and given to the Medes and Persians. Dan. v. 26-28. "In that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain." Thus Lucifer fell—his light was suddenly eclipsed. So, in like manner, his antitype of the last days will have a sudden fall. He is called "the Prince that shall come," and "the King that shall do according to his own will," but "he shall come to his end and none shall help him." Dan. ix. 20; xi. 36, 45. His kingdom and dominion shall be taken away, and given to the people of the saints of the Most High. Dan. vii. 27. The Babylonian kingdom ended with the fall of Belshazzar, and then Darius the Median took the kingdom; so the fourth or Roman kingdom, in its last phase, will end with the fall of the last head of the beast, "whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." 2 Thess. ii. 8; Rev. xix. 20; Dan. vii. 11. The kingdom will then be restored to Israel, "and they shall rule over their oppressors." Isa. xiv. 2.

4. How Did he Weaken the Nations? By taking away their power. A nation is weakened, when its army is conquered, and its government overthrown or made tributary. That was the manner in which the king of Babylon acted towards Israel, and other nations.

6. What Heaven is Meant? Lucifer fell from his own heaven or firmament, viz.: The throne of his kingdom. Heaven is used figuratively in this place in order to be in agreement with the rest of the symbol. When he says in his heart: "I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God," he only expresses his ambitious desires and purposes, that he will be the highest and most illustrious ruler in the world.

6. Who or What are the Stars of God? Not literal, but symbolic stars. As stars denote rulers, "the stars of God" may have reference to the rulers of God's people. The kings of Assyria and Babylon brought the kings of Israel and Judah into subjection. Jehovah made use of them to fulfil his own purposes. Hence, we read: "O Assyria, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation. I will send him against an hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge." Isa. x. 5-7. On this account he calls Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, his servant. He meant not to do Jehovah's will, but his own, and to get himself a name. He says: "I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High." His ambition knows no bounds. He not only wishes to exalt himself above the stars of God, but to be like God himself. The ambition of "the king of fierce countenance," who will stand up in "the time of the end" is of like character. He will "magnify himself in his heart," and be also a destroyer of the mighty and holy people. Dan. viii. 23-25. So also the "willful king" and "the man of sin" will magnify or exalt themselves above every god or ruler amongst men. Dan. xi. 36; 2 Thess. ii. 4. Thus may these prophetic characters be identified to be the same as Lucifer, the son of the morning, who said he would exalt his throne above the stars of God.

7. What is Meant by the Sides of the North? This ambitious monarch said: "I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation in the sides of the north." The "congregation" is composed of the house of Jacob; and "the mount of the congregation" is Mount Zion. The Psalmist says: "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King." Psa. xlviii. 1, 2. "The sides of the north" evidently has reference to the position of Mount Zion, as "beautiful for situation." The northern portion of the city probably was, and will be in the future as the Psalmist describes it. "The Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is his rest forever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." Psa. cxxxii. 13, 14. Hence it is "the city of the great King." For any king but the Lord's anointed to aspire after Mount Zion for a dwelling place, is to seek for that which will never be granted. It would be to assume Divine prerogatives, and to sit on the throne of universal empire. The "wicked one" that Paul speaks of, will sit in the temple of God, as though he was the anointed one; and the ambitious king of Dan. xi. 36-45, will plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain, (Zion;) yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him," when Michael shall stand up for the children of Daniel's people. No one can thus exalt himself without being humbled. The Lord has said, "I will break the Assyrian in my land, and on my mountains tread him under foot." Isa. xiv. 25.

The reader will perceive that there is nothing whatever in this taunting speech of restored Israel, to support the idea of some, that Lucifer was once an angel of light, and was literally cast out of heaven, and became the prince of darkness, or the devil. That doctrine must be supported by other Scriptures than this prophecy, or it will remain unproved. I do not know the reason why the brother asked the above questions, or whether my exposition will be satisfactory. Let the reader try what has been written by the word of truth.

Light.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven. Mat. v. 16.

We are lamp-bearers, not stands. We are expected to carry lamps, and oil also. It is not enough that we carry lamps and oil in our earthen vessels; they must be lit, trimmed and burning. Nor is it sufficient that they are burning; they must shine; not on ourselves only, but on others. Nor will it do that they shine on ourselves and on Christians alone; they must shine on other men—men of the world. Neither is it sufficient that the light simply shines on men of the world; but it must so shine as to produce an effect; it must make them reflectors; they must reflect that glory, that brightness, back upon the source of all light. The light is peculiar in itself—its name is "good deeds." The light is not a mere scintillation; it must be a "burning and a shining light." They must see and feel our good deeds, and render unto God their glory. They must shine upon them and be burned in. They must produce their legitimate fruits—glory to our Father in the heavens. Our light must be such that men of the world will acknowledge its rays to be divine.

We read the Bible—men of the world read us. We go to Christ the divine fountain for our light—outsiders are satisfied with our reflected light. They examine our light—our deeds. If, therefore, the light within us be darkness, clouded, or impure, the Author of light suffers more or less in his character.

Our light—or good deeds—comes from our heads and our hands—deeds of the brain, and deeds of the hands. They are either mental or physical.

All Christians must have light, and it must shine upon others. Every Christian is a missionary, by profession. He is an evangelist in a sphere more or less limited. "Go, disciple all nations," is a commission not confined to the ministry. All are interested in spreading the invitation for the marriage supper. All have unconverted friends before whom their light must shine. Plants are pale and sickly without sunlight. So are Christians without the light of the Sun of Righteousness.

It is a peculiarity of our light that the longer it shines the brighter it becomes, and the more heat is thrown out. We are so connected with the divine fountain, that the oftener we draw the larger the channels. The more light we radiate the greater the flow into our lamps. A little care and perseverance will keep us abundantly supplied.

If such be the character of the official duties devolving upon ordinary Christians, what manner of persons should we, the "Advent watchers," be in all good and benevolent deeds? It is one thing to profess to be looking for our Lord's return, and quite a different matter to love his appearing. The theory is good, but the practice is far better. The habit of doing good is well, but the love of it is more glorious.

We live in an age of great mental and physical activity. "Will it pay?" is its motto, rather than "Will it do good?" The more we receive for our services in this age, the less will be due us in the age to come. Let us send our unrequited deeds in advance. Let us invest largely in the coming kingdom. Too much treasure cannot be accumulated. It will yield an hundred per cent. Our wealth in that kingdom is not exposed; no moth, nor rust, nor thieves there.

"Let your light shine." Do not hide it. To shine is its nature; you have no right to obscure it. It is a gift, a divine present, to be faithfully used. The world sits in darkness. It knows not the doom that is approaching. Absorbed in the affairs of this age it has no light to see the future. She has asked her own favored watchmen, "What of the night?" but there is no response in any manner satisfactory; their lamps are extinguished. Let those who have light make use of it. Strive to excel each other in good works. Contend earnestly for the highest prize in the field of benevolence.

To do this will excite no envy nor hatred. The emulation of good works is not earth-born; it is a child of the pure and unfallen—of those who take pleasure in waiting around the throne of light for messages to bear to the heirs of salvation.

Imitate him who went about doing good. It was the soul of his mission, the aim of his life. His instructions were free. As a physician he made no charge, yet he never failed in healing. He raised the dead, cured the lepers, and preached the gospel to the poor.

"Let your light shine." You are without money, perhaps, or only have the widow's mite. Have you hands? use them for God. Have you intellect? put it under tribute. Are you in a community of unbelievers? then open your lamp and let its pure rays drive away the darkness. Do not fear that your oil will fail you.

Conference Report.

The quarterly conference of the Church of God in Michigan met, according to appointment, at Jamestown, Ottawa county, Michigan, Friday evening, Feb. 28, 1879, at 7 p. m.

Opened by singing, and prayer by Brother O. Hoyt, who then spoke upon The Hope of the Christian, from 2 Tim. iv. 8. Adjourned.

Met again Saturday at 9 a. m., for social meeting. The writer read 1 Peter i., and made some remarks upon the subject of hope as set forth in the chapter. Social meeting continued about an hour.

We were expecting Brother Reed, but he did not come, and Brother Hoyt preached a short discourse from 1 Pet. i. 3.

After a recess of thirty minutes we opened with singing, when the writer read a part of Mat. v., and made some remarks upon the subject of the blessings as set forth in the chapter; followed by a grand exhortation from Brother B. Woodward and others. Adjourned.

Met again in the evening, expecting to hear Brother Reed, but were disappointed, as he did not come, and Brother E. Hoyt preached a grand discourse from John iii. 16, upon God's Love for the world. Adjourned.

Met at 9 a. m., Sunday. Had a very interesting social meeting, after which Brother Hoyt preached from Mark xvi. 15-16. Then, as some of the friends were going home, we celebrated the Lord's supper, and adjourned.

Met at 2 p. m. Brother Hoyt discourse on The Prayer of the Thief on Cross, Luke xxiii. 28. After which Brother Woodward made some remarks very appropiate to the occasion. There seemed to be a good deal of interest manifested, and before closing the meeting we gave an opportunity to those intending to lead a new life and become Christians to manifest it by rising to their feet. Eighteen persons arose and desired to become Christians.

Brother E. Hoyt left an appointment for two or three weeks hence, and will attend to the ordinance of baptism to those desiring it.

The Whole Counsel of God.

Paul said he shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God. Acts xx. 27. Does it not follow that those who teach now, should imitate the example of God, and declare the whole counsel of God? Do they do this? I have looked in vain many years, to see the truth set forth on the training and government of children. Do the Scriptures lay this responsibility upon the mother? In my long life of sixty-six years, I have searched and have found no such command to her. But I have found commands like these: "Ye fathers provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Eph. vi. 4; 1 Tim. iii. 4. "One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity." Also, verse 12. "Ruling their children and their own houses well." God said of Abraham: "I know him that he will command his children, and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment." Gen. xviii. 19; Deut. iv. 9, speaking of his words, "but teach them to thy sons, and thy sons' sons." Chapter vi. 7. "And thou shalt teach them diligently, unto thy children," etc. Also, xi. 19: "And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them," etc.

Paul says: "I will that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house," etc. Not a word about the government. How is it this has become so changed that we hear from the pulpit, the press, the lecture room, in society, and in private conversation, that this duty devolves upon the mother exclusively? and that she is responsible to God and to society, for the well or ill doing of the children? Will those who write for THE RESTITUTION set forth the truth on this subject, and give the people the clear light contained in the counsel of God? I apprehend the false teaching on this subject is the cause of a large share of the evils of the present day. May we be guided by the Word of the Spirit into all truth. M. H.

Description of Mohammed.

Mohammed is said to have been of middle stature; to have had a large head, strong beard, round face, and reddish brown cheeks. His biographers state that his forehead was high, mouth wide, his nose long and somewhat of an aquiline shape, that he had large black eyes; that a vein which extended from his forehead to his eyebrows, enlarged when excited by anger; that his splendid white teeth stood far apart; and upon his lower lip was a small mole. His hair, hanging over his shoulders, retained its dark color to the day of his death; he sometimes dyed it brown, but more frequently applied to it odoriferous oils. It was only at his last pilgrimage that he had his head shaven. He trimmed his moustache and his finger-nails very Friday before prayer. His neck, it is said, "rose like a silver bar upon his broad chest." Between his shoulders he had a large mole, which was looked upon as the prophetic seal. A physician once wishing to remove it, Mohammed objected, saying, "He who made it shall also heal it." His hands and feet were very large, yet his step was so light as to "leave no mark upon the sand."

BREVITIES.

A life-size statute of a young woman clothed in a long robe has been discovered near Porto d'Anzo in Italy. It represents a priestess of one of the temples of Actium.

The willow is at last becoming a rival to the eucalyptus for its anti-malarial properties. In the region of Asia Minor about Ephesus, the prevalence of malaria has steadily diminished as the trees has been introduced. Through the efforts of Mr. Van Lennep, Swedish Consul at Smyrna, the willow is now extensively grown in districts which were treeless twenty years ago.

Several schools and societies have of late years been founded by rich Jews in the Ghetto at Rome for the use of the poor, sickly children so long shut up in that wretched quarter of the city. The Prefect and Mayor always attend (under the new regime) at the periodical celebrations in these new institutions. A great change for the better has come over the Ghetto and its inhabitants since 1870.

The Michigan meteor appears to have been a large one. It looked like an immense ball of fire, and lighted the heavens luridly. It exploded near Traverse City with a noise so loud as to be heard at a distance of ten miles, and a force sufficient to shake houses like an earthquake. A fisherman on the shore of Lake Michigan is the only person who saw the explosion. He says that the meteor flew into small pieces, which fell into the water, breaking a hole through thick ice.

The Rev. Charles Chiniquy is now in Australia. He was formerly a priest of the Romish Church in Canada, but for many years he has been a zealous Protestant, and has labored indefatigably as a preacher and lecturer, exposing the errors of Popery. And to such an extent have his labors been blessed, that no less than 25,000 persons have, through his instrumentality, been led to leave the Romish Church in Canada. He is now lecturing in Sydney (Australia) and the suburbs night after night to crowded and enthusiastic audiences, and his visit seems likely to be in a high degree serviceable to the cause of Protestant Christianity.

NUMBERING THE HEART-BEATS.

A French medical journal states that Dr. Guyor, after consulting the best authorities on the subject, and making the necessary calculations, has determined that the number of pulsations during the different ages of life is as follows: During the first year, 43,000,000, in round numbers; during the first two years 120,000,000; the first eight years, 435,000,000; the first twelve years, 614,000,000; the first fourteen years, 668,000,000; the first thirty-six years, giving the figures in full, 1,-220,904,000; during a lifetime of fifty years, 1,928,160,000; of sixty years, 2,-269,800,000, and of eighty years, 3,007,-040,000.

The deepest mine in the world now worked is said to be the Adalbert lead and silver mine in Austria, which is 3,280 feet deep. The next is the Viviers coal mine in Belgium, 2,847 feet. It was sunk to the depth of 3,580 feet, but no coal having been found, the working is at the former level. The deepest coal mines in England are the Dunkirk colliery in Lancashire, 2,824 feet, and the Rosebridge in the same locality, 2,458. The deepest mine in this country is the Yellow Jacket of the Comstock Lode. It is now 2,300 feet below the surface at the mouth of the main shaft, and 4,938 feet below the Gould & Curry croppings. The Savage stands second on the list, and the Imperial the third, both being nearly as deep as the Yellow Jacket.

A monument to commemorate its triumph over Turkey has been ordered in France by the Russian Government. The design is by an aged artist of St. Petersburg, who took part in the campaign of the Napoleonic invasion. On the top of a truncated pyramid stands a Russian eagle, with his talons upon the crescent and the Turkish standard. On the four sides of the pyramid the most important events of the war are depicted in bas-relief. Among the exploits to be represented are the crossing of the Danube, the blowing up by torpedoes of a Turkish ironclad, the storming of Kars, the visit of the Czar to the hospital at Simnitza, and the encampment of the Russians before Constantinople. About the base of the pyramid captured Turkish cannon are to be grouped.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. ONAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 26, 1879.

THANKS to many friends for papers and pamphlets sent us. And thanks to those who have remembered our relief fund. May God reward them a hundred-fold.

SEVERAL articles from our regular contributors are deferred a little for want of room. Will our brethren, who are not regular contributors, please make their articles as short and comprehensive as possible? For many long articles we cannot possibly find room. Please make Conference Reports shorter by leaving out much irrelevant matter.

THERE are two leading views of the prophetic word both of which find able advocates in our times. The one is that the consecutive prophecies of Daniel and John are nearly fulfilled in the history of the past excepting those that pertain to the kingdom and future blessedness. The other view is, that much of Revelation must be fulfilled hereafter. Both these views are advocated to some extent in THE RESTITUTION. We submit the articles to our readers for their study. Our space will not admit a little we might say. So we defer it to another time.

IN presenting the truth, whether by preaching or writing, let it be done in love. Men and women should not be literally denounced who have embraced errors, as this is unavoidable in our times when darkness is so prevalent To point out the more excellent way in the spirit of Christ will often win "souls, which is wise," when a boastful, self-conceited manner, coupled with exclusive proscriptive epithets toward all others of different views, even if erroneous, will shut up every avenue of approach to the mind. With an enlightened understanding should be coupled a loving, kind, sympathetic heart.

The Coming Crisis,

Brother H. V. Reed sends us an article copied from the San Francisco Chronicle by the Chicago Sunday Times, entitled "Coming Chaos," which we lay before our readers in another part of our paper. It does seem to us that the finger of destiny points most ominously to the narrow circle of time embraced between 1850 and 1885. Admitting that the 2300 days of Dan. viii. 14, symbolize years, and that the undivided period of seventy weeks, Dan. ix. 24, or 490 years, was cut off from the commencement of the longer period to measure the existence of the Jewish commonwealth after its complete restoration under Nehemiah's administration, which was effected about B. C. 420, and which, consequently, extends to the destruction of Jerusalem A. D. 70-73, we should then find, by simple addition, that the remaining 1810 years, left after cutting off 490 from 2300, would reach A. D. 1880-1883. Applying the 1260 years, Dan. xii. 7, taking the period symbolically, to Mohammedan supremacy, and reckoning from 622, the commencing date of the Mohammedan era, we again have 1882, as a period of a great crisis.

The Great Pyramid's Grand Gallery measure of 1881-1882 inches is ominously indicative of a great change in 1881-1882. And, as was shown in a late number of THE RESTITUTION, during the circle of years 1880-1885, the great planets Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune all reach their perihelia, giving rise to the most gloomy apprehensions as to what may be coming on the earth, as respects great convulsions in the natural world, accompanied with noisome pestilences that walk in darkness and destructions that waste at noonday. The period of a literal generation, Matt. xxiv. 34, means more, perhaps, than is usually supposed. The period of forty years before the ending of the 400 year period was occupied in offering the gospel to the acceptance of the Jewish people coupled with warnings of what should come on that generation. Matt. xxiii. 36. Our Lord's ministry was about A. D. 30-33. Paul wrote to the Hebrew people about A. D. 61 giving that nation the last warning cry in the different chapters of that epistle. The forty years added to A. D. 30-33 reach A. D. 70-73. To parallel this proclamation, we have a similar warning of a coming crisis announced to the world during the last forty years of the 1810 year period of Gentile domination in Palestine during which God's sanctuary places are trodden under foot by a plurality of Gentile abominations. It is too well known to require proof that what is termed the Advent movement commenced about 1840-1843. The forty years added reach 1880-1883. In accordance with prophecy the civil power, or dominion has been wrested from the Papacy. After 1260 years of robust vigor, from A. D 538 to 1798, the little horn was smitten with a consumption that ate out all the vital energies of its political power ending in the occupation of Rome as the capital of united Italy A. D. 1870. And now the scorching effects of the sixth vial are evaporating the once overflowing waters of the mystic Euphrates. The Russian Bear and the British Lion are startling the world, when it is discerned that the last important prophecies relative to the Orient are in rapid progress of fulfillment through the strife of each for supremacy over the Ottoman's possessions. "Coming events cast their shadows before." The fate-denouncers of coming destruction cried, "Wo, wo, to Jerusalem." And "mystical lore" chimes in with the sure word of prophecy, and prognosticates a nearing doom. A Mother Shipton, a Joseph Hoag and a centenarian negress, Sojourner Truth, like the son of Ananus before the final overthrow of Jerusalem, have uttered their vaticinations of fearful times in the near future.

We gave Mother Shipton's lines in a recent number of THE RESTITUTION. In this number of THE RESTITUTION we have concluded to give Joseph Hoag's vision, as it is termed. We recollect seeing this published in some paper more than forty years ago. It will be found in a letter sent us by Brother H. A. Powers, of Cincinnati, O., last June. We will copy an extract from Josephus relative to the signs preceding the destruction of Jerusalem; and possibly, in our next, may give a piece that was circulated to some extent, last year, entitled "Columbia's Prophecy." While we build our anticipations of the future only on the "Sure word of prophecy," we are compelled to give some little attention to that strange "second sight" that seems to give its possessor the power to presage the shadowy future. Such things exist and are, at least, a matter of curiosity.

Typographical Errors,

In some or our late issues quite a number of typographical errors escaped the detection of the proof-reader, and went into the paper uncorrected:

In Brother Button's article in No. 10, of March 12, the word "Pehema" should have been "Rhema."

In Brother Steele's article on "The End of the World," in the number for March 5, the word "aeons" should have been "atons," and "Mount Olivet" should have been "Mount Olivet," and the words "Hebrew nations" should have been "Hebrew nation."

In Brother Lederer's obituary his name once appears Lederes instead of Lederer.

In the article on the fourth page of the number for March 12, the heading —"The Nations; or the Lost Tribes," should have read—"The Nestorians; or the Lost Tribes." There is a grave error in this article where the Saxons are represented as claiming descent from "Daniel" instead of the tribe "Dan."

In Brother Westbee's article in our last, the Greek word twice printed epi should have been printed both times epei.

SELECTIONS.

[Josephus, Wars of the Jews, B. vi., Chap. v. 2, 3, 4.]

Prodigies Connected with the Destruction of Jerusalem.

Now, there was then a great number of false prophets suborned by the tyrants to impose on the people who denounced this to them that they should wait for deliverance from God; and this was in order to keep them from deserting, and that they might be buoyed up above fear and care by such hopes. Now, a man that is in adversity, does easily comply with such promises; for when such a seducer makes him believe that he shall be delivered from those miseries which oppress him, then it is that the patient is full of hopes of such his deliverance.

Thus, were the miserable people persuaded by these deceivers, and such as belied God himself; while they did not attend nor give credit to the signs that were so evident, and did so plainly foretell their future desolation, but like men infatuated, without either eyes to see, or minds to consider, did not regard the denunciations that God made to them. Thus, there was a star resembling a sword which stood over the city, and a comet, that continued a whole year. Thus, also, before the Jews' rebellion, and before those commotions which preceded the war, when the people were come in great crowds to the feast of unleavened bread, on the eighth day of Xanthicus, (Nisan,) and at the ninth hour of the night, so great a light shone round the altar and the holy house, that it appeared to be bright day time; which light lasted for half an hour. This light seemed to be a good sign to the unskillful, but was so interpreted by the sacred scribes as to portend those events that followed immediately upon it. At the same festival also a heifer, as she was led by the high priest to be sacrificed, brought forth a lamb in the midst of the temple. Moreover, the eastern gate of the inner court of the temple, which was of brass, and vastly heavy, and had been with difficulty shut by twenty men, and rested upon a basis armed with iron, and had bolts that fastened very deep into the firm floor, which was made of one entire stone, was seen to be opened of its own accord about the sixth hour of the night. Now, those that kept watch in the temple came hereupon running to the captain of the temple, and told him of it, who then came up thither, and not without great difficulty was able to shut the gate again. This also appeared to the vulgar to be a very happy prodigy, as if God did thereby open to them the gate of happiness. But the men of learning understood it, that the security of their holy house was dissolved of its own accord, and that the gate was opened for the advantage of their enemies. So these publicly declared, that the signal foreshowed the desolation that was coming upon them. Besides these, a few days after that feast, on the one-and-twentieth day of the month Artemisius, (Iyar,) a certain prodigious and incredible phenomenon appeared; I suppose the account of it would seem to be a fable were it not related by those that saw it, and were not the events that followed it of so considerable a nature as to deserve such signals; for before sunsetting, chariots and troops of soldiers in their armor were seen running about among the clouds, and surrounding of cities. Moreover, at the feast which we call Pentecost, as the priests were going by night into the inner court of the temple, as their custom was, to perform their sacred ministrations, they said, that in the first place they felt a quaking, and heard a great noise, and after that they heard a sound as of a multitude, saying, "Let us remove hence." But what is still more terrible, there was one Jesus, the Son of Ananus, a plebeian and a husbandman, who, four years before the war began, and at a time when the city was in very great peace and prosperity, came to that feast whereon it is our custom for every one to make tabernacles to God in the temple, began on a sudden to cry aloud, 'A voice from the east, a voice from the west, a voice from the four winds, a voice against Jerusalem and the holy house, a voice against the bridegrooms and the brides, and a voice against the whole people." This was his cry, as he went about by day and by night, in all the lanes of the city. However, certain of the most eminent among the populace had great indignation at this dire cry of his, and took up the man, and gave him a great number of severe stripes; yet did not he either say anything for himself, or anything peculiar to those that chastised him, but still went on with the same words which he cried before. Hereupon our rulers, supposing, as the case proved to be, that this was a sort of divine fury in the man, brought him to the Roman procurator, where he was whipped till his bones were laid bare; yet did not he make any supplication for himself, nor shed any tears; but turning his voice to the most lamentable tone possible, at every stroke of the whip his answer was, "Wo, wo, to Jerusalem." And when Albinus (for he was procurator) asked him "Who he was? and whence he came? and why he uttered such words?" he made no manner of reply to what he said, but still did not leave off his melancholy ditty, till Albinus took him to be a madman, and dismissed him. Now, during all the time that passed before the war began, this man did not go near any of the citizens, nor was seen by them while he said so, but he every day uttered these lamentable words, as if it were his premeditated vow, "Wo, wo, to Jerusalem."

Nor did he give ill words to those that beat him every day, nor good words to those that gave him food; but this was his reply to all men, and, indeed, no other than a melancholy presage of what was to come. This cry of his was loudest at the festivals; and he continued this ditty for seven years and five months, without growing hoarse, or being tired therewith, until the very time that he saw his presage in earnest fulfilled in our siege, when it ceased; for as he was going round upon the wall, he cried out with his utmost force, "Wo, wo, to the city again, and to the people, and to the holy house." And just as he added at the last, "Wo, wo, to myself also," there came a stone out of one of the engines, and smote him, and killed him immediately; and he was uttering the very same presages, as he gave up the ghost. Now, if any one will consider these things, he will find that God takes care of mankind, and by all ways possible, foreshows to our race what is for their preservation, but that men perish by those miseries which they madly and voluntarily bring upon themselves; for the Jews, by demolishing the tower of Antonia, had made their temple four-square, while at the same time they had it written in their sacred oracles, that "then should their city be taken, as well as their holy house, when once their temple should become four-square." But now what did most elevate them in undertaking this war, was an ambiguous oracle that was found also in their sacred writings, how "about that time one from their country should become governor of the habitable earth." The Jews took this prediction to belong to themselves in particular, and many of the wise men were thereby deceived in their determination. Now, this oracle certainly denoted the government of Vespasian, who was appointed emperor in Judea. However, it is not possible for men to avoid fate, although they see it beforehand. But some of these men interpreted some of these signals according to their own pleasure, and some of them they utterly despised, until their madness was demonstrated, both by the taking of their city, and their own destruction.

A View From the Mount of Olives.

The Mount of Olives seems to rise up beautifully from the eastern edge of the city, but the deep Valley of Jehoshaphat intervenes. The summit of Olivet is nearly two hundred feet higher than the city, and is crowned with a mosque, and the Church of the Ascension. The setting sun illumines its western slope, dotted with olive trees, and disclosing occasional terraces, and three paths leading over it towards Bethany. Am I really looking upon those sacred localities? It is a wonderful view—it is a holy hour—a time when unutterable thoughts and powerful emotions thrill the soul! Within my range of vision, even near me, what strange, solemn, and all-important events have occurred!

The next morning—the Jewish Sabbath—was clear, bright and balmy, and I saw the sun rise gloriously over the Mount of Olives. A few of us had arranged for an early walk to that sacred mount. Along Patriarch street, a little to the north, and then turning to the right near Calvary, we went down the Via Dolorosa, passing, just before we arrived at St. Stephen's Gate, a number of miserable lepers, sitting by the wayside begging. Going through the gate, we soon descended a deep declivity, passing the spot where it is said the martyr Stephen was stoned to death, and crossing by a bridge the bed of the brook Kedron at the bottom of the Valley of Jehoshaphat, we began to ascend the slope of Olivet.

An enclosure at our right, containing a number of very old and venerable looking trees, represents the Garden of Gethsemane,—a sweet and holy spot, which we long to enter, but pass on, ascending the hill by the central path. Near an old dilapidated stone building, evidently once the tower of a vineyard, we paused to rest, and look back upon the city. Alone, and the sweet stillness of the morning about us, at the suggestion of Mrs. J. E. Tyler, of Louisville, whose interest with that of her husband in those sacred places was always deep and tender, Rev. William Howe, of Boston, led us in prayer, as we kneeled upon the slope where Jesus had often kneeled and spent even whole nights in prayer.

Olivet is a somewhat high hill or range of hills, running north and south, exceeding the extent of Jerusalem, of a grayish appearance, interspersed with green patches, and here and there a sprinkling of olive trees, grouped in clusters or standing in isolation, and covered with a dense, dark foliage. Limestone walls for terracing the slope, and slight ledges of rock serving the same purpose, are noticed as we pass along. On the central and higher summit are a few small buildings, including a church and a mosque.

My first view of Jerusalem from the west was partial and meagre; but now, as I look upon that wonderful city from the Mount of Olives, my anticipations were fully realized. My previous conceptions of its form and appearance were entirely met in the picture before me. There it all lay at my feet in one view. Inclining toward me, I could look upon its very building, see the whole circuit of its walls and the hills on which it stands, all seeming to rise up out of the deep surrounding valley. Oh, what scenes had transpired in those localities beneath my gaze—events that will thrill the world forever!—the thought of which at such a time awakened most powerful emotions. What feet had been where mine were standing—what eyes had looked upon those scenes!

In every direction the view is commanding and glorious. I climbed up to the balcony of the slender minaret, and with rapt eagerness and delight surveyed the far-spreading, varying, and wondrously strange panorama. On the west, all Jerusalem and its environs are seen, and in the horizon beyond there is a line of brown hills about equal in elevation to those occupied by the city. Casting the eye northward, you see a conspicuous eminence crowned with a tower. It is Neby Samwil, the ancient Mizpah, and Gibeon adjoining it on the right. More directly north appears Mount Scopus, among groves of olives. Turning the eye southward of Zion, the hill of Evil Counsel rises up from the Valley of Hinnom, with a rocky and terraced slope. Beyond it is the green plain of Rephaim, and still further on the Convent of Elias on a ridge by the path leading to Bethlehem. Looking now to the east, a wider prospect is unfolded, and the eye rests on objects of deep and thrilling interest. Just down at my right, behind a ridge or spur of the hill, is dear and beloved Bethany.

Almost at my feet begins the "wilderness of Judea," gradually declining in a series of bleached and barren hills, and desolate glens, for ten or twelve miles, when it drops into the low valley of the Jordan. A long extent of this valley is visible, and the course of the river can be traced by the dark line of verdure on its banks. The valley expands toward the south into a wide plain, which terminates at the Dead Sea, a portion of which is distinctly seen, its waters sparkling in the morning sunlight.

Beyond the Jordan valley rises the long range of Moab Mountains, resting like a dark wall against the sky. There, "over against Jericho," are Pisgah and Nebo; and though they cannot now be identified, I doubtless looked upon the very summits where Moses was permitted to behold all the Land of Promise, and whence his glorious spirit went up to the Mount of God. Oh, sacred Olivet! The whole mount is instinct with memories of Jesus. How often his eyes looked upon it and his feet pressed it. He trod the paths as he went over it to the sweet home of his friends. Here he came for seclusion and rest. "In the day-time he was teaching in the temple, and at night he went out and abode in the mount that is called the Mount of Olives." Here how many times the sun went down beneath his gaze, and the leaves rustled in the zephyrs that fanned his holy brow. Here, in some shady retreat, or that olive garden, how often he spoke to them words of heavenly wisdom and power. What sermons and parables were here uttered by the Divine Man! Here he taught, and prayed, and wept. The scene of the Agony and Betrayal was here; and just over this summit where he ascended to heaven, his feet for the last time touched the earth. Oh, what a privilege to trace his pathways here, to kneel where he knelt and suffered, to think of his tears and his triumph, and, best of all, to share his love! As we return, the sacred city lies before us in the morning light, like a picture set in a frame of mountains that are round about Jerusalem, as the Lord is round about his people.

The Manner of Christ's Second Coming, No. 3.

The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein. For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation. This is the generation of them that seek him, that seek thy face, (margin, O God of Jacob. Selah. Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. Who is this King of glory? The Lord, strong and mighty; the Lord, mighty in battle, or from war. Psa. xxiv.

The Psalmist affirms God's right to the earth and all pertaining to it, for the best of reasons—for he hath made it and preserved it, and hath redeemed it.

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, or who shall stand in his holy place?" He answers the momentous question: "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart" What is meant by the expression, "clean hands"? Read Psa. xv. Here we get a clear, definite answer. This agrees with Christ's words: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Let us not deceive ourselves. We cannot enter into the hill of the Lord while our hands are stained with fraud, or our lips with slander, or our tongues uttering lies. If there is one thing more positively condemned than another by the Word of God, it is the taking of usury,—unlawful interest; yet we have those in the church who have followed the unlawful and God forbidden practice for years. We may have our consciences seared as with a hot iron; we may deceive the church, but God cannot be deceived. Our hands must be clean and our hearts pure; and that man who tells me plainly of my faults is my best friend.

The four last verses of this psalm, if we are correct in our understanding, apply to our Lord and his army, after they have arrived at the gates of Jerusalem, the holy city, or the hill of the Lord. The Jews will be gathered in part in the city; when the king makes a demand for admittance that demand is made with authority. "Lift up your heads, O ye gates! or, open wide, ye age-lasting doors, that the King of glory may come in." They ask, "Who is this King of glory?" "The Lord, strong and mighty; mighty in battle." He does not tell them he is the crucified Nazarene. Thus they soon discover after the gates are opened and they look on him whom they have pierced. The scene which follows we feel inadequate to describe. Here our Lord's last lament over their dreadful mistake in rejecting their Messiah, and over their city and temple, has its full accomplishment. "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that were sent unto thee, how oft would I have gathered you as a hen doth gather her chickens under her wings, but ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." That time is now come. They look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn on account of him; that mourning is very plainly set forth in Zech. xii. 9-13: He pours upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and of supplication; and they shall look on him whom they have pierced, and they sh. ll mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son. Their dreadful crime of rejecting their Messiah, of crucifying God's dear Son, or, as Peter says, killing the Prince of life; their untold degradation and suffering for two thousand years for which the history of the world gives no parallel, rush upon them like an avalanche. One asks, What are these wounds in thy hands? Then he shall answer, These with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. We must leave the Jew in his deep humiliation for the present.

To our understanding here begins the antitype of Solomon's reign, or the mustard seed form of the Kingdom of God. After being made manifest to his brethren, the Jews, then will Rev. i. 4, be fulfilled. Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so. Amen.

Here begins his Millennial reign of one thousand years. He takes the throne of His father David and reigns over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Isa. ix. 6; Luke i. 32.

To write a title of the Holy Spirit's utterances through the prophets of the glorious reign of Israel's King, and the world's Redeemer, would be to exceed our intended limits. David exclaims, "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the rivers to the ends of the earth." Zechariah says, "He shall be King over all the earth." Paul says "He must reign till he has put all enemies under his feet; the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death!" Oh, joyful, happy day! soon may it come!

The light on some parts of Zechariah xiv. is not clear our dark. That the Jews, or Israel, will have to undergo a time of severe trial seems evident even before they can become subjects in God's kingdom. Let him that readeth understand, and he that hath the clear light, let it shine.

We will recapitulate, in part, that we may be clearly understood. First, our Lord comes under the pouring out of the sixth vial. He comes as a thief, sudden, silent; the first resurrection of the dead saints and the translation of both the quick and dead, to meet the Lord in the air, where takes place the marriage of the Bridegroom with his Bride, the church. They are then married and prepared for the work of subjugation. Rev. xix. They set forward from Mount Sinai to Jerusalem.

We would ask the reader to carefully consider the space of time between the translation of the saints, and their arrival at Jerusalem. Great and mighty events will transpire. We repeat the language of Balaam. Alas! who shall live when God doeth this?

And now, dear reader, have we the necessary qualifications to enter into the hill of the Lord? There is a world of meaning in these few words—clean hands and a pure heart.

Report of Meeting.

Ed. Restitution:—Have just returned home from Bro. Pierson's, near White Cloud, Kan., where we gave seven discourses to a respectable and attentive people who manifest a commendable interest and zeal for the truth brought out principally by the efficient labors of our beloved brother Pierson, who we are sorry to say was confined at home with his family, his dear little boy being brought very low—near the grave. May our good Father in heaven bless and extend life. On Wednesday the 12th inst. we assembled on the banks of Cedar Creek, where we commended the Bible as our creed an all sufficient rule of life, "The Church of God" as our name with reasons why; and the essential points of our faith respecting man and death, Jesus, the resurrection and life. Faith in the gospel, God's plan of salvation, changes our heart or mind and affections. Reformation of life and baptism by a burial changes our state of relation, while the third and last change would be effected by a resurrection to eternal life—a spirit-birth, configured by our baptism in water. Then we buried two worthy ones, we trust, into the death of Christ the anointed one for remission of sins. May they walk worthy, walk close with God, and then gain the palm and the robe when Jesus comes. May others now almost persuaded soon follow. Amen. T. E. ADAMS.

POETRY.

The Mysteries of Prayer.

J. S. B. MONSELL, LL. D.

I asked for grace to lift me high
Above the world's depressing cares.
God sent me sorrow. With a sigh
I said, "He has not heard my prayers."

I asked for light that I might see
My path along life's thorny road;
But clouds and darkness shadowed me
When I expected light from God.

I asked for peace, that I might rest,
And think my sacred duties o'er;
When lo! such horrors filled my breast
As I had never felt before.

"And oh," I cried, "can this be prayer,
Whose plaints the steadiest mountains move?
Can this be heaven's prevailing care?
And oh, my God, is this thy love?"

But soon I found that sorrow, worn
As duty's sentinel, stills earth supplies;
And out of darkness, meekly borne,
Unto the righteous light doth rise.

And soon I found that fears, which stirred
My startled soul God's will to do,
On me more real peace conferred
Than in life's calm I ever knew.

Then, Lord, in thy mysterious ways
Lead my dependent spirit on;
And wheresoe'er it kneels and prays,
Teach it to say, "Thy will be done."

Let its one thought, one hope, one prayer,
Thine image seek, thy glory see;
Let every other wish and care
Be left confidingly to thee.

Report of Quarterly Assembly.

The quarterly assembly of the Church of God met on Saturday night before the second Sunday in this month, near Browntown, Warren Co., Va.

Five discourses were delivered by the writer during the meeting, and as we, as a people, maintain that baptism is only valid after an understanding of the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and that neither alone, but both together, fit or prepare for a union with that name, in baptism; and there being some who were ignorant of the things of the kingdom promised to the fathers, and even the things of the name, but just had come to see that it was right according to the teaching of the apostles to baptize in the single name, as their phrase is, when baptized; and there being some, like the false prophets of old, for handfuls of barley, and for pieces of bread, who make the hearts of the righteous sad whom God hath not made sad, and strengthen the hand of the wicked that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life before getting into the Life-giver, and thereby emboldening such to claim recognition by us as Christians, on the hypothesis that they favor the teaching of and faith in the kingdom of God, but not as essential before baptism, but contend that preaching Christ is preaching the kingdom, etc.; this all-important subject was disposed of in the run of the discourses, much to the satisfaction of the assembly.

In answer to the plea that we must take men's words with regard to their being on savable grounds, and that we cannot be their judges, I showed that in holding fast to the form of sound words we not only save ourselves, but them that hear us, thus making the word of God, which is to judge or save us at the last day, our judge now—sycamore give me this judge; and that we, as workmen to be approved of God, must determine by his word whether anyone has on the whole armor or not. Among the many proofs of this position, the parable of the king's son was cited, and special attention called to the time when the king came in to see the guests and saw a man there who had not on a wedding garment, it being the custom of the ancient kings to have just such a garment as he wished any one of his guests to appear in, so that there need be no mistake. It was not left to the guests to say what kind of a garment they should appear in. And the king saith unto him, How comest thou in hither, not having a wedding garment? and he was speechless. Then said the king to his servants, Bind him hand and foot, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Right here we drove a nail in a sure place, fastened by the Master of assemblies in vindication of the great truth that we can know whether we have on the bridal robe or not before our King comes to make up his jewels. We all were made to celebrate the praise of our King often while assembled together, by the use of many of the sweet songs of Zion—the singing being led by Brother Pryor, who understands the rudiments of music—that he has provided a wedding garment for all who will accept it just as it is prepared. I showed that it was interwoven throughout, from bottom to top, without seam; and what God hath joined together let no man put asunder; by counting every indispensable feature in the gospel on my fingers, to silence forever the hobby that there is no fixed standard by which we as workmen may know whether others are in the faith or not, fully corroborating and demonstrating by the Holy Oracles, T. Wilson's testimony on that important subject.

Now, the counting on the fingers:

1. Faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ.

2. Repentance.

3. Baptism in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins.

4. Breaking bread and drinking wine—in order to show forth the death of him who hath redeemed us and washed us in his own blood, and will make us kings and priests unto our God.

Then, in order to attain to that high destiny, we must give all diligence to add to this faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. In the the beautiful language of the poet,

Charity, a fruitful vine,
From Christ, the bleeding root,
Receives its life and sap divine,
And bears immortal fruit.

This being the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, I plainly showed that we are required by the Master Builder to take heed how we build thereupon, lest we encourage some to be among the guests not having on a wedding garment, and thus be found speechless when the King immortal comes to bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

In considering the claim upon the part of our adversaries, that preaching Jesus is preaching the kingdom, I plainly showed that a minister from the United States to France might talk ten years to the people of France about President Hayes, and the people of France would know very little more about the government or things concerning the United States, by his talk, than when he first began. But just let him reverse the matter, and talk to them about the locality, boundary lines, divisions and subdivisions, and the people, the laws and lawgivers, the judges, etc., and in this way the people of France would soon come to understand the things of the United States, the president included.

So in preaching the kingdom of God we are bound to preach Christ, for he is the destined King of the kingdom; but not so just to talk pretty about Christ; for the religious world has paid its millions to the best talent it could procure, for centuries, for just such preaching, and it is just as ignorant to-day of the glorious doctrine of the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ, as set forth by the apostles and prophets, to constitute them heirs to the eternal inheritance, as when they first began.

And again, in reference to those who can only give their own words that they were in the faith once delivered to the saints, before they were baptized, when it can be proven by the Word of God that they were not, I read to the assembly a part of the fourth chapter of Ezra, the scribe of the Lord, with many other infallible proofs that it is forbidden.

For the benefit of the few honest workers—for I believe them to be few—I will here give a few verses, how when the adversaries of Judah heard that the children of the captivity builded the temple unto the Lord God of Israel; then they came to Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers, and said unto them, Let us build with you: for we seek your God, as ye do, etc. But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua and the rest of the chiefs of the fathers of Israel said unto them, ye have nothing to do with us to build a house unto our God; but we, ourselves, together, will build unto the Lord God of Israel. Then the people of the land troubled them in building, and hired counselors against them, to frustrate their purpose. Here it was made plain that the true servants of God have in all ages, as well as the present, been troubled by the devotees of error with their hirelings: that there is not inducement enough in error for anyone to advocate it without extra reward. Not so with priceless truth, as brother Austin Curtis calls it, which article was read by the writer and re-read by the lovers of truth, much to the edification of the assembly. Yes, priceless truth! All who come to understand it feel so amply paid now, in view of the exceeding great and precious promises it holds out to all who lay fast hold of it, that they dare not trifle in it, but rejoice in heeding the divine injunction to buy the truth and sell it not.

Finally, to show that we, as a people—claiming to have the whole truth (which thoroughly furnishes the man of God to all good works) and believing in the soon-coming of the Lord to supply all the wants of his saints,—should be separate from the world, by having no affinity with any of its institutions, such as free-masonry, odd-fellowship, life insurance companies, or politics, etc., I also read the ninth chapter of the book of Ezra, with its connection, on that subject.

To keep this report from being much longer I will only cite a few passages, as the reader can turn and read for himself: "Now when these things were done the princes came to me, saying, the people of Israel, and the priests, and the Levites, have not separated themselves from the people of the lands, doing according to their abominations, so that the holy seed have mingled themselves with the people of those lands, yea the hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass. And when I heard these things, I rent my garment and my mantle, and sat down astonished. Then were assembled unto me every one that trembled at the words of the God of Israel, because of the transgression of those that had been carried away, and I sat astonished until the evening sacrifice, and having rent my garment and my mantle, I fell upon my knees, and spread out my hands unto the Lord my God, And said, O my God, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God; for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens."

The decision of the assembly was that we are bound, by the law of the spirit of life that we be made free from the law of sin and death, to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, that we may be found in peace, each having a wedding garment on, unspotted from the world, at the great marriage feast.

A Remarkable Vision.

A few days since I was led by a peculiar train of circumstances to visit a worthy member of the Society of Friends, with whom I have long enjoyed an agreeable acquaintance in business relations. During the interview our conversation turned upon religious matters and the signs of the times. In this connection a copy of the following remarkable vision was placed in my hands for perusal. Satisfied of its authenticity, and at once appreciating its value, I obtained permission to take a copy of it for my own use, and subsequently determined to send a copy to THE RESTITUTION for publication if considered worthy. The vision has been published before, but probably only in periodicals circulating principally among the Friends.

Accompanying the paper was a copy of a note—signed "Z. D."—addressed to the editor of the journal to whom it was once offered for publication, from which I quote the concluding paragraph as follows:

"I will remark, however, that Joseph Hoag was an eminent minister of the Society of Friends, remarkable for his great piety and power as a minister; and, from predictions which he made during a religious visit through this part of the country many years ago, which have actually been fulfilled; we will suppose that if ever the gift of prophecy fell upon a modern man, it was he."

Then follows the vision thus:

In the year 1803, probably in the eighth or ninth month, I was alone in the field and observed that the sun shone brightly, but a mist eclipsed the brightness of its shining. As I reflected on the singularity of the event, my mind was clothed with a silence the most solemn that I remember ever to have witnessed; for all my faculties were laid low, and unusually brought into silence. I said to myself, what can all this be?

I do not recollect ever to have been sensible of such feelings, and I heard a voice from heaven saying, "This that thou seest that dims the brightness of the sun, is a sign of the present and coming time. I took the fathers of this country from a land of oppression, I planted them here amidst a forest, I blessed them and sustained them, and while they were hungry I fed them, and they became a numerous people. But they are now become proud and lifted up, and have forgotten me who nourished and protected them in the wilderness, and are running into every abomination of which the old country was guilty, and have taken quiet from the land, and have suffered a dividing spirit to come among them: lift up thine eyes and behold."

And I saw them dividing in great heat. This division began in the churches on points of doctrine. It commenced in the Presbyterian society, and went through the various religious denominations, and in its progress and close, its effects were nearly the same in all. Those who dissented, went off with high heads and taunting language, and those who kept to the original doctrine appeared exercised and sorrowful; but when the dividing spirit entered the Society of Friends, it raged in as large a degree as any I had before observed; and as before those who had separated, went with lofty looks and a taunting, censuring language; and those who kept to their ancient principles retired by themselves.

It next appeared in the lodges of the Free Masons, and set the country in an uproar for a length of time; then it entered politics throughout the United States, and did not stop until it produced a civil war, and an abundance of blood was shed. In the course of the combat the Southern States lost their power, and slavery was annihilated from their borders. Then a monarchial government arose and established a national religion, and made all societies tributary to support its expenses. I saw them take property from the Friends to a large amount. I was amazed at beholding all this and I heard a voice proclaim: "This power shall not always stand, but with this power will I chastise my church, until they return to the faithfulness of their forefathers. Thou seest what is coming upon thy native land for their iniquity and the blood of Africa, the remembrance of which has come before me. This vision is for many days."

I had no intention of writing it for many years, until it became such a burden that for my own relief I have so written.

(Signed) JOSEPH HOAG.

Concerning that part of this prophecy—if such it may be called—that is yet unfulfilled, I may say there is now as much possibility, and even probability, that it will be fulfilled within the next six years, as there was in 1825 that there would be a civil war in this country resulting in the abolition of slavery in the same length of time.

That event was seen by other thoughtful and pious men besides Mr. Hoag, though not in vision, and so have some of the yet "coming events" that have "cast their shadows before."

For more than twenty years has the writer been impressed with a clear and distinct conviction that this government would retain its original form and power until about 100 years old, and that it would then be suddenly overthrown by a politico-military revolution. This conviction has been occasionally expressed in private conversation, but this is the first that I have ventured to mention it publicly. The treaty of peace by which the independence and nationality of the United States was recognized by Great Britain and other powers, was executed in 1783; therefore the 100 years will end in 1883. That the elements of revolution are rife all through the land, no well informed man need be told; but many who know the fact, vainly hope that the threatened danger will be averted, the integrity of the government maintained, and the much vaunted power of mankind to govern themselves by the expressed will of majorities, be fully sustained and demonstrated. But those who have looked down deep into the foundations that underlie this government, by the light of God's Word and Spirit, cannot have failed to discover therein an element entirely subversive of all government worthy the name, a principle of license, underlying that of liberty, which must sooner or later manifest its evil nature, and, by its own inherent corruption, send the whole structure tottering to its fall. While disclaiming the the possession of prophetic authority, I can but express the opinion that this event will transpire during the early years of the next decade.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Please accept thanks for extra copies, and be assured your kindness is highly appreciated. We find a place for them, have distributed in hope that good may come of them. Prejudice against the truth always has been, and still is strong in this part of the country.

Our little body numbers nine, which is encouraging to one who stood alone for years, a by-word and reproach to all the county round about. We meet every first day of the week, from house to house, to read the Scriptures for our comfort and admonition, and to keep in memory the Lord's death until he comes again. There are some others who at first would not listen, are now searching the Scriptures to see if these things are so. Dear brother, we condole with you in your bereavement. We, too, have laid away a father, mother, sister and brother, but we rejoice that the time is not far distant when sorrow and sighing will flee away. Crying and dying shall be no more, and tears shall be wiped from off all faces. May we all meet on that glorious resurrection morning to part no more.

NEWS ITEMS.

The Szegedin (Hungary) calamity turns out to have been of more appalling proportions than even the first reports indicated. Of 9,700 houses, all except 201 were swept away by the avalanche of waters that rolled suddenly upon the doomed city. A dispatch from Pesth says "the lowest estimate now current fixes the number drowned at 2,000. Many persons believe that 4,000 perished, as the gale prevented a majority of the inhabitants from hearing the first alarm. The whole country below Szegedin and Temisvar is strown with caravans of people. All villages and boroughs have hospitably opened their houses and stores to the refugees.

A cable dispatch from Pesth, in Hungary, says that 120,000 persons were rendered homeless by the recent overflow of the river Theiss, that 8,200 houses were swept away, and 1,000 persons drowned.

LONDON, March 20.—A dispatch from Pesth to the London Times says: "Household animals are constantly appearing on the surface of the water at Szegedin. The same would doubtless be the case with human corpses, if any considerable number were buried in the ruins. Twelve hundred of the people of Szegedin have taken refuge at Temisvar. Five hundred and sixty-seven families and three hundred and forty-two single people have taken refuge at Mako, no one of whom misses a relative. Six blind beggars reached Temisvar safely."

LONDON, March 21.—A dispatch from Pesth says the Rivers Szanios, Unros and White Koros are rising. The dykes at Szentes have been repaired. It is doubtful whether the dykes at Tittel can resist floods.

SZEGEDIN, March 21.—Many more corpses have been recovered. A fearful smell of decomposing bodies comes from the ruins.

TOULON, March 21.—The French floating battery, Arrogante, foundered off Hyeres, France, in a gale on Wednesday. Forty-seven men were drowned out of a crew of 122. The storm arose during firing practice, and the Arrogante sprung a leak. The ship Souverain, which was near by, was unable to render any assistance.

It is said that the death rate in Cashmere, India, from famine is terrible, and that at the present death rate the province is liable to be depopulated by the end of the year.

Of the 9,700 houses composing the Hungarian city Szegedin, which has just been inundated by the River Theiss, only 201 remain. It is believed that 2,000 people, 10,000 horses and 80,000 sheep have perished. The flood is now slowly subsiding, but the cold is causing intense suffering among the thousands camped upon the site of the town.

DIED.

JACKSON—At Pacific Cal., March 4, 1879, sister Sarah A. Jackson, wife of brother B. L. Jackson, of Auburn, Ill., aged fifty-two years, six months and two days.

She, with her husband and little daughter, had been traveling during the last ten months, in southern Kansas and Colorado, hoping the genial climate of those countries would improve her much impaired health; and for some time of late she and her friends were much encouraged and fondly hoped that by another fall she would return to her home in Aurora with her health much improved. Her illness was of the lungs and heart, and she had been a great sufferer since the 20th of October, 1877. Still, her death was shockingly sudden and unexpected. Sister Jackson had been a worthy member of the church of Christ for over twenty years. Under the instruction of brothers Wilson and Thomas she gained a knowledge of the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Je us the Christ, as taught by Christ and the apostles. The church has sustained a heavy loss, but no sorrow not as those that have no hope. Her remains were brought to Aurora for burial.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I wish to say to the brethren in Kansas and Missouri that their invitations are received. I will not be able to start on my tour before the last of May, but will notify them in time to make arrangements.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

I will visit for the purpose of holding meetings and in the interest of THE RESTITUTION soliciting renewals and new subscriptions, Kansas, Mercer county, Mo., April 1st to 14th; St. Joseph, Mo., as enter M. Hoot may arrange, April 15th to 18th; Brownsville, Kansas, April 19th to 25th; Morrill, Kansas, as brother Taylor may arrange, April 26th to May 5th; Blue Springs, Nebraska, as brother J. F. Clark may arrange, May 6th to 12th; and from May 13th to June 1st in southern Kansas as arrangements may be made. Would like to hear from Marysville south by the way of Manhattan and Emporia, to Wilson county. Brethren along that line desiring a visit will correspond with me at any of the above named points, or at home—Bella Union, Iowa—for the next thirty days.

POETRY.

A Psalm of Life.

LONGFELLOW.

Tell me not in mournful numbers
"Life is but an empty dream!"
For the soul is dead, that slumbers,
And things are not what they seem.

Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal;
"Dust thou art,—to dust returnest,"
Was not spoken of the soul.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way;
But to act that each to-morrow
Find us farther than to-day.

Art is long, and time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still like muffled drums are beating
Funeral marches to the grave.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a hero in the strife!

Trust no future howe'er pleasant!
Let the dead past bury its dead!
Act—act in the living present!
Heart within, and God o'erhead!

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time;

Footprints that, perhaps, another
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

Longfellow's Psalm of Life—A Paraphrase.

ELLAN H. MARRUDER.

Tell me not in mournful numbers
"Life is but an empty dream!"
For the soul is dead that slumbers,
And things are not what they seem.

Life is real! Life is earnest,
Though the grave's its present goal;
"Dust thou art, to dust returnest,"
Tells the story of the soul.

What if Adam's primal fall
Brought death and sorrow in its train
The love of God o'erreaches all,
And brings us back to life again.

"Sown in weakness, raised in power"
When the archangel's trump shall sound,
No longer tenant of the hour,
Man again springs from the ground.

Immortal life, he then shall win,
Nor ever dread death's dark domain,
Through Him who conquered death and sin,
And brings His own to life again.

Much of enjoyment, mixed with sorrow,
Is our present end and way;
Let it not, that each to-morrow,
Find us happier than to-day.

Art is long and time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still like muffled drums are beating
Funeral marches to the grave.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle,
Be a hero in the strife.

Trust our future; it is resplendent;
Let the dead past bury its dead;
Act, act in the living present
Faith within and God o'erhead.

Great and good thoughts all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time;

Footprints that, perhaps, another
Sailing o'er life's stormy main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
Hopeful of our future fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

COMING CHAOS.

An Old Astrologist's Terrible Prediction for 1881.

Within the last few years that ancient study which for many centuries from a remote antiquity ranked as the first and most profound of sciences, astrology, has been revived in a form that is exciting deep interest and engaging the attention of leading savants in Europe and America. Although astrology in modern times has been ignored by intelligent people as an utterly groundless and exploded science, pertaining to the ignorant educations and superstitions of the ancients, the theory which is now powerfully supported by eminent scientists, that the natural process of the earth, electrical phenomena, great calamities in the form of earthquakes, tornadoes, floods, droughts, pestilence and famine, and even political and social conditions, are subject to planetary influences, is nothing less than the old astrological study divested of the superstitions and absurd theories with which it was surrounded in the middle ages. What astrology was in that remote period when it was allied with the religious systems of Phœnicia, Persia and Egypt, when it involved an advanced degree of astrological knowledge, governed the rules of architecture and the philosophy of government; when it indicated to the sages of Chaldea the all-momentous event in human history, and directed their way to the lowly hamlet of Bethlehem, must ever remain a solemn mystery. It must be regarded as the greatest and all-comprehensive of the lost sciences, unless the studies of the present day of planetary relations and their influences be the restoration of astrology to its original form of truth and systematic calculation in the suspicious light of modern astronomical research.

A few months since an article appeared in an English scientific journal discussing the influences and effects likely to result from a grand conjunction of four of the principal planets of the solar system, which culminates in 1881, with reference to the earth, and the discussion has since engaged the attention of astronomers and other prominent scientists on this side of the Atlantic, eliciting much interesting calculation and various discomforting predictions of impending calamities. These prognostications are based upon an expected derangement of the equilibrium of solar and planetary attractions, and a disturbance of that mysterious agent, the electrical power, which performs an important function in maintaining the harmony of the spheres, beyond the capacity of human research thus far to fathom. A conjunction of four of the principal planets has never occurred before in a historic period, and probably not since the creation of the earth, according to the Scriptural chronology. Two tripartite conjunctions have occurred during the Christian era, the first in the fifth, and the second in the seventh century. In both instances the periods were attended with great natural convulsions and political disturbances upon the earth. The conjunction of the seventeenth century was contemporaneous with a series of destructive earthquakes in different parts of the earth, a period of desolating warfare, and a terrible devastation of all Europe and Asia by the plague. At this time the ravages of the plague and the great fire in London were accurately predicted by the famous English astrologer, Lilly, ten years previously.

These ominous discussions recently attracted the attention of Olof Limberg, a resident of this city, living on Valuein street, near Twentieth, who had in his possession a quantity of antique manuscripts pertaining to astrological studies, belonging to an ancestor named Peter Hansen, who was a nephew and pupil of the celebrated Danish astrologer, Tycho Brahe, and lived in Copenhagen in the years 1504 to 1512, according to the dates which appear on some of the manuscripts. These manuscripts had been preserved as curious relics, their purport not having been particularly investigated, and being little understood by the present possessor. They consisted in most part, of abstract mathematical calculations, interspersed with astronomical maps and diagrams, and a confusion of strange hieroglyphics. It was known, however, that a great mass of astrological predictions, computed by the old Dane, tended to a momentous culmination in the year 1881, and when the scientific speculations regarding the approaching planetary conjunction attracted the attention of Mr. Limberg, the circumstance occurred to his recollection as a rather interesting coincidence. Mr. Limberg gave information of these curious old manuscripts in his possession, with the suggestion that they might afford the material for an interesting article bearing upon the astronomical studies exciting so much interest at the present time. Mr. Limberg, though of Danish ancestry in some remote degree, is of Swedish nativity, and little versed in Danish literature, and he was unable to render any effective assistance in unraveling the deep mysteries of the Hansen manuscripts, and he was unwilling to permit the sacred relics of his illustrious ancestor to leave his immediate custody. The Chronicle staff was also found to be deficient in the penetration of occult science enshrouded in ancient Danish philology in a musty chirography and a musty state of preservation.

In this dilemma the irrepressible spirit of investigation was accommodated through the kindly services of Christian Andersen, a gentleman of scholastic attainments in the Danish classics, connected with a leading mercantile house in the city. Mr. Andersen devoted his evenings for nearly three weeks in deciphering portions of these curious old manuscripts; but the mathematical calculations were generally abstruse, having no key to indicate their precise purport, and defied interpretation. A most interesting result attained by Mr. Andersen was the discovery of an autograph letter of the great German astronomer, Kepler, the purport of which would seem to indicate that Kepler and Hansen had been associated in their scientific studies, and were accustomed to compare observations and computations. The following is a free translation of this interesting letter:

PRAGUE, June 18, 1608.

Herr Hansen—Dear Friend: I have at last discovered the crazy little figure that so turned my calculations all awry, and made me so many days and nights of wasted labor. You can see now that in computing from the opposition of Mars, it has no authenticity in describing the eclipse, and no quality can be expressed that will not lead to an indefinite variance. I drop the old, and only compute from the periodical positions of Mars described by angles, and the solutions maintain entire harmony with observations to the end. This will show you what a great error—

[Here follows an elaborate mathematical problem not within the scope of ordinary understanding to elucidate.]

I am anxiously awaiting Basil's comparisons, which I feel quite sure will agree with your conclusion that led me, my dear Hansen, to detect this erroneous point in my calculations.

[The succeeding page is for the most part undecipherable, but apparently relates in the main to social and domestic matters, indicating a very intimate association. With difficulty the concluding paragraph is made out almost complete.]

I send * * * your good family. I do the more realize and congratulate the happiness in which you live, when contrasting the sunshine of your bright home with the shadow of grief that hangs over your afflicted friend,

JOHANN KEPLER.

The pathetic sentence that concludes this letter evidently refers to the sad bereavement sustained by the great astronomer, about the year in which it bears date, in the loss of his wife and children, who were swept away by a pestilence that prevailed in Prague. Mr. Andersen succeeded in deciphering and translating a great mass of Herr Hansen's writings in disconnected passages, being in most part descriptive of astronomical problems and explanatory of deductions and comparisons entirely incomprehensible without an understanding of the mysterious laws or theories of astrological science on which they are based. The manuscripts embody the results of years of arduous labor, and seem to embrace a connected chain of astrological calculations extending through several centuries, and beyond the present period. At intervals bold predictions occur, which are attended with mathematical demonstrations and astronomical diagrams. The most remarkable deduction, and the one to which Herr Hansen attaches extreme significance, as already intimated, centers upon the period from 1880 to 1885, more than two and a half centuries from the time in which the Danish sage lived and studied his mysterious science.

This astonishing coincidence with present scientific apprehension is the more remarkable from the fact that the old astronomer could not have foreseen the grand quadruple planetary conjunction approaching, for the reason that the superior planets embraced therein were not discovered and identified at his time. This circumstance would denote an authentic system of astrological calculation not known to modern astronomical science, and to which the problems of Herr Hansen might furnish the key, if they were capable of elucidation. The great plague of 1664-5 is clearly predicted, with cumulative disaster upon the British metropolis, indicating the great fire more than half a century in advance, and it is possible that after all the English astrologer, Lilly, borrowed his predictions from his predecessors. The French revolution and the rise and fall of Napoleon are clearly predicted and with entire precision in the designation of years. The predictions of the Napoleonic period are accompanied with numerous demonstrations in the form of charts that are apparently terrestrial and celestial combinations, the designs of which surpass understanding. In one of these charts is represented the map of Europe with the relative position of certain stars. A sinuous line extends across the map from the French boundaries, terminating in central Russia, at a point on which the rays of two stars of superior magnitude converge. The line is supposed to represent the triumphal march of the emperor, terminating with the fatal disaster of Moscow.

The final prognostication of Herr Hansen relating to this chart is in this form: "The conqueror shall become haughty and despotic, drunken with ambition, leading his victorious host through fire and blood as a glutton revels at a feast. Then shall he penetrate the north for new conquest, passing beyond the line of his auspicious star, and two stars of evil omen confront him. His victorious banners shall wither like dry twigs in the blast of fire. He stagger back before a hurricane of destruction, tattered, bleeding and torn, and fall, prostrate to the earth. Yet shall he rise again in the furious agony of a dying giant, to sink forever, choking in a sea of blood." Numerous like predictions occur, which seem to refer conclusively to momentous events in modern history, among which are the destruction of Lisbon by earthquake, the Crimean war, extinction of the papal temporality, the Franco-German conflict, and other great natural and political convulsions; while a great proportion of the prognostications are not readily assigned, probably referring to events that were unduly magnified in the calculations of the astrologer, or as likely were erroneous predictions of events that did not occur at all. The rise of the mighty nation on the western continent, undoubtedly referring to the American republic, is vaguely alluded to, with no reference to the war of independence or any of the leading events in the early history of this country.

In the latter portion of his predictions, however, tending to a great culmination of natural and political convulsions, which he locates in the early part of the 1880 decade, Herr Hansen devotes special attention to the great nation on the western continent, which he seems to regard as a chief point upon which impending calamities from pernicious stellar influences will converge. Many pages of astrological mathematics are interspersed with rather gloomy deductions, of which the following specimens are translated: "The second half of the century (the nineteenth) opens with dark foreboding, and the whole globe is flecked with angry shadows of wars, pestilence and famines, gathering intensity as the years grow. * * * The lurid rays of the three stars impinge on the center area of this continent (Europe), circling westward and passing over the sea to the western continent at the close of the decade." This prognostication, with its attendant chart, seems to refer to the Hungarian rebellion, the Crimean war, the Austro-Prussian struggle and the Italian war, after which series the pernicious stars pass to this continent, and the bellicose influence is marked by the breaking out of the war of secession. The curious prognostications of Herr Hansen then continue: "The greatest empire of the west shall writhe in crushing agony, yet it shall rise in power and majesty and cast off the black mantle of great wickedness in its deliverance." Passing over a mass of calculations chiefly devoted to the destinies of European nations, Herr Hansen's studies are again diverted to the western continent, with the following prognostications: "Near the close of the third decade the stars of evil portent again impinge in the east with dire wrath, emitting (or dispensing) great fatality with sword, pestilence and famine. The trail of flame again passes westward over the sea to the western continent, gathering intenser fury by the greater power (convergence) of angry influences in the second year of the fourth decade. Dire calamity clouds the great western empire, and stars of promise pale and expire. Great convulsions of nature are portended. Seas and rivers shall go dry and mountains sink, and new lands shall appear. Wars shall be extinguished by great terror, and armies shall meet with pestilence and famine, and the great empire shall not rise again, but shall be thenceforth as strange peoples, living with jealously and enmity." This is certainly a very dismal aspect of futurity from the outlook of old Danish astrology, and if not as entirely reliable as the alarming apprehensions excited by modern astronomers regarding the possible results of the approaching grand planetary conjunction, Herr Hansen's prognostications are more satisfactory, in a sense, from their direct and explicit character. It is also consoling to know that the United States is not designated as the exclusive theatre of this grand carnival of chaos, but all the nations of the earth are promised a free participation.

The Kingdom.

In answering the question concerning the coming of Christ again in order to establish his kingdom as to when this will be, we find, by consulting the prophet Daniel, that seventy prophetic weeks would be given "to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." We then learn of the abominations and desolations extending even to the consummation. Christ will remain at his Father's right hand until his foes be made his footstool. But Daniel further says, "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." And the prophet also says, "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

The word "dominions" implies rulers. Jesus himself also says, "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." And, "The Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels." "The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity." "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory."

Paul charged Timothy, "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ who shall judge the living and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." Query—When? "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." It is then that all nations shall be gathered, and he shall separate them one from another, and shall say unto those on his right hand, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." These shall then go into life eternal.

The Apostle Paul says, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Christ plainly stated that he would come again. He says, "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." When he had led his disciples out as far as Bethany he was separated from them. "And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

When he comes it will be for the purpose of making an end of sin and bringing in everlasting righteousness, and of filling all the earth with his glory as the waters cover the sea. It will be, too, to re-establish the kingdom of Israel over which he himself will reign as a king. "He hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written King of kings, and Lord of lords."

"And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and heaven fled away." After this there will be the establishment of a new order of things, which is called "a new heaven and a new earth." "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." These are the faithful and true that have "come out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." "And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will be their God, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all things new."

I wish to call attention to these words: he does not say "Behold I make all new things," but "all things new." Therefore Jerusalem, which is a ruin, and a heap, will be rebuilt by the Messiah, and this is the making all things new. John also said, "And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it."

"And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."

I will give some more encouraging words from the prophet Isaiah: God says, "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create; for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Therefore "Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her all that love her; rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her; for thus saith the Lord, Behold I will extend peace to her like a river. As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem." "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." Thus hath the Lord spoken and nothing shall prevail against it. David tells us when Zion will be rebuilt when he says "Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion; for the the time to favor her, yea, the set time, is come."

But when? is the question.

"When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." "To declare the name of the Lord in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem." Psa. cii. 13, 18, 21. Also read the second chapter of Zechariah. But enough has been said, and Bible proof enough given to convince any one that to uphold any other gospel is vain and false. And now may the love of our Lord and Savior be with you all.

Amen; even so come Lord Jesus.

MELVIN CALL.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

While serving laboriously, suffer patiently.

We waste our time in moments, our money in dimes, and our happiness in trifles.

How sweet to work all day for God, and then lie down at night beneath his smile.

Dare to do right! dare to be true!
Keep the great judgment seat always in view;
Look at your work as you'll look at it then,
Scanned by Jehovah, and angels, and men.

Dare to do right! Dare to be true!
Cannot Omnipotence carry you through?
City, and mansion, and throne all in sight,
Can you not dare to be true, and be right.

Advice, like the snow, the softer it falls the long-r it dwells upon and the deeper it sinks into the mind.

See that each hour's feelings, thoughts, and actions are pure and true; then will your life be such.

D'Aubigne: God who prepares his work through ages, accomplishes it, when the hour is come, with the feeblest instruments.

Luther: O how sweet are God's precepts, when we read them not alone in books, but also in the precious wounds of the Savior.

Leighton: The dews and rich showers of God's grace slide on the mountains of pride, and fall on the low valleys of humble hearts, and make them pleasant and fertile.

Gov. Woodford: Men will not forever fight about mere memories. He is wisest who leaves the dead to bury their dead, and who follows the Master into the new fields of present duty.

Never be cast down by trifles. If a spider breaks his web twenty times, twenty times will he mend it again. Make up your mind to do a thing, and you will do it. Fear not, if trouble comes upon you; keep up your spirits, though the day be a dark one.

The moment a man parts with moral independence, the moment he judges of a duty, not from the inward voice, but from the interest and will of a party, the moment he commits himself to a leader or a party, and winks at evil because divisions would hurt the cause, the moment he shakes off his particular responsibility, because he is but one of the thousand or million by whom the evil is done: that moment he parts with his moral power. He is shorn of a single-hearted faith in the right and true.

If our religion does not prove a stay and support in times of trial and affliction; if it affords no consolation when "storms of sorrow lower;" if it brings no comfort to our hearts, so often made to ache, then, indeed, is our religion vain. The religion of Jesus was designed to do all this and much more. It "has the promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come." It is useful to us only as we enjoy an assurance of its reality. When we believe God, as the little child said, "take him at his word," then, come what may, we shall find peace in believing and joy in the Holy Spirit. But when once we begin to doubt the full and personal application of God's precious promises in our own individual case, from that moment our comfort flies, and religion ceases to be a comforting power. Away, then, with doubts. Knowing in whom we have believed, let us trust him fully.

"When gladness wings the favored hour,
Thy love my thoughts shall fill—
Resigned when storms of sorrow lower,
My soul shall meet thy will.
My lifted eye, without a tear,
The gathering storm shall see,
My steadfast heart shall know no fear,
That heart shall trust in thee."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the consummation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and heartymbow, prerequisite to the baptism of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Is Christianity a Failure?

Editor Restitution: — Herewith I send you the enclosed manuscript. This is its history. There has been waging in this and neighboring city of New York, in the secular papers a controversy on the question, "Is Christianity a Failure?" There have been many able pens employed on both sides and the question is not yet decided—principally, I think, in consequence of the vague and erroneous notions of what really constitutes Christianity. In this as in many other controversies, there has been a needless waste of words from not having the question stated in plain, terse language. There have appeared articles from skeptics of numerous shades and grades; and religionists of various sects, however honest and conscientious they may be, seem ignorant of the Christianity of the Bible, and as their vain and foolish mind is darkened, they come to the conclusion that Christianity has been a failure because it does not realize what they think it should effect.

Our Brother Magruder sent the manuscript to me to offer it to the Sunday Herald, with the request that should that paper not use it, to send it to you for publication. I need not say more on this subject, as your space is limited and valuable.

Our meeting in Brooklyn still drags the even tenor of its way. In the morning Brother J. B. Cook preaches, inviting and urging all to be reconciled to God. Yet strange, with such glorious and fascinating promises and hopes, men hesitate and keep back; why, it is a difficult matter to find an excuse. It was the same in the experience of the Master, who said, "Ye will not come unto me." Nevertheless, let those who have come hold fast their confidence unto the end, knowing that he who endureth to the end shall be saved.

Affectionately yours, waiting for the Lord from heaven.

JAMES FORMAN.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

The true answer to this question depends on the object and end of the Christian system as proposed and understood by the propounder of it. If judged by its present fruits as its perfected design and results, we must respond in the affirmative; for so far we behold only incompleteness, disappointment and failure. Falsehood and vice are still triumphant and defiant among men, while truth and virtue are prostrate. The first is, in the present world, the rule; the last, the exception. Evil abounds. Good is scarce. But if it be the mission of Christianity to eradicate sin and evil, and ultimately to plant truth and righteousness in the earth, then we respond, "No, a thousand times, no!"

It is not a failure, for the all-sufficient reason that the end is not yet. Do we say that the man, as yet a half-grown boy, or the woman as yet only a child, is a failure? Is an unfinished house or a half-written book a failure? As well may we argue and conclude that the religion of the Bible is such. Nothing is a failure that is unfinished. As yet it is only on trial—an experiment. Its success is in abeyance, and depends on achieving the end and result proposed.

Such is Christianity. What is its end and mission? Its own oracles proclaim it: "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good will toward men." It is "Glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." It is that "all the nations—all the families of the earth—shall be blessed in Abraham's Seed, who is the Christ." It is that "the meek—the righteous—shall inherit the earth—shall dwell therein forever and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." It is "that death and hell shall be destroyed and be no more," and finally, that "every curse shall be removed" from this mundane sphere, and that its immortalized tenant, man, shall be restored to Paradise—be thus "partaker of the divine nature, and dwell with God and Christ, the angels and the heavenly hosts forever." These we know are yet in the future. The end is yet in advance of us.

All other religions are obvious failures, either because they do not propose the attainment of such objects, or with very favorable opportunities for success—having the public ear always open to them—they have fallen short of achieving their end.

Paganism in all its myriad forms, is an admitted failure; and the more modern systems of Catholicism and Protestantism, with some admitted ameliorations, have so far failed, for although they have had the freest scope for the development of all that is possible of success from their creeds, they seem no nearer their summum bonum than when they began; and there is nothing to encourage hope that their future will be nearer the consummation. The Catholic church is confessedly greatly weakened—materially shorn of its once great power by the progress of light and knowledge, and we know that some of the sects of Protestantism have wholly disappeared, while others are no longer potential for success, and all exhibit symptoms of decline and fall, while none have yet succeeded, even by approximation, in their proposed mission of converting the world to Christ.

"Protestantism a Failure," is the title of a work lately issued from the New York press, which maintains the bold statement that "Looking to the final fruits the whole system of Protestantism is a stupendous blunder."

These constitute, in the aggregate, the means and the only means devised by human wisdom, to work out for our race the promised era of universal blessedness.

Having thus failed in this great work we have a right to conclude that their ambitious mission will never be accomplished, and that other means and instrumentalities must be employed to attain the desired result. The Christian religion, in the object it proposes, and the means devised by its Author for its accomplishment, is far different from both Catholicism and Protestantism. That object is the conversion of all mankind to truth and righteousness at a period yet future. Not all mankind who have ever lived, but all the dwellers upon earth at the period of its successful consummation. Meanwhile God is now and has been from the beginning choosing out from among those to whom the gospel is preached "a people for his name," (Acts xv.,) being those who believe and obey that gospel, who by a resurrection of the dead and transformation of the living when the crisis arrives, will be under Christ their head and leader, co-workers in the achievement of the redemption of our race and world. When this result is attained there will be henceforth "Peace on earth and good will towards men," and not till then.

Christianity, meantime, is a standing protest against all other schemes to accomplish this divine result. It is distinguished above all other religions in this one essential feature. It promises future life, while all other creeds assume it. It promises life and immortality to the righteous, and denounces death and destruction to the wicked. Both results are to be achieved by means of the resurrection from the dead, and not by the heathen theory of the inherent immortality of the soul. No greater delusion and imposture have ever been fastened upon the credulity of mankind than this Pagan dogma of the inherent immortality of the soul and its cognate doctrine of the eternal torment of the wicked. The Bible doctrine is plainly against both theories, which are the inventions of men.

Man, therefore, and the earth, his dwelling place, await the development of the divine plan for recovery from the fall—a destiny of which God and not man will be the author.

It is a very old question among men, traces of which are everywhere found in the human history, whether the world possesses in itself the means of rectifying its disorders, or whether the remedy must come from without. The experience of mankind embodied in history proves our incapacity to attain these great ends by any wisdom or power that we possess. Though long tried it is a task hopeless of success by mere human means. The wisdom of the world has thus been proven inadequate for the government of the world. Hence it is written, "No man can by any means redeem his brother or give to God a ransom for him that he should still live forever and not see corruption. Psalm xlix. And hence that other divine oracle: "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps."

This wise and righteous rule over mankind is reserved for a higher style of man than merely human means, however potent, can produce. Such a ruler will be the future monarch of the world in the person of the coming Messiah. He alone of our race is wise enough to know, good enough to will, and strong enough to accomplish the promised rescue and redemption of man from the ills which afflict him. It is such a ruler that God announced to the men of Athens at Mars Hill through the message delivered to them by St. Paul in the memorable words recorded in Acts xvii. 30-32: "Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold or silver or stone, graven by art and man's device. And the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth he all men everywhere to repent, because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge (rule) the world in righteousness by that Man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead."

"And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead some mocked, and others said, We will hear thee again of this matter."

So then we conclude as we commenced, that Christianity is not a failure. Its triumph is certain but yet future. The earth will be the scene, and man the subject of that triumph.

Extracts from Commentaries.

G. M. MYERS.

A few volumes of the new Commentary now being issued by the leading and distinguished men of the Christian or Disciple church have recently come into my possession. And as many of our brethren almost daily are, upon the topics of diferences, brought into conversation with the members of the Disciple church, I propose giving a few extracts, which will be worth storing away.

And first, I will quote from J. W. McGarvey, who has held a prominent place in the Lexington, Ky., University for the last fifteen years, and has written a commentary on Matthew and Mark. On Matt. viii. 12:

"The Children of the Kingdom."—"The Jews were 'children of the kingdom' in the sense that they were children and heirs of those to whom the kingdom was originally promised. To them it was first offered, and it was because they rejected it that they were to be 'cast out into outer darkness.' No doubt this prediction of Jesus was quite unwelcome to his hearers."

"Outer Darkness."—"The kingdom of heaven in which many Gentiles were to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob (verse 11), must be the kingdom in its final state of glory; for these patriarchs lived too soon to sit down in the earthly kingdom. The outer darkness, then, which is contrasted with it, and into which those are to be cast out who are not admitted into the kingdom, must represent the final punishment of the wicked. Weeping and gnashing are expressive of sorrow and of anguish."

SHALL COME DOWN TO HELL. xi. 23.

"Not hell (gehenna) but hades. Not the final abode of the wicked, but the disembodied state. On account of the suffering which wicked spirits endure there (see Luke xvi. 25); when hades is mentioned in connection with the wicked, the idea of punishment is conveyed. The expressions, 'exalted to heaven,' and 'brought down to hades,' are both used to denote the high privileges which Capernaum had enjoyed, and the latter, the ruin which awaited her. The prediction has long since been fulfilled, and the traveler now searches among the rank weeds on the lake shore to find, in the fragments of stone which lie there, uncertain vestiges of the once populous and well built city."

We have not quoted this paragraph that we endorse all it says, but to show that whatever the Elder might think and write of hades, that he does not understand that this text finds its fulfillment in a disembodied state, but in the destruction brought upon the literal city by its enemies. Adam Clark and many other commentators set forth the same view. But we think that instead of the figurative, it has the literal application of hades—the unseen; that the city by its enemies was simply demolished—destroyed—annihilated as a city and has become one of the unseen objects of the past.

IN THE REGENERATION. xix. 28.

"Regeneration means, either the process of regenerating, or the result attained by that process, according to the context in which it is found. Here it evidently means the former, for it designates a period during which the apostles would sit on thrones. We cannot connect the words 'in the regeneration' with the preceding clause, 'ye who have followed me,' for the obvious reason that Jesus had gone through no regeneration, and they could have followed him through none. The words, 'ye who have followed me,' simply describe the parties addressed as having done what the rich man (previously mentioned) refused to do. The period designated by the term regeneration is further limited by the words, 'when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory.' He sat down on that throne when he ascended up to heaven, and he will still be seated on it in the day of judgment. Acts ii. 33-35; Heb. i. 13; Matt. xxv. 31; 1 Cor. xv. 24-28. 'The regeneration,' then is cotemporaneous with this period, and therefore, it must be that process of regenerating men which commenced on Pentecost after the ascension, and will continue until the saints are raised with regenerated bodies, and the heaven and earth shall themselves be regenerated as the home of the redeemed."

This comment in the main, is good, containing in it, as we conceive, but one serious objection, that of including the present—the Gentile—age in the period of regeneration. In adopting this view and disposition of the Gentile age the Elder has not profited by his brother's—James Challen—discourse, entitled the "Kingdom of the Heavens."

On the word palingenesia, rendered regeneration, of the renderings at hand, Wakefield, Sawyer, Rheims (Catholic), Darby and Improved Version render it regeneration; Macknight, A. Campbell, Wesley, and the Diaglott render it renovation; H. T. Anderson renders it restoration. Beza, Mill, J. Mede, Bengelius and Wetstein say: "Ye that had followed me, shall in the regeneration, when the Son of Man cometh, sit." A. Barnes, in his comment, after giving other definitions of the word, says: "The word also means any great changes, or restoration of things to a former state, or to a better state. In this sense it is probably used here. It refers to that great revolution; that restoration of order in the universe; that universal new birth when the dead shall rise, and all human things shall be changed, and a new order of things shall start up out of the ruins of the old, when the Son of Man shall come to judgment. The passage, then, should be read: 'Ye which have followed me, shall, as a reward in the great day of the resurrection of the dead, and of forming the new and eternal order of things—the day of judgment, the regeneration—be signally honored and blessed.'"

With this, as we have digressed and quoted from the many instead of the one, as we started to do for the present, we will close.

Belle Plain, Iowa.

The Ages.

Editor Restitution:—Allow me to suggest that the parable of the sower, Matt. xiii., may represent two distinct ages which are passing before us like a panorma, and will culminate in a third and more glorious age, represented by the righteous shining as the sun in kingdom of their Father. The scope of the first is from the sowing of "the word of the kingdom" at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47, to the time of the ingathering, when the Lord will give to every man according as his works shall be; "to some an hundred-fold, some sixty, some thirty." The scope of the second is from the coming of the Son of Man to the harvest in the end (age), when he shall send forth the reapers to gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity. They are related to each other in like manner as the "head of gold" is to the kingdom of silver, or that of silver to the "kingdom of brass"—death to one is life to the other.

The field is the same in both ages, but the elements are not the same in the first: men are the sowers. The apostles were the first to scatter the seed; others took up the theme and "went everywhere preaching the word," and the good work is still going on. In the second, the Son of Man is the sower. "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man. The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom." Matt. xiii. 37, 38. In the previous sowing the seed was the word of the kingdom, and the children of the kingdom are the product thereof. "For to as many as received him, to them gave he power to become sons of God; even to them that believe on his name." John i. 12. "They are born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Pet. i. 23. The sower now takes the precious seed and sows it among the nations, saying, "Well, thou good servant, because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities." "I appoint unto you a kingdom as my Father hath appointed unto me." He thus gives them "power over the nations." When the Son of Man comes the wicked are not all destroyed, but their dominion is taken away; yet their lives are prolonged for a season and a time. Dan. vii. 12. And Satan is bound a thousand years that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled. Rev. xx. 2, 3. Thus, the wheat and the tares are both to grow together until the harvest. It is a perversion to apply this passage to the present age. We seldom hear it quoted as an excuse for retaining reprobates in the church. In the harvest in the end of the age the Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend and them that do iniquity.

What a striking contrast there is between this and the preceding harvest! The reapers are the same, but their work is not the same. In the first harvest "they shall gather together his elect from the four winds from one end of heaven to the other." Matt. xxiv. 31. In the second, "they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity." If there be any force in words, there is not a distinction without a difference. Mark again, the wicked are to be gathered out of his kingdom, not the church, the terms are not synonymous. Moreover, his kingdom does not now exist, nor will it till the end of the present age. "Then the Lord will return and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down. Then shall the Lord of hosts reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously; and in the harvest at the end of the age the kingdom will be purified by taking out all things that offend and them that do iniquity; then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. This agrees with the teaching of the apostle. 1 Cor. xv. 24-28. "Then cometh the end when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. . . . And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son himself be subject unto him that put all things under him that God may be all in all."

THINK.—Thought engenders thought. Place one idea upon paper—another will follow it, and still another, until you have written a page. You cannot fathom your mind. There is a well of thought there which has no bottom. The more you draw from it, the more clear and fruitful it will be. If you neglect to think yourself, and use other people's thoughts, giving them utterance only, you will never know what you are capable of. At first your ideas come in lumps, homely and shapeless; but no matter—time and perseverance will arrange and refine them. Learn to think, and you will learn to write; the more you think, the better you express your idea.

While light and shade both here together blend,
The light how grateful!—but we will not bend
Or shrink from trial, if perchance it come;
For 'tis among the "all things" on our journey home.
Through tribulation we the kingdom gain,
This legacy from Jesus we obtain;
Then let us welcome it as from His hand,
His grace, and that alone, will make us stand.

The Academy states that the Japanese government has authorized the issue by a Japanese publisher of an edition of the Book of Genesis in Chinese, prepared by the American Bible Society. This is the first portion of the Scriptures the publication of which in Japan has been authorized by means of the government stamp; and, having in view the great distaste which the authorities have so long entertained to the introduction of foreign religions, the fact is significant and worthy of record.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 2, 1870.

THANKS to friends for financial help for our paper; also to others for pamphlets and papers sent.

WE have many long communications on hand. We can not work them all in for weeks to come if ever. Will those who are not regular contributors please make their communications shorter till we can dispose of some on hand?

WE have from time to time received questions to which a response by way of explanation has been solicited. Many of these have remained unanswered for want of time on our part. If we can find leisure we will try to consider some of them.

CORRESPONDENTS and contributors are individually responsible for the sentiments contained in their several articles. While there may be many things concerning which brethren may be in perfect accord of sentiment, there are others upon which we essentially differ. We now see in part, but when the perfect day comes we shall have more perfect discernment.

ARTICLES are not always passed by for want of merit, though some are disposed to complain because articles fail to appear. Some articles that do not appear are as meritorious as some that are published—possibly more so in some instances. If we could only work a fair-sized basketful of manuscript into a small paper like THE RESTITUTION, we should be glad, but we can not work miracles. If our friends will be patient, we will try to do the best we can. We have written labored articles for periodicals, that were never published, but we took it good-naturedly, and never petulantly ordered the paper discontinued on that account.

Habakkuk ii. 3.

Brother Chaplin:—Will you please to inform us, through THE RESTITUTION, which of the following renderings is likely most correct? "For yet the vision is for off, and it shall appear at the end, and shall not lie; if it make any delay, wait for it; for it shall surely come, and it shall not be slack." Douay Version.

"For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." Authorized Version.

"For this is yet a vision for an appointed time, and it will speak of the end, and it will not deceive; though it tarry wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not be delayed." Jewish Translation.

One says that the vision is "far off," and that "it shall appear at the end;" the second says that "it is for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie;" the third says, "there is yet a vision for the appointed time, and that it speaks of the end," etc.

Thus we poor unlearned mortals have to read all translations, and then do the best we can. My convictions are, that the vision, to which reference is made, includes the sum total of the book of prophetic similitudes, in which beasts, horns, waters, women, lamps, seals, trumpets, cities, vials, etc., appear, and, if the Jewish translation be correct, that this is yet a vision that speaks of the end itself, instead of the time of the end, as in Daniel. Then, in this, we can get a definite clue to Revelation from chapter x., and onward. But I will forbear, and await your reply.

Yours in hope,
J. C. KIDSEY.

Fremont, Ind.

The authorized English Version gives the sense of the Hebrew in a very close and exact manner. We give William Lowth's commentary on two or three connected verses.

"Verse 2: Write the vision and make it plain upon tables, etc.—When the prophets are commanded to write anything, it denotes the great importance of it that the notice of it may be transmitted to posterity. (See Isa. viii. 1 and xxx. 8). So God here commands the prophet, to write the contents of this vision in such legible characters as were used in public tables that were hung up in temples and market-places, that every one might have cognizance of them.

"Verse 3: For the vision is for an appointed time.—God has determined a set time when it shall be fulfilled, and not before. (Compare Dan. viii. 19; xi. 27, 35, 36). According to the common translation of the following words, by this vision we are to understand the destruction of the Babylonian monarchy, which is plainly foretold from the fifth verse to the end of the chapter, and is a proper answer to the complaint or argument the prophet had made in the foregoing chapter. But the learned Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, in his Defense of Christianity from the ancient Prophecies, p. 160, observes, that the prophet, by way of preface to that prediction, confirms the Jews in the general expectation of their deliverer, Messias, whose coming had been so often promised, and which profane persons began to question, when they saw God gave up his people into the hands of a cruel and idolatrous nation.

"But at the end it shall speak, and not lie. The same learned prelate, observes, that the verb puah properly signifies to break forth, as the morning light does; (see Cant. ii. 17; iv. 6,) to which sense the LXX., and the Vulgar Latin translate it here; so he renders the sentence, at the end, it shall break forth and not deceive.

"Though it tarry wait for it, because it will surely come, it will not tarry.—There are two different words in the Hebrew, which our English expresses by that one word tarry; so the same learned person translates the sentence thus, Though he tarry, expect him; because he that cometh will come, he will not go beyond the appointed time, but will make good the promises of deliverance given to your fathers. To this sense the LXX. render the words, very agreeable to the original; and the apostle follows their interpretation, (Heb. x. 37,) and understands them of the Messias. The verb stands impersonally in the Hebrew text; but in such a syntax the person is commonly understood." Commentary on Larger and Lesser Prophets.

The Hebrew word מוֹעֵד—mocked—rendered appointed time, occurs in the original about 229 times, and is rendered appointed time, set time, and the time appointed in several places. It is a word that applies to both set times, and set places. As in English we say to appoint a time for transacting any business; or to appoint a place for doing the same. Gesenius defines it to mean a set time, appointed season, and says of Hab. ii. 3, the vision, has respect to a set time. It means festival day and festivals. It also relates to a place of assembly, as the tabernacle of the congregation, and, hence is often applied to the congregation that assembles. The word פּוּחַ—puah—literally means to blow or breathe, and hence, in a derived congregation, to breathe out words, to speak.

The sense given in the Septuagint, that the vision "shall break forth like the morning light of the east," is beautiful when contrasted with the long night of darkness which precedes. And the reading of this same version "for the coming one will come, and not delay" ὅτι ἐρχόμενος ἥξει, καὶ οὐ μὴ χρονίσῃ, which Paul explains of the future coming of Christ (Heb. x. 37,) will lead us to the conclusion as to what event is connected with the ending of the vision. The vision ends, and the day breaks upon a dark world, when our Lord returns from heaven in power and great glory. See chapter iii. throughout. An apology is due Brother Kidsey for our delay as our time is very much occupied.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Apostolic Age and Apostolic Authority Inseparable.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Age and ages have no definite etymology. Ages past and to come are Bible phrases. It is the work of able expositors to rightly divide these ages, and not to mix or jumble them together. The texts I adduced showing that Christ appeared in the end of one age; and that he will appear a second time in the end of another age, have not been noticed. To have appeared in the end of the age, is evidently to appear before the conclusion of that age. To "put away sin by the sacrifice of himself in the end of the age" is to extend the age in which Christ died beyond his death and resurrection. The pouring out the spirit, or the investment of the apostles with spirit power in the last days, is to extend the last days beyond the day of Pentecost.

All could understand our editor when he represented the apostolic age as terminating with the era during which they exercised the functions of apostles, or as I would say in which they fulfilled their mission. There can be no doubt but what the learned and candid translator, George Campbell, understood the language of Christ in Matt. xxviii. 20, to refer to the conclusion of the Jewish commonwealth. What else could he mean by the language, "Even to the consummation of the state?" Webster defines the word state to be "civil power, not ecclesiastical; a body politic; a commonwealth; a kingdom," etc. Some able expositors take the same position. Different views on this point should be tolerated with. Let patience have her perfect work. It must certainly be conceded by able critics that the argument is not all on one side.

Paul writing to the Hebrews, A. D. 64,—the same year Vespasian invaded Judea, and six years before the conclusion of the Jewish state,—represented their nations' constitution as being old, decayed and "ready to vanish away." Heb. viii. 13. This agrees perfectly with Campbell's translation; and also with the history of the fulfillment of our Savior's predicted fulfillment of the apostolic commission, as recorded by Matthew and Mark. Speaking of the tribulations coming upon his apostles Christ said, "For they will deliver you to tormenters and to death, and you shall be hated by all nations on my account. And this Gospel of the reign shall be published through all the world, for the information of all nations. And then shall come the end." Matt. xxiv. 14.—Campbell.

Mark represents this work as having been accomplished previously to the end spoken of by Matthew as having been accomplished before the trial and execution of the apostles. Christ, addressing his apostles, said, "But take heed to yourselves; for they will deliver you up to councils, and you will be beaten in the synagogues, and brought before governors and kings for my sake to bear testimony to them. The good tidings, however, must first be published among all nations." Mark xiii. 9, 11.—Campbell.

First, however, before what?

Answer, according to the positive language of Christ in the previous verse,—before the apostles should be brought before governors and kings for Christ's sake. Thus, teaching beyond the possibility of doubt that the Gospel should be published among all nations by the apostles, when, according to the unequivocal language of Christ as recorded by Matthew, the end should come.

It is strange that our opposers have none deigned to notice the foregoing language of Christ upon which we so confidently rely as proving beyond doubt that the end predicted by Christ in Matt. xxviii. 20, and xxiv. 14, came when the apostles had preached the Gospel among all nations. Brethren should beware how they denounce as speculation the positive language of Christ attested by two infallible witnesses. Much as I would like to agree with two or three venerated brethren from whom I must differ, or offend my Divine Master by rejecting as plain and positive language as he ever uttered, or impeaching the testimony of his chosen and faithful witnesses. Not only Christ predicted that the end should come. Thus when the Gospel should be preached among all nations that then the end should come; and that it should be published among all nations, by the apostles before their trial and execution. Mark recorded as historic the immutable fact that the Gospel had been preached "everywhere," which is just as comprehensive as the phrase "all the world," or among all nations. Mark xvi. 20.

Paul confirms the testimony of Matt. and declares that the Gospel had been sounded "out into all the world, unto the ends of the earth." The Gospel had been preached, according to Paul (he wrote his epistle to Colosse, to every creature; in his letters to the Romans and Galatians in all the world, and to every creature under heaven;) during the lives of the apostles; leaving no part of the apostolic mission to be fulfilled by apostolic successors.

No plainer and stronger evidence can be adduced to sustain any doctrine of the Bible, the mortality of man not excepted. How futile all efforts must be to remove land-marks so clearly defined, so definitely fixed. None but the apostles were ever commanded to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. There is no record in the Word of God or the world's history, that any others did go into all the world. Let our opponents show precept or example or remain silent where the living oracles are silent. None but the apostles were clothed with the authority of the Highest as the legates, or embassadors of Christ. Apostolic authority and apostolic succession go hand in hand—they stand or fall together. To be consistent those who advocate the one should advocate the other also. It is inconsistent and illogical to claim apostolic authority and yet ignore apostolic succession. Equally inconsistent is it to claim apostolic authority and yet ignore apostolic evidence. There is no half-way ground in this controversy; either Christ has had no church and there have been no Gospel preachers, valid baptism or Christians since the days of the apostles, or apostolic authority ceased with the twelve apostles.

The Mormons and Catholics are more consistent than those who claim apostolic authority, and yet deny apostolic succession or apostolic evidence. None but apostles could say without blasphemy "we are embassadors in Christ's stead"—therefore none but the apostles were legates of Christ; and if none but apostles have been the legates of Christ, then the claims of all others to the authority with which the apostles were invested are spurious. It is nowhere in the Word affirmed of any but the apostles that "these signs shall follow them that believe their preaching; or that they should go or have gone forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirming the word with the signs following." Mark xvi. 17-20. The only workers of miracles in the last days are satan and devils. 2 Thess. ii. 9; Rev. xvi. 14. The Paracletos or Advocate, was not promised to any body except the apostles. Surely the following language cannot be applied to any except the apostles who were with Christ from the beginning. "But the Comforter the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." John xiv. 26. Christ cannot bring to the remembrance of any man any thing which he did not hear with his own ears. None since the days of the apostles have heard Christ say anything; therefore nothing has or can be brought to the remembrance of any man since the days of the apostles. Can the following language be applied to any except the apostles, or at least since their day? "But when the Comforter is come whom I will send unto you from the Father, the Spirit of truth....he shall testify of me; And ye shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning. John xv. 26, 27.

Who, since the days of the apostles, has been able to give as a qualification that they are qualified to testify of Christ from the fact that they had been with him from the beginning?

By what evidence will those who claim divine authority to preach or baptize convince themselves, or others, that they have any more or other authority than any other Christians of equally good character and equally "apt to teach?"

What other tribunal did the apostles leave except the church, the "ground pillar of the truth," to prove a brother whether he is able with "sound doctrine" to stop the mouths of gain-sayers? to watch the deportment of one who desires to teach, whether he is a lover of strong drink, or covetous,—to watch his conduct in his family—to learn his reputation outside of the church—to prove such an one a long time so that he shall be no novice?

Surely inspired men could discern the spirit of such an one without all these external evidences and rigid tests. To say the least of it there is no demonstrations of divine power. If the church is to decide upon the qualifications to preach, then they are authorized to appoint elders and deacons. Sinners may understand such evidences better than some Christians; and shall we ascribe such sagacity to divine power?

Some sinners are more apt to teach than Christians. There can be no reasonable doubt but what the apostles understood Christ, in his discourse on the Mount, to refer to the conclusion of their state or commonwealth in Matt. xxiv. 3. Mark xiii. 4; Luke xxi. 6. We read, "As Jesus walked out of the temple his disciples came and caused him to observe the building of it. Jesus said to them all this you see; indeed I say to you one stone shall not be left here upon another. All shall be razed." As he sat upon the Mount of Olives, his disciples addressed him privately saying, "Tell us when this happens, and what will be the sign of your coming, and the conclusion of this state." Jesus answered and said unto them, "Take heed that no man seduce you; for many will assume my character, saying, I am the Messiah and will seduce many. Nay, ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars; but take care that ye be not alarmed; for all these things must happen; but the end is not yet." Verses 1-6. Every one of these predictions were fulfilled immediately preceding and in the destruction of the Jerusalem and the Jewish state, except Christ's coming.

Mark says, "As he was going out of the temple one of his disciples said to him, Rabbi, look what prodigious stones and stately buildings are here. Jesus answering said unto him, you see these prodigious buildings. They shall be so razed that one stone shall not be left upon another. Afterwards as he was sitting on the Mount of Olives opposite the temple, Peter and James, and John and Andrew asked him privately, tell us when will this happen? and what will be the sign when all this is to be accomplished? Jesus answering them took occasion to say, take heed that no man seduce you; for many will assume my character, saying, I am the person, and will seduce many. But when ye hear of wars, and rumors of wars be not alarmed; for this must happen, but the end is not yet."

Luke says, "Some having remarked that the temple was adorned with beautiful stones and presents, he said, the time will come when these things which you behold shall be razed, that one stone will not be left upon another. Then they asked him saying, Rabbi, when will these things be? and what will be the sign, when they are about to be accomplished? He answered, take care that you be not seduced; for many will assume my character, saying, I am the person, and the time approaches; therefore, do not follow them. But when ye shall hear of wars and insurrections, be not terrified, for these things must first happen, but the end will not immediately follow."

Thus we see, according to the testimony of these three witnesses, that the end was at hand, when the persecutions should commence; and when they should hear of wars and rumors of wars. When these things should begin to come to pass, (according to Matthew and Mark,) the end was not yet, and according to Luke, who is more definite, the end was not to immediately follow.

Why was not the end to immediately follow the beginning of persecutions and seductions, when the apostles would be in great danger of falling, and when there should be rumors of war?

Matthew answers this question, and tells us in plain language what must be accomplished before the end should come. Thus he says: "And this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a testimony to all nations, and then shall the end come." Matt. xxiv. 14. And according to Mark's testimony all this was to be accomplished by the apostles before their final trial and execution; and also according to Mark xvi. 20; and Paul's letters to Rome and Colosse, the apostles did fulfill their mission in preaching the Gospel "in all the world," "among all nations" and "to every creature." Thus the predicted end came, or Christ's prediction failed. It can never have a more perfect fulfillment. This surely is a land-mark which is fixed.

Brethren may file in as many objections as they may choose, but this will not dispose of these plain texts to the satisfaction of candid inquirers for truth. Objections may be, and indeed are urged against every doctrine of our faith. The above land-marks must be removed by cogent arguments, or they will stand amid a host of objections, questions and criticisms. Brethren seem to attach a definite signification to the objective "this," qualifying the noun "age." They must know that many of our best translations render the Greek word ton—the—in Matt. xiii. 40, the same as it is rendered in the previous verse. The Diaglott thus renders it. But I can harmonize Campbell's translation with the doctrinal import of the text better than that of the common version. Thus Jesus said, "The harvest is the conclusion of this state." Matt. xiii. 39. Again he says, "So shall it be in the conclusion of this state." Verse 40.—Campbell.

One thing is certain, the end, or conclusion referred to in Matt. xiii. 39, 40, refers either to the conclusion of the Jewish or future age. The work to be accomplished is just the opposite of that to be performed at the end of the "times of the Gentiles, or the present dispensation." Instead of "the Son of Man sending forth his angels and gathering out of his kingdom—the field—the kosmos—the world—all things that offend, and them which do iniquity—he will send his angels and gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. Matt. xiii. 41; xxiv. 31.

Translate the Greek words "tou aionos," of the age, as it is in the Vatican, and understood by the author of the Diaglott, and by many of the most approved translations, and all is plain and harmonious. Thus, the harvest is the end of the—future—age. And thus shall it be in the end of the age. How literally this prediction will be fulfilled at the end of the future age, when the following predictions of Christ through the Seer of Patmos shall be fulfilled: "And when the thousand years—emphatically—'the age'—are expired Satan shall be loosed out of his prison; and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth—the field is the world—Gog and Magog to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth and compassed the camp of the saints, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them." Rev. xx. 8, 9. Thus Christ inspired John to foretell the fulfillment of his prediction recorded by Matthew, which is his own interpretation of the parable of wheat and tares. Most of this long list of parables relate to the kingdom age.

So many irrelevant questions and adverse criticisms have been urged against my position, during the series of articles, and since their close, that it has been necessary, in order to a correct understanding of my real positions, to reproduce them in part. If our beloved editor can have patience with one more long article, I will not soon trouble him or the readers of our excellent paper with lengthy articles. Had I time, nothing would be more gratifying to me than to write a few short articles on practical subjects.

[Prophetic Times.]

The Second Coming of Christ: Its First Stage.

The second advent of Christ will be characterized by two stages: First, his coming in the air, where his saints are to meet him; and second, his coming to the earth, when his saints shall come with him. The first is called his parousia coming; and the second is called his epiphaneia appearing. The first will be unseen by the world, but manifested to the saints, and signified to the world by the evanishment of the saints. The first stage will be at the end of the Christian dispensation, when the dead saints shall be raised and the living saints shall be changed and caught up to meet him in the air. 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. Then two shall be in the field, the one shall be taken and the other left; two women shall be grinding at the mill, the one shall be taken, and the other left. Matt. xxiv. 40.

To them that shall be taken the rapture shall be an expected event. They shall not be in darkness that that day should overtake them as a thief. "Waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" is a characteristic of Christian faith, and, whether they live or die, they wait till their change comes. When caught up together to meet the Lord in the air they shall be ever with the Lord. They shall be with him while he tarries in the air, a period which will probably be forty years, as typified by the forty days that Moses was with the Lord on the top of Sinai, completely hidden from the view of the people by the cloud which covered the mount, and during which period he received of the Lord the code by which Israel was to be governed when brought into the promised land. And prefigured also by the forty days that Jesus was with his disciples after his resurrection, "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." During that forty years the saints of God will be marshaled in the order symbolized by the New Jerusalem, and thus constitute a grand political hierarchy of king-priests, to be associated with Christ, as his bride, in the future government of the world, and shall receive from him the laws and institutions of the kingdom, which is to be subject to their administration. By this period of training or instruction they will be pre-eminently qualified for their glorious and exalted station. They will be thoroughly versed in the heavenly science of divine government. Being confirmed in holiness they will also be perfected in knowledge, and shall not be liable to make any mistake or be deceived in appearances; and, whether sitting on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel, or having authority over five cities or two, whatever may be the rule or dominion assigned to them, they will be fully prepared for the commitment, as they will answer to the character of rulers designated by the God and Rock of Israel. 2 Sam. xxiii. 3, 4: "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God; and he shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds, bright shining after rain, producing grass out of the earth." For, though this refers primarily to Christ himself, it includes the saints as being one with him and joint rulers of the earth. Forty years' intercourse with Jesus and of instruction pertaining to the kingdom will not be too much to become qualified for its administration.

The object of the discipline and trial of this life in the church is to make the believers to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men—to the end that their hearts may be established unblamable in holiness before God, even our father, at the coming of Christ. And some advancement may also be made in knowledge, so as to administer "judgments of things pertaining to this life;" but even in this most are lamentably deficient, and brother goeth to law with brother, and that before unbelievers. Even the most advanced know only in part, and with the attainments here acquired would be altogether incompetent to judge the world.

The sojourn of the saints with Christ in the air will be a season of the most intense delight and enjoyment in communion with him and with one another and with the holy angels in the realization of their condition as glorified immortals, having incorruptible bodies, whose sensations will yield exquisite pleasure, because spiritual and holy; in the perfect attainment of knowledge in all departments of science and art, the most exalted and profound, because most true, filling them with admiration and ministering ecstatic joy; and in the conscious beauty of a completely regenerated and sanctified nature, partaking of the divine, giving unalloyed satisfaction to the soul in perpetual rest in God, in Christ, the all in all. It will be also a season of blissful anticipation of their future administration of the kingdom in which they shall reign as kings and priests unto God, and the glorious results of a world subdued and reconciled to God.

POETRY.

"For Ye Have Need of Patience."

MARIA BUNON.

The patient hand of God still weaves
Autumn wreaths beneath the snow;
And through the dark, unseenly leaves,
The bright mitchella berries grow.

The miracle at Cana wrought,
The purple vine anew display;
And thus, through all the year, is taught
The promise—"after many days."

Ye may not see the ripened fruit;
Another's hand may bind the grain;
Yet sow the seed—in faith be mute;
No work is done for God in vain.

To misty doubt the truth is dim:
Does only error, then prevail?
Because ye hear no earnest hymn,
Must, therefore, all the harvest fail?

Lift up your voice upon the height;
The plan shall yet send back reply;
It doth your God! He watcheth night
And night, that God, can never die."

Trellis with care some trailing vine;
Nourish with love some drooping heart,
Nor seek for miracle or sign
To spring from earnest toil, apart.

Ye may not pluck the ripened fruit,
Nor bind, with joy the golden grain;
But sow the seed—in faith be mute;
No work for God is done in vain.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I observe that my time has expired for which I paid for your valuable paper. I enclose one dollar for renewal. I take this opportunity to say a word for THE RESTITUTION. Being comparatively a new reader of the paper I can truly say I like the sentiment very well. I read a large number of religious papers, among which are the World's Crisis and Herald of the Morning—all advocates of the speedy coming of the Lord to establish his kingdom on the earth, which truth is very dear to me. I also rejoice that this truth is so rapidly advancing; that so many are accepting it, and that new light is being developed. I am afraid we do not rightly comprehend the nature and magnitude of Christ's work when he comes. The restitution, restoration, completion, and marriage of the Lamb and his Bride, etc., are glorious themes to study and contemplate. May the Lord direct us. Are there any direct or inferential texts of Scripture that will admit of the interchangeable use of the words covenants or dispensations? Do the two cherubim represent the two dispensations? Proof. If you or some brother will answer these questions it will be a favor.

Yours in the hope,
A. J. FLAHARTY.

Editor Restitution:—It may be of interest to the dear ones to hear of the success of the gospel. I made my visit to Illinois according to appointment; had a good meeting, although it was in time of the thaw. I had a crowded house all the time, and good attention all through the meeting. I find the people quite anxious to hear the Word. During my stay among them there were two immersed into the Christ. I met young Brother Sweet. He came to my meeting and stayed the most of the time during my meeting. He is a son of Benjamin Sweet. Brother Sweet died about two years ago. During my meeting Brother Sweet preached twice. I think, with practice, he will make quite a speaker. I encouraged him to go on. It was his father's request, before he died, for him to preach, and I think he intends to do so. Love to all the dear brethren in Christ. J. S. HATCH.

Crawfordsville, Ind.

Editor Restitution:—Find inclosed $1.00 in payment of my subscription for the year beginning April 1, 1870, and for one year from same date, for George Scott, of this place. We have had quite a pleasant and profitable visit from Elder Sweet, on his way home from the west. He stayed over a month with us, preaching every evening from the prophets. Shortly after his departure, seven were baptized into Christ for the remission of sins, and added to the church, and many are inquiring Zionwards who, formerly, were indifferent to the preaching of the glories of the kingdom and dominion. The church has been edified, and are continuing in the apostles' doctrines, the breaking of bread, in prayer, as far as in us lies, patiently waiting the return of our Master, realizing that the time is at hand. THE RESTITUTION is heartily welcomed amongst us; it has always words of counsel, wisdom and instruction; its letters and articles give us matter for pleasant controversy, and are edifying, and must have the tendency of bringing the brethren to a oneness in the faith. May it continue a witness to the truth until "the day dawns and the shadows flee away," and our hope be merged in full fruition.

With Christian love, your brother in Christ. WILLIAM RENNIE.

Port Washington, Ohio.

Editor Restitution:—A friend of mine has been reading my papers and he does like them so well. I would not do without THE RESTITUTION for any consideration; I like it; it is the best paper I ever read, from the fact that it turns the mind in the right direction. I cannot see why it is that there is not a universal interest in these things that we now both see and feel, and are becoming more plain every day? I have enjoyed the reading of THE RESTITUTION very much. I have great interest in our Lord's return. I am waiting and watching for yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come and will not tarry. May our heavenly Father bless and strengthen you in your great work.

Your brother in Christ,
BENJAMIN W. EISENHOUR.

Hartville, Mo.

Editor Restitution:—I have been a reader of THE RESTITUTION for a year and a half; I think it comes the nearest to harmonizing the Bible of any paper I can find. The spirit seems to be hardest to agree on. I sometimes hear it preached all straight, and then the same person will contradict the whole sermon in their prayer. Can't some of the able writers of THE RESTITUTION define the word so we can understand it? Does not the promise in Acts reach us all? "Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Is not this God's love to those who have passed from death unto life by yielding obedience to God's command? And if we have believed the gospel and obeyed, and are led by his spirit or follow his Word, and have the love of God in our hearts, is not this all we can have while in this mortal nature?

Your brother, in hope of the soon coming kingdom. H. F. B.

Editor Restitution:—I have just returned home from a visit to Adaline and Silver Creek, Ill. At Adaline I delivered eight discourses to good and attentive audiences, and the interest increased all the time. This little congregation shares in the labors of Brother August Smith, of Foreston, and of Dr. Jacobs, who is a veteran in the cause.

At Silver Creek I delivered three discourses to good audiences, considering the bad weather and bad roads. I find prejudice much broken down at both these places, and therefore the prospect for the future is promising.

On my return home I find my family afflicted with measles, which renders my trip to Missouri and Kansas, as published, impossible, hence you will please drop out the notice; and I will say to those brethren that I will visit them as soon as I can possibly make it practicable.

Yours truly, O. M. MYERS.

SELECTIONS.

The Destruction of Jerusalem.

Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, delivered a lecture in Lincoln, England, on the early history of Eastern nations. He gave an outline of the history of the Babylonian, Assyrian, Persian, Egyptian, Greek and Jewish nations, and closed by the following description of the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus:

Six years after the birth of our Lord Judea and Samaria became a Roman province, under subordinate governors, the most famous of whom was Pontius Pilate. These governors became so oppressive that the Jews broke out into rebellion, and seventy years after Christ Jerusalem was finally besieged by Titus, afterwards emperor of Rome. No tragedy on the stage has the same scenes of appalling terror as are to be found in in the history of the siege. The city itself was rent by factions at the deadliest war with each other—all the elements of civil hatred had broken loose—the streets were slippery with the blood of citizens—brother slew brother—the granaries were set on fire—famine wasted those whom the sword did not slay. In the midst of the civic massacres, the Roman armies appeared before the walls of Jerusalem. Then for a short time the rival factions united against the common foe; they were again the valiant countrymen of David and Joshua—they sallied forth and scattered the eagles of Rome.

But the triumph was brief, and the ferocity of the ill-fated Jews was soon again wasted on themselves. And Titus marched on and encamped his armies close by the walls—and from the heights the Roman gazed with awe on the city of Jehovah.

Let us here pause and take, ourselves, a mournful glance at Jerusalem as it then was. The city was fortified by a triple wall, save on one side, where it was protected by deep and impassable ravines. These walls, of the most solid masonry, were guarded by strong towers; opposite to the loftiest of these towers Titus had encamped. From the height of that tower the sentinel might have seen, stretched below, the whole of that fair territory of Judea, about to pass from the countrymen of David. Within these walls was the palace of the kings—its roof of cedar, its doors of the rarest marbles, its chambers filled with the costliest draperies and vessels of gold and silver. Groves and gardens gleaming with fountains, adorned with statues of bronze, divided the courts of the palace itself. But high above all, upon a precipitous rock, rose the temple, fortified and adorned by Solomon.

The temple was as strong without as a citadel—within more adorned than a palace. On entering you beheld porticoes of numberless columns of porphyry, marble and alabaster; gates adorned with gold and silver; among which was the wonderful gate called the Beautiful. Farther on through the vast arch was the sacred portal which admitted into the interior of the temple itself, all sheeted over with gold, and overhung with a vine tree of gold, the branches of which were as large as a man. The roof of the temple, even on the outside, was set over with golden spikes, to prevent the birds settling there and defiling the holy dome. At a distance, the whole temple looked like a mount of snow, fretted with with golden pinnacles. But, alas! the veil of that temple had already been rent asunder by an inexplicable crime, and the Lord of hosts did not fight with Israel.

But the enemy is thundering at the wall. All around the city rose immense machines, from which Titus poured down mighty fragments of rocks and showers of fire. The walls gave way, the city was entered—the temple itself was stormed. Famine, in the meantime, had made such havoc that the besieged were more like spectres than living men; they devoured the belts of their swords, the sandals of their feet.

Even nature itself so perished away that a mother devoured her own infant fulfilling the awful words of the warlike prophet who had first led the Jews toward the land of promise: "The tender and delicate woman amongst you, who would not venture to set the sole of her foot upon the ground for delicateness and tenderness—her eye shall be evil toward her young one and the children that she shall bear; for she shall eat them for want of all things, secretly, in the siege and straitness wherewith the enemy shall distress thee in thy gates."

Still, as if the foe and the famine were not scourge enough, citizens smote and murdered each other as they met in the way, false prophets ran howling through the streets—every image of despair completes the ghastly picture of the fall of Jerusalem.

And now the temple was set on fire, the Jews rushing through the flames to perish amid its ruins. It was a calm summer night, the 10th of August. The whole hill on which stood the temple was one gigantic blaze of fire—the roofs of cedar crashed—the golden pinnacles of the dome were like spikes of crimson flame. Through the lurid atmosphere all was carnage and slaughter; the echoes of shrieks and yells rang back from the hill of Zion and the Mount of Olives. Among the smoking ruins, and over piles of the dead, Titus planted the standard of Rome.

Thus were fulfilled the last avenging prophecies—thus perished Jerusalem. In that dreadful day men were still living who might have heard the warning voice of him they crucified: "Verily I say unto you, these things shall come upon this generation.....Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee.....Behold your house is left unto you desolate."

And thus were the Hebrew people scattered over the face of the earth, still retaining to this hour their mysterious identity—still a living proof of the truth of those prophets they had scorned or slain—still vainly awaiting that Messiah whose divine mission was fulfilled eighteen centuries ago upon the mount of Calvary.

[Rev M. Baxter in Christian Herald.]

Our Earth in the Millenium.

When Christ descends personally with his glorified saints upon Mount Olivet at the close of this Gentile dispensation, as predicted in Zechariah xiv. 4, and Acts i. 11, then the millennium of one thousand years will commence. Rev. xx.

The leading features of the millennial earth may be noticed under four heads as regards the changes in its condition. 1, Physically; 2, Politically and Socially; 3, Religiously; 4, As respects the Jewish nation.

1. As regards the physical condition of the future Millennial earth, it is important to remember that the earth will not be completely burned up or depopulated at the second advent. The day of the Lord, in which the general conflagration is to occur (2 Peter iii. 10,) is not a day of twenty-four hours, but is explained, in 2 Peter iii. 8, to be a period of one thousand years, and is, in fact, the same period as the millennium. The conflagration will take place partially at the beginning of the thousand years (Rev. xviii; Isa. lxvi. 15; Ezek. xxxix. 6; 2 Thess. i. 8,) and more completely at the end of the thousand years (Rev. xx. 9, 20, 21,) when there will be no more sea.

Thus, also, the new heavens and new earth seem to commence partially with the millennium (Isa. lxv. 17; lxvi. 22,) but are not completely perfected until the end of the millennium, when the sea, having given up its dead, altogether disappears. Rev. xxi. 1. After the battle of Armageddon, some of the less hardened sinners will be converted, and will be sent as missionaries to the nations and to the isles afar off that have not heard the fame nor seen the glory of the Lord. Isa. lxv. 19.

But, although a few men are left (Isa. xxiv. 6,) yet a great many of the remaining inhabitants of the earth are burned at that time, for the Lord Jesus will send a fire on them that dwell carelessly in the isles (or different continents of the earth) (Ezek. xxxix. 6,) and will execute judgment upon all (Jude 15,) with flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God (2 Thess. i. 8), and by fire and by his sword will plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many. Isa. lxvi. 16.

After the incorrigible rejecters of the gospel are cut off, the surviving population of the earth (probably a tenth or a twentieth part of its present population) will quickly increase and multiply, and live in successive generations; births, deaths, and marriages taking place as at the present time. The glorified saints that will have been previously caught up to the heavens at the resurrection and two translations will live in the heavenly Jerusalem and constantly descend and ascend between it and this earth, over which they will visibly or invisibly reign as kings. Genesis xxviii. 12; John i. 51.

The curse that has rested upon the animal, vegetable, and mineral creation ever since the fall of Adam, will be to a great extent repealed. As soon as all the people praise God, then shall the earth yield her increase. Psa. lxvii. 7. The hitherto sterile soil will become extraordinarily fruitful, and will require very little labor in order to produce abundant crops. Amos. ix. 13; Joel iii. 18; Isa. xxx. 23. Weeds will almost cease to grow upon it. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree. Isa. lv. 13.

There will be important atmospheric, meteorological, and geological changes, by means of which waste, wildernesses, such as the Great Sahara, and frozen regions, like those of Siberia, will become clothed with fertility and beauty, for the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose....and the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water. Isa. xxxv. Entire exemption from sickness does not seem to be promised to the Gentile nations as to the Jews; but the leaves of the tree of life in the New Jerusalem are for the healing of the nations (Rev. xxii. 2,) and will apparently be brought down from the New Jerusalem to those upon earth who are sick. All the blind, deaf, dumb, and lame that are spared at Christ's descent will be healed. Isaiah xxxv. 5.

Venomous serpents will become quite harmless, and ferocious animals, such as the wolf, the leopard, the lion, and the bear, becoming graminivorous instead of carnivorous, will live peaceably with sheep and cattle, (Isa. xi. 6; lx. 25,) and may, perhaps, be used as beasts of burden. Man's lifetime will perhaps be prolonged; the express promise of longevity appears, however, to be only given to the Jewish nation. Isa. lxvi. 20. These changes will necessarily cause an unparalleled increase of the earth's inhabitants, so that they will become as numerous as the sands upon the seashore. Rev. xx. 8.

It will be interesting to observe, during the millennium, how the difficulties arising from the great increase of population will be provided against.

In England the population, which is now 330 to the square mile, has doubled itself in fifty years, from A. D. 1800 to 1850, and political economists consider that, if unchecked by wars, scarcity of food, etc., it would easily double itself every twenty-five years. At this rate the earth's inhabitants, if only fifty millions at the beginning of the millennium, would become 204,800,000,000 in the three hundredth year, which would be about 3,400 persons to every square mile of land, for only 60,000,000 out of the 200,000,000 square miles of the earth's surface consists of land.

This would perhaps be as great a population as the earth could well contain and would require about three-fourths of its soil to be under cultivation, and sufficiently fertile to yield on an average from each acre (the 600th part of a square mile) enough food for seven persons. (Even now one acre has been known to yield by spade cultivation, enough to support twenty persons.) There will, doubtless, be special Providential arrangements which prevent too great a multiplication of the human race.

This estimation of about 200,000,000,000 as the possible maximum of the earth's population, (being 150 times greater than its present population of 1,300,000,000), will make the unglorified inhabitants of the millennial earth to be 500 times more numerous than the glorified saints of the first resurrection (Rev. xx. 6,) who will reign over them—that is, if these latter (exclusive of deceased infants) be approximately estimated to amount to about 400,000,000. There would thus probably be more people living on the earth at one time than the whole sum of all the successive populations during the past 6,000 years.

(To be concluded.)

NEWS ITEMS.

LONDON, March 26.—The famine in Upper Egypt causes terrible suffering. In some villages the people, naked like wild beasts, dig for roots. In one town women and children fought over scraps of bread. The inland villagers are said to be starving like dogs.

PESTH, March 25.—There is not a single boat at Devaonyn, and great loss of life is certain if the flood increases.

VIENNA, March 25.—Renewed floods in Hungary have covered 12,000 acres of land which had already been sown, and the lives of 12,000 people are endangered.

One of the physicians dispatched by Germany to Astrachan has reported that a fresh case of plague appeared on the 21st of March at Weitlanka. A dispatch says that General Melikoff has returned to Weitlanka, and decided to burn sixty-seven houses of the value of 45,210 rubles. The Minister of the Interior has ordered the Governors of the various provinces to co-operate vigilantly against the spread of epidemics during spring.

The Times reports that there were shocks of earthquake in Northern Persia during Saturday and Sunday. Minneh was much damaged, and the adjacent cities of Tark and Maiblon were totally destroyed. Out of 1,100 inhabitants only a few escaped death.

Many avalanches have recently occurred in the Austrian Tyrol. At Bleiberg ten houses were crushed, forty persons were killed, eighteen seriously injured, and fifteen others are missing.

The Constantinople Messenger is informed that Dr. Schliemann has again had the good fortune to unearth from the depths underneath the site of the Homerick Ilium, at Hissarlik, more "treasure-trove." No less than four buried hoards of prehistoric treasures have been discovered: one consisting of gold earrings, bracelets and beads, and one, by far the most precious of all, consisting of a bronze vessel full of gold ear-rings, bracelets and beads with a spiral pattern on them; a large round piece and sixteen bars of solid gold, several silver ornaments, and some bronze axes. All these relics of antiquity will enrich the Imperial Museum, as, by his compact with the government, although Dr. Schliemann is to bear the entire cost of the excavations at Hissarlik, all antiquities found are the property of the museum. According, however, to another authority, the treasure-trove will be equally divided between Dr. Schliemann and the Turkish government.

POETRY.

Hereafter.

What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter. John xiii. 7.

Christian, when the storm-clouds gather
Dark and wild upon thy way,
And thy faithless heart is longing
For the glorious light of day,
Though thou canst not pierce the shadows
That around thy footsteps lie,
If in faith thou journey forward
They will vanish by and by.

Though the bitter cup of sorrow
To thy lips be often pressed,
Yet, as each succeeding morrow
Brings thee nearer to thy rest,
Though thou may not see the fountain
Whence the streams of Marah flow,
Never let thy courage fail thee;
For "thou shalt hereafter know."

If thy curious mind would fathom
That which God alone may know,
If thy troubled heart would query
Why the ways of God are so,
Why the losses and the crosses
Which around thy path may lie,
Be content to meekly bear them
In the hope, that, by and by,

When shall dawn the glorious morning
Of the bright eternal day,
When the mist and cloud and darkness
That cowrap thee, pass away,
Thou shalt see the perfect beauty
Of the plans of life and love,
And its fullness emanating
From the Father's throne above;

See and know the glad fruition
From the labors and the tears
Spent within the Master's vineyard
Through the weary lapse of years.
Then pass on the path of duty.
Though thou may not see below
Why uncertainties surround thee,
Yet "thou shalt hereafter know."

The New Heavens and the New Earth.

H. WILSON.

Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.—2 Peter iii. 13.

The promise may be found in Isaiah lxv. 17, 18, and reads as follows: "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create; for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy." Another allusion is made to this new creation in Isa. lxvi. 22, in which the perpetuity of that new state of things is asserted.

These two passages are the only ones where the phrase is found in the Old Testament. Besides the one quoted above from Peter's letter, there is only another similar passage in the New Testament, and that is Rev. xxi. 1, and reads thus: "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea." What John saw in vision was what Peter was looking forward to, and expecting to be accomplished at some future time, in fulfillment of Jehovah's promise. As the brethren do not all speak the same thing, nor are of the same mind and same judgment (1 Cor. i. 10) with reference to this subject, I propose its investigation, so that, if possible, we all may understand alike.

There are many places in the Bible where the phrase heavens and earth is to be found. Generally speaking, the literal or material creation is meant, but not always. The words heaven and heavens occur hundreds of times; so also the word earth. The connection in which these words and phrases stand, and the relation they hold to other parts of the Bible, must always determine their meaning. For instance,—though we read in Gen. i. 1, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," by which language all will admit the material creation is spoken of, yet when we read in Isaiah i. 2, the prophet saying, "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth, for the Lord hath spoken," we know that these words are not used in the same sense. So also Deut. xxxii. 1; Jer. ii. 12; xxii. 29, etc. Heaven sometimes means the atmosphere in which birds fly, and the clouds float; as Rev. xix. 17—"fowls that fly in the midst of heaven;" and "clouds of heaven," "windows of heaven," "dew of heaven," "winds of heaven," in many texts. Sometimes the firmament in which the sun, moon, and stars are placed is called heaven; as Gen. i. 14–17; "the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork," Psa. xix. 1; viii. 3; etc. The abode of Jehovah is called heaven; as, "God is in heaven, and thou upon earth," Eccl. v. 2; and the Lord's prayer, Matt. vi. 9; Heb. viii. 1; etc. These texts are only a few of the same class. Sometimes heaven is used metonymically for God, because he dwells there; as, "kingdom of heaven" for "kingdom of God," Matt. iii. 2; v. 3, 10, 19, etc., and throughout Matthew's gospel; Mark xi. 30, 31. Sometimes heaven is used symbolically for government, or for what is high and exalted; as Dan. iv. 26; Matt. xi. 23; Heb. xi. 16; xii. 22, etc. The word earth, and the phrase heaven and earth are not always used literally. The context will always determine in what sense they are used.

The creation of something new to take the place of the old implies the removal of the old. If this be a creation of material heavens and earth then there must be a destruction or removal of the present creation to make room for the new. To understand the language of Peter literally, the present heavens and earth are to be destroyed in "the day of the Lord," when "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." The time when this change will take place is at the coming of Christ, called also the day of the Lord, and the coming of the day of God. 2 Peter iii. 4, 10, 12. This language cannot be taken literally without doing violence to the general tenor of the word of God.

Of the earth it is said, "it abideth forever," Eccl. i. 4; "the world shall be stable, that it be not moved," 1 Chron. xvi. 30; Jehovah "laid the foundations of the earth that it should not be removed forever," Psa. civ. 5; "God himself formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited," Isa. xlv. 18. The earth has been given to the sons of men for their abode; and though the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, the righteous shall dwell therein forever. Prov. ii. 21, 22; Psa. xxxvii. 29. God's covenants require the perpetuity of the earth. His covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is an everlasting covenant—even to a thousand generations. 1 Chron. xvi. 15–19; Psa. cv. 8–12. That covenant embraced the land in which the fathers lived and died. That land was the lot of their inheritance but which they did not possess during their lifetime. Yet they died in faith, that the promised inheritance, would be theirs at some future time. But if the earth is to be removed or burned up, those promises cannot be fulfilled.

Jehovah, however, to show the perpetuity of his covenants with his people, refers to his covenant with day and night, and his appointment of the ordinances of heaven and earth. Jer. xxxiii. 25, 26; xxxi. 35, 36. If one can be broken, then the other may be also. In Rev. xx. 11, it is written, that John saw the heaven and earth flee away from the face of him that sat on the great white throne, and there was no place found for them. And Isaiah says, that when the new heavens and earth are created, the old ones shall not be remembered nor come into mind. Isa. lx. 17. If this is literal language, then the fathers will never see the fulfillment of the promises made to them, although Jehovah covenanted, and confirmed with an oath, that the very land in which they pitched their tents, saw with their eyes, and walked upon—the land then inhabited by ten nations, and lying between the Nile and the Euphrates—should be possessed by them and their seed forever. Gen. xii. 7; xiii. 15–17; xv. 18–21; xxii 15–18, etc. The promises of God cannot fail. Jesus has said, that it is easier for heaven and earth to pass than for one little of the law to fail, or for his words to pass away. Luke xvi. 17; Matt. xxiv. 35. This comparison is used to show the immutability of his laws, words and promises.

There are many passages of Scripture, which if understood in a literal sense, imply the dissolution of the material heavens and earth; but to do so makes them conflict with other parts of the word, and nullify the promises of God. Some other way of understanding them must be sought.

Let us look at a few fulfilled prophecies where the language cannot be interpreted literally. In Isa. xiii. we find something about the coming of the day of the Lord, in which the land is to be desolate, and sinners destroyed out of it, so that men are to be more precious than fine gold. The stars of heaven also shall not give their light, the sun be darkened, and the moon not shine. "Therefore," says Jehovah, "I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, ... and it shall be as a chased roe, and as a sheep that no man taketh up." And yet this prophecy is concerning Babylon, and was fulfilled over two thousand years ago. This highly figurative language related to and was descriptive of the destruction of that city and kingdom. If not literally fulfilled, why contend that 2 Peter iii. 7–13 should be?

In Isa. xxxiv. God's judgments upon Idumea are set forth in similar bold metaphorical language. "The mountains shall be melted with their blood. And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll; and all the host shall fall down, as a leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree. For my sword shall be bathed in heaven; behold, it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment." The streams also were to be turned into pitch, the dust into brimstone, and the land to become burning pitch, which should not be quenched, but the smoke go up forever, etc. The fulfillment of this prophecy gives the answer as to whether the language is literal.

The prophecy in Ezek. xxxii. with respect to the fall of Pharoah and Egypt is of like character. The Lord said, "When I shall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light. All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land." Throughout the entire chapter metaphorical language is used.

The destruction and desolation of Israel and their land is also graphically described by the pen of inspiration, and in highly figurative language. Read Joel ii. This judgment comes in the day of the Lord; and under the figure of locusts the troop of the invaders is described. The prophet says, "The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble; the sun and moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining." Read Zeph. i. 14–18, respecting the same judgments upon Israel in the day of the Lord. According to Micah i. 1–6, when the Lord should come forth out of his place to punish Samaria and Jerusalem, he would tread upon the high places of the earth. "And the mountains shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters poured down a steep place." In this day of destruction, "thus saith the Lord God, I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day." Amos viii. 9. Of Judah, Jeremiah says, "her sun is gone down while it was yet day," chap. xv. 9; and again he says, "I beheld the earth, and lo, it was without form, and void; and the heavens, and they had no light. .... For thus hath the Lord said, The whole land shall be desolate; yet will I not make a full end. For this shall the earth mourn, and the heavens above be black." Jer. iv. 23–28.

But enough has been quoted to show that this prophetic language is highly figurative. Then why should John's description of what he saw in vision on the opening of the sixth seal be understood literally?

Rev. vi. 12–14. He saw an earthquake; the sun and moon darkened; the stars fall; the heaven depart as a scroll rolled together; and the removal of every mountain and island. The prophets as we have already seen described the subjugation and destruction of the nations in similar language. Then why should Rev. xxi. 1 be interpreted literally? "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea." The new takes the place of the old which he saw flee away from before the face of him that sat on the throne. Rev. xx. 11. It was not the material creation which passed away, for the throne of the Lord shall be in Jerusalem, and all nations shall be gathered unto it. Jer. iii. 17; Isa. xxiv. 23. Mount Zion will be his resting place forever. Then what shall be said of 2 Peter iii. 10, where it is stated that "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise," etc? Is this any more literal than what Isaiah saw, or John, concerning the passing away, or rolling together of the heavens, and the removal of the earth? Whatever may be the meaning of these prophecies, the solid earth on which we dwell, and the glorious heavens spread abroad over us cannot be intended. The heavens are the Lord's, and lasting as his throne, and the earth has been given to the sons of men, and it shall never be removed.

Let us turn our attention now to the new heavens and the new earth, in which righteousness shall dwell. Peter says we look for this new creation, according to his promise. The only place where this promise can be found is in Isa. lxv. 17, 18. "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create; for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy." This creation evidently refers to some great change which will take place in Jerusalem and her people. In Isa. ii. 16 there is another prophecy about this great change, and by whom it will be accomplished. Jehovah says of his Anointed one, "I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people." The new creation will be the work of the Lord Jesus. He says, "Behold, I make all things new." Rev. xxi. 5. His work, however, is more of a moral and spiritual character, than physical. It has to do more with man than with his dwelling place. As the woman's seed, his mission is to bruise the serpent's head. "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil," 1 John iii. 8; and not only his works, but the devil himself. Heb ii. 14. He came not "to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." John iii. 17. "The Father sent his Son to be the Savior of the world." 1 John iv. 14. The son commenced his work of the new creation by saving men from their sins by the Gospel. He infuses the principles of faith in what God has promised, hatred of sin, and obedience to what he has commanded. By these means he is creating a people for himself—"a new creation," (new creature,) 2 Cor. v. 17; a people of like character with his own, who shall reign with him.

This is a people which he is taking out of the nations for his name, called "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people," 1 Peter ii. 9;—a people who are blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ;" a people composing the church of God, the Bride of Christ. As it is God's purpose "in the dispensation of the fulness of times to gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth,"—the thrones, dominions, principalities and powers of that era will belong to Christ and his saints. These are the things which were created by, in, or on account of him who is "the head of the body, the church; who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence." Col. i. 15–18. "At the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Phil. ii. 10, 11. He will be the first and last—the chief. All governmental power will centre in him. As "the Sun of righteousness" he will be the most glorious and conspicuous object in the new heavens, shedding light, life, and beauty upon the new earth. The righteous also will shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father, and as the stars for ever and ever. Matt. xiii. 43; Dan. xii. 3.

The kingdom which the God of heaven will set up is called "the kingdom of the heavens," and as "heavenly kingdom." It will constitute the new heavens of the future. The present heavens or governments will pass away with a great noise, and be rolled together as a scroll, in order that the Divine government may take its place

THE RESTITUTION,

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the millenial age; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the destruction of the righteous, and the final overthrow of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief in the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

GREAT IMPENDING CRISIS.

2 Thess. ii. 3-12--Paul's Man of Sin---Head of the Apostasy--Analysis of the Terms---His Acts---Compare with the Charts of Daniel and John---Only one Apostasy---One Continuous Head---One Succession---No one Man Could Set in Motion and Carry out Such Another Fatal Machinery as that of The Papacy.

J. P. WEETHEE.

General Remarks.—Paul, near the close of his first letter to the Thessalonian church, in describing the return of Christ, uses this language: "We who are alive," intimating that his return was anticipated in his natural lifetime. False teachers deepened the same impression by saying that the spirit had revealed to them the same fact; also, that they had heard Paul say that he expected to see the Savior return before he should die; likewise that they had received letters from him to that effect.

To correct this error was Paul's design in his second epistle. He shows that they must rest in death before Christ's return, chapter i. 7; that they should occupy till he comes. He presents them the spirit's chart on which was delineated the one great apostasy. Its mighty head is brought to view. The great chieftain is traced from his infancy and through his childhood, youth, manhood, old age and wasting, to his death. The life of this chieftain fills the entire chart from Paul's day to the return of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven. As if the apostle had said: "I leave this chart for you and for all Christians to be their guide, and to teach them to know when the Savior's return could be immediately anticipated." No other power is brought to view, for he is the dreaded antichrist.

Paul's Chart.—The chart, in its outline, is a unit—one great apostasy and its governing agent. Paul sees nothing else—this mighty chieftain fills the prophetic horizon. The spirit, centuries before, had photographed for Daniel a similar apostate; the time had now come for his revelation, and the spirit directs the great apostle of the Gentiles to reproduce the image. The Holy Spirit is commissioned, by the Savior, to say to his people, through Paul, that he will return to destroy his great enemy that was beginning to work secretly among them, and would, through centuries, persecute and destroy them. To this prophetic chart we now call your attention. Paul's history of the man of sin is exceedingly brief; it is condensed into ten verses, containing, however, a great variety of words to express his character and destiny.

Analysis of the Terms.—Verse 2: As that the day of Christ is impending, near at hand, the next event to transpire in your life-time. Let no one deceive you by any method, neither by pretended revelation, nor by pretended word or letter purporting to come from us.

Verse 3: For the ἀποστασία—(apostasy) the apostasy—some particular one—no ordinary one, but the one about which I was speaking when with you, the one shown by the spirit to Daniel.

Apostasia is used twice only. In Acts xxi. 21, we have the following: "[illegible] Moses," "that teachest an apostasy from Moses," this is the apostasy from Christ—a prophet like unto Moses. The one explains the other.

ἀνθρωπος τῆς ἁμαρτίας—"the man of sin—guilt.—man of transgression—man of deceit, falsehood; a violator of the laws of Jesus and his apostles. The term is singular—the man of sin. Does Paul mean one man, or one succession, composed of many men, filling the same office? In the metallic image, Dan. ii. 31-41, each metal (singular) symbolizes a kingdom composed of a succession of kings. The same idea is presented in Dan. vii. In the Persian empire, when one particular king is intended, he is named, or so distinctly described that his name may be known. Cyrus is called by name long before he was born, or before his kingdom was of any note (Isa. xliv. 28; xlv. 1, 4). Christ was named before he was born. Why should not the antichrist, if one particular person is intended, be named also? for it is very evident that the spirit knew it since it was then secretly working. How could any one man work, even secretly, eighteen centuries before his birth? If it be said that the apostasy was intended, we answer, the apostasy included many persons, but had one guiding power, the episcopacy.

Had the man of sin been a Roman emperor there would have been a propriety in withholding his name, but if a Jew or a Christian by profession, such secrecy was not necessary. A learned writer thus speaks: "As in the prophecies of Daniel, empires governed by a succession of kings are denoted by a single emblem; such as, by a part of an image, a single beast, a horn, etc., of a beast, so in Paul's prophesy, the man of sin, and son of perdition, and the lawless one, may denote an impious tyranny exercised by a succession of men, who cause great misery and ruin to others, and who at length shall be destroyed themselves. It is true, the Papists contend that one person only is meant by these appellations; because they are in the singular number, and have the Greek article prefixed to them. But in Scripture we find other words in the singular number, with the article, used to denote a multitude of persons; for example, Rom. i. 17, ὁ δικαιος, 'the just one by faith shall live;' that is, all just persons whatever; Tit. i. 7, ὁ ἐπισκοπος, 'the bishop must be blameless;' that is, all bishops must be so; 2 John, verse 7, ὁ πλανος, the deceiver, signifies many deceivers; as is plain from the precedent clause, where many deceivers are said 'to have gone out.' In like manner the false teachers, who deceived Christ's servants to commit fornication and idolatry, are called 'that woman Jezebel,' Rev. ii. 20, and 'the whore of Babylon,' Rev. xvii. 5, and in this prophecy, verse 7, the Roman emperors, and magistrates under them, are called ὁ κατεχων, 'he who restraineth.' Further, a succession of persons arising one after another, are denoted by appellations in the singular number, with the article. For example, the succession of the Jewish high priests is thus denoted in the laws concerning them. Lev. xxi. 10-15; Num. xxxv 25, 28; as also the succession of Jewish kings. Deut. xvii. 14; I Sam. viii. 11. From these examples, therefore, it is plain that the names, man of sin, son of perdition, lawless one, although in the singular number, and with the article prefixed, may, according to the Scripture idiom, denote a multitude, and even a succession of persons arising one after another." Macknight on the Epistles.

Verse 4: Αντικειμενος και υπεραιρομενος, sitting himself down against, and raising himself above. So that he in the temple of God as a God sitteth; first, opposing, then elevating himself above. He sits in the temple of God, as a God sits in his temple, as if at home, erected for his special purpose. His attitude, sitting, implies duration and personal security, as being above all power.

"Temple of God."—This word is sometimes literal, at other times it has a tropical meaning. In which sense is it here understood? Both interpretations are given it; still both cannot be true. We are inclined to the figurative interpretation. God had a temple in Jerusalem. Solomon's temple, or the one rebuilt, was God's temple as long as he dwelt there. So soon as Jesus, with his blood, entered the antitypical temple, God was no longer in the old one; but he continued to dwell in the church—the church, therefore, was henceforth God's dwelling place or temple on earth. The temple at Jerusalem was a typical temple and had completed its work before Paul wrote his epistles. God, at that time, had no visible temple on the earth. The temple at Jerusalem was never spoken of as the temple of God after he had deserted it.

It is spoken of in the New Testament in the following passages: "In the temple." Acts ii. 46. "Into the temple." Chap. iii. 1. "Into the temple." Verse 3. "In the temple." Chap. v. 25, 20. "Into the temple." Chap. xxi. 26. "In the temple." Verse 27. "Into the temple." Verses 28, 29. "Prayed in the temple." Chap. xxii. 17. "In the temple." Chap. xxiv. 12, 18. "In the temple." Chap. xxvi. 21. The temple service continued as long as the temple stood, but its sacrifices were an abomination after Christ was put to death.

Naos—temple is from ναιω to inhabit. It would, therefore, cease to be the house of God when he ceased to dwell in it. Should the Jews return in an unconverted state, any temple that they might erect, however costly, would not be the temple of God, for God would not dwell there. If they should be converted to Christ, then their building would be like any other church edifice. Should a building be erected in Jerusalem in all the splendor of Solomon's, it would have no more right to be called the temple of God than any other building erected for Christian worship.

Christians are the Temple of God.—"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and (that) the spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man destroy the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which (temple) ye are." 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. "And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in (them), and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." 2 Cor. vi. 16. "Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers, nor foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner (stone); in whom all the building, aptly framed together, groweth up into a holy temple in the Lord. In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the spirit." Eph. ii. 19-22; see Rev. iii. 12; vii. 15; xi. 1, 19; xxi. 22.

Verse 5: In this verse we have the fact stated, that Paul had previously informed the Thessalonians of the apostasy, so that they should have avoided the errors into which they had fallen.

Verse 6: What holds him (man of sin) fast, (κατεχον), that he may be revealed in his own time, viz.: in the age of the ten kingdoms?

"What holds him fast?"—Roman empire—Pagan Rome. This was the general view of the ancient fathers of the church.

Verse 7: For the secret of lawlessness doth already work privately in the hearts of corrupt teachers. Acts xx. 29. Only he who now holds this man of sin, will hold him until he (Pagan Rome) be taken out of the way—of the man of sin in his private position—and as the ruler of the world.

Verse 8: Lawless one shall be revealed, his restraint being removed. Roman empire giving way to ten kingdoms. The seat of the Roman empire (Latin division) was to be vacated so as to allow the Pope to take his seat as universal bishop.

Verse 9: This verse shows the manner of the revelation of the man of sin, and his high position in the temple of God, the working of Satan with all power and signs and miracles.

Verse 10: Of falsehoods, and every deceitful trick in them that perish.

Verse 11: And for this cause (because they received not the love of the truth) God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie. The Roman empire could not change its priesthood till its unity was broken, and it could not patronize a new priesthood till the supremacy of the old was removed. The old, or Pagan priesthood was partially broken down under Constantine the Great. It was removed from the empire when the last of the ten kings was converted to Christianity.

This corrupt power, called the man of sin, was evidently an apostate chieftain in the Christian church. That, during his minority, while restrained by Paganism upheld by an empire, he would work secretly to corrupt and overthrow the doctrines of Christianity; but after the removal of all obstacles, he would assume divine power and arrogate to himself divine honors. Seated securely in the temple of God, he would gradually abrogate the government of God over his own subjects, and make himself the only God known in the church.

Conclusion.—Our subject, though materially condensed, is too vast to allow a summary. To present the history of a chieftain, whose power has controlled the destinies of the world, civil and ecclesiastical, for nearly thirteen centuries, in half as many numbers as the centuries through which his bloody deeds have extended is no easy task. The difficulty lies in selecting the best from such a mass of testimony, as to his words and deeds.

With the prophetic charts of Daniel, John and Paul before us, we have compared them with each other, and with the real history of the noted chieftain of the Christian era.

The Papacy claims to have had 254 links in its unbroken chain. It is a chain of 254 links—a dynasty with a succession of 254 chiefs. The pope claims to be the supreme head of the true church of Christ; since there have been two churches symbolized by the sun-clad woman and the harlot; and since the acts of the papacy correspond with the acts of the harlot, we have called it mystic Babylon.

If our identity be correct, what is the true position of this age relative to that power? As a persecuting power, its strength lay in the unlimited control of civil authority. The time has been when he had the diadem of the world at his disposal; when emperors esteemed it an honor to hold his stirrup or to kiss his toe. Where now is his civil power? Among the things that were. Will it ever be restored? See Daniel's chart of the little horn. Find, if you can, any revival of his power. "The judgment shall sit; and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy to the end." Do they ever restore his dominion? If so, it must be beyond the "end." The rider generally has control of the beast that carries her. Losing that control she is thrown. In Rev. xvii. the harlot rides the scarlet wild beast to her judgment—loses control, and is thrown. She once had control of that beast. Has she now? If not, she is fallen. If fallen, will she ever be again mounted? If so, where is the Scripture? "And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." Has that been in process of execution? If so, will it ever be reversed?

If we are correct as to the identity of the man of sin with the horn of Daniel and harlot of John, then what is our location on Paul's chart? He (man of sin) is being consumed by the spirit of Christ's mouth, and will be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. We live under his consuming process. Is there any restoring to health, any cure of his consumption? If so, show it on the chart. The charts of Daniel, John and Paul agree as to life and death of this agent. If, when he begins to decline, there is any revival of power, let it be shown. Some say that his ecclesiastical power is increasing. He has always claimed all power in heaven and on earth; what more can he have? He was once able to exercise all power on earth—now he says he has the right but not the power. The right, and the power to do, are quite unlike.

By Faith.

Had Brother J. B. Cook left "amiable and gifted" out, in connection with my name, I would have been better pleased. I am not gifted in the common acceptation of the term. My amiability (I trust I am amiable) God has given me through his word—by his Spirit, because he sent it to indite the word. I say I trust I am amiable in the sight of God to that extent he requires the faithful to be, because I do not know. I live by faith.

By faith! Here is the key that unlocks the mystery of the Holy Spirit. We have it by faith. So it seems to me. Faith in the promises of God takes hold of our minds, and produces fruit. This, to my mind, is called the fruit of the Spirit for two reasons:

1. Because the spirit gave the words that produced it.

2. Because the Spirit always produces good fruit.

The Spirit does not produce the schisms in the world, any more than I would produce an evil by stating a truth, knowing that some would misconstrue it. I state it in the very best possible manner; am I to blame? I think not. Does the evil come from me if my design is good, and everything is done in the best possible manner? I do not so see it.

If I do not mistake Brother Chaplin's language, he has similar experience to my own. He is anxious to know if he shall have part in the rapture of the saints, or be left over to go through the world's great tribulation. Now it seems to me that if we had the Holy Spirit in its literal form, there would be no doubt. We have full faith in God, but the doubt exists in regard to ourselves. We live by faith.

I have not got the Holy Spirit literally. What makes me think others do not have it? I think so because I know—unless I am constituted unusually so much better than everybody else, which I do not believe—I am as exemplary as those who claim to have it. (I do not boast.)

Am I cited to the apostles? It is true they had the Spirit literally, but the word of truth was its agent in producing good fruit in them. John xv. 3; Acts xv. 9. I consider they had this much more evidence that they were approved in the sight of God than we have, viz, their having the Holy Spirit. This was unavoidable. The gospel must be preached, and of course somebody must do it. He would not select unbelievers to do his work, although in some cases and special occasions he spoke in other ways. I do not believe the apostles, prophets and teachers had the Holy Spirit at all times. Why? Because it was given for an especial purpose. "Ye are witnesses of these things. And behold I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." Luke xxiv. 48, 49.

"But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." John xiv. 26. They did have it at this time, nor had they had it before, except when preceding their Lord in his journeyings; but they were to wait for it. See John vii. 39. The object of waiting was to be qualified to witness and to teach. The Holy Spirit would teach them; they were to teach others. They were disciples when these declarations were made, but they did not have the Spirit literally. Acts viii. 15, 16, proves people can be Christians without it. He did not say to them, Wait until ye be endued with power from on high to do good—to obey me; but to witness and teach. Then it is a legitimate conclusion that they had it only when in the capacity of teachers. It seems to me such texts as Acts xiii. 9, teach the same thing. If it was received for any other purpose—if it was necessary for a holy life, in every individual, it seems strange that some must have the apostles hands laid on them to receive it!

I did not mention the end spoken of in Matt. xxiv. 14; xxviii. 20. He says, "I will be with you." He does not say the Spirit, in these texts. How is Christ with or in us? By faith. Eph. iii. 16, 17. If we live the life of Jesus—if our lives are copies of his—he is in us by faith. He is in us if we keep his commandments. John xv. 3, 7.

I think the Holy Spirit dwells in us as Jesus does. My reasons for so thinking are already partially given. Paul, in his Galatian letter, used Christ, righteousness, and the Spirit, as equivalent terms. Gal. ii. 20, 21; iii. 2. I admit the Spirit meant more in his day.

Again, Balaam was tempted to curse Israel, but was forbidden. Num. xxii. He caused Israel to go astray, yet God spoke through him. He had the Spirit, (does God work without it?) yet he was not righteous. Other testimonies show that men have produced the fruit without having the Spirit literally. It seems to me, then, the conclusion is legitimate that the Holy Spirit is not given in its literal form to produce what is called the fruit of the Spirit. We do not have to have Christ to have his life; so we do not have to have the Spirit to have its fruit. It seems so to me.

"Good fruit is always the product of a good tree." I believe it. "By their fruits ye shall know them," was not said of individuals and their works only in a limited sense; but it was said of those who claimed authority to teach. What were those fruits? I believe they were miracles. Heb. ii. 4. They must demonstrate their authority, and there was no other way to do it. How is it now? We must test what they say by the word—the Bible. Produce the apostolic fruit, and I will believe; otherwise I must test it by the word.

The one body and the one spirit is an essential truth to every one. Perhaps I have different views from any one else. I look at it in this light: The body is not complete, it is being begotten, and every member is passing through the same state. 1 Peter i. 23; James i. 18. The Spirit bears the same relationship to our spiritual life that the air we breathe does to the natural. It does not come direct until we are born, but it is just as essential in its place. We have the effects of it, but not the Spirit itself. The air gives us pure blood; the Spirit gives us pure words—they are life, and by metonomy the Spirit.

The Bible teaches me that the promise of the Spirit is yet future. It is true that Peter says, "This is the promise;" but it is only typical, because that one body will receive it literally when Jesus comes. We shall then have power to do the same things Jesus and his apostles did, and "greater things than these shall ye do," when you are baptized with the Holy Ghost—born of the Spirit. All the texts teaching that we have the Spirit in the apostles' days were quite literal, but I use the figure now. I accept the literal interpretation of the texts, but place their fulfillment in the future. The knowledge that we abide in him (1 John iii. 24, etc.) is by faith now, but in that day, when we shall truly live because he lives, we shall know. John xiv. 18-20. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do he shall do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to the Father." John xiv. 12. "And these signs shall follow them that believe," etc. Mark xvi. 17. I suppose we are not asked to accept these promises as being fulfilled in us now, and yet the statements are just as strong as those that relate to the Spirit. Consequently, as we cannot do the things the Spirit did, I accept the promises as yet future.

We are baptized for the remission of sins—in the name of the Holy Spirit because by it God will raise us to a new life, and endow us with power continually. It is not so now. Have we been literally baptized by the one Spirit? 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13. Or is it by faith? We have been baptized into death, literally? By faith. Rom. vi. 4; Col. ii. 12. Is not the baptism into the one body the same? I think so. It is by faith now; by and by we will win the coveted prize—the Holy Spirit.

In conclusion, but in all kindness, it seems strange to me we are called upon to believe in something of which we have no evidence. Do you claim to teach under the great commission? "These signs shall follow them that believe." Produce the signs, brethren, and I will believe. The time is coming when the one body will be commissioned to teach all nations, and you will see the signs, too! It is not so, now. The apostles are speaking now—through the written word. The Spirit is speaking to us through them; it is helping our infirmities. We know not what we should pray for as we ought; the Spirit is making intercession for us, and teaching us what to pray for, through the apostles. We are represented as living under the sound of the apostles' voices. Though dead, they still speak.

Brethren, let us earnestly contend for the faith, and be kept by its power.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 9, 1879.

OUR REST for April has just come to hand. We have had but little time to read it, but judge from looking it over that it is an interesting number.

MANUSCRIPTS accumulate far faster than we can find room for them. We will do all we can for our correspondents, consulting at the same the best interests of the paper.

WE kindly ask our friends and patrons to remember THE RESTITUTION. We shall do our best to give our readers a good paper. We will do all we can afford to do for its prosperity.

Pleroma.

The Greek word πλήρωμα, pleroma, is derived from the verb πλήρω, plero, the verb occurring in the New Testament about ninety times, and the noun about seventeen times.

The verb is translated "fulfill" and "fulfilled," fifty-one times; "fill up," once; "full come," once; "fill" and "filled," nineteen times; and in some few instances it is rendered "shall supply," "complete," "expire," and "perfect." This verb is lexically defined "to fill," "make full," "fill up," etc.

The noun pleroma is translated "fulness," thirteen times; "fulfilling," once; "full," once; and by the phrases "which is put in to fill up," once; and "piece that filled up," once. The idea of "filling up" or "filling out" is very prominent in the use of the verb. Thus in speaking of some historical event, it is frequently said that some prophecy "has been fulfilled" by those events transpiring. It is also said of times, of certain appointed works and courses of ministry, that they were "fulfilled" by certain persons.

The word pleroma is defined to mean "that which fills up," "full measure," "that which fills up a deficiency," "a supplement, plenitude," etc. Accordingly we have the word pleroma translated, Matt. ix. 16, "that which is put in to fill up;" and Mark ii. 21, "the new piece that filled up," when referring to the new piece of cloth employed to mend, or "fill out" the rent in the old garment.

This idea of complementing something that is deficient may be seen again, Rom. xi. 25, where it is said that "blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in," where the word "fulness" is from pleroma. The figure employed here is that of an olive tree, out of which some branches had been broken to be replaced by others through the process of engrafting. A portion of the natural branches of the good olive tree remain in their original connection with the stock and root, but the severing off of another unfruitful portion left the tree incomplete and with a sparse, deficient outgrowth that God in his wisdom complements and fills out from a wild olive tree." The words —"until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in," would better be rendered "until the filling out (i. e., of the olive tree) from the Gentiles be come in." Paul's meaning is that the olive tree must suffer no loss of branches, and that the place made vacant by breaking some out must be filled up by grafting others in. The filling up is made from the Gentiles.

We now go to another epistle, written by the same apostle, to illustrate another figure which he employs to teach us something of the nature of our "high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Our reference is to Eph. i. 22, 23, which reads: "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all."

The word translated "fulness" here is pleroma in the original, and the apostle intended to impress us with the idea of a filling out or complementing. The figure employed is that of a head complemented with a body inclusive of its members. To arrive at the full sense of what the apostle is teaching in this connection we must attentively consider what he says in the preceding verses of this chapter. In the 18th verse he says that "the eyes of the understanding—of those addressed—might be enlightened so as to know what is the hope of God's calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, (verse 19), and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to his mighty power (verse 20) which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places."

One grand item in the Christian's hope is the resurrection from the dead. Now God has demonstrated his ability to raise the dead, and glorify them, by raising up Christ from the dead, and setting him at his own right hand in the heavenly places. Now since Christ, the living head, has been raised up and is a glorified, incorruptible and immortal being, it is absolutely essential that this glorious head be complemented into a full development by having a filling out of a quickened, immortal, incorruptible, and glorified body to sit together (with him in heavenly places. In the next chapter the apostle definitely informs us how this filling out or complementing the head that has been raised from the dead will be effected. Now we learn that the whole human family are sentenced to death on account of trespasses and sins. We also learn that our state is hopeless unless we attain unto the resurrection of the dead after the similitude of Christ's resurrection. 1 Cor. xv. 13-19. Without the manifestation of that resurrection life which "is hid with Christ in God," and through which our own resurrection is to be effected, we are dead past all hope, when once the sentence is executed upon us—"dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return,"—in consequence of trespasses and sins. But as God has, in the riches of his grace, ordained the re-living and glorification of saintly believers, and their unity with the already glorified head as the complementing body, the apostle speaks of the future quickening, raising up, and sitting together in heavenly places, proleptically, as already accomplished. Accordingly we read: "But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace are ye saved); and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness to us through Christ Jesus." Eph. ii. 4-7.

The Head, Christ, has already been quickened (1 Peter iii. 18), raised from the dead (Eph. i. 20), and exalted to the right hand of God. "He is the head of the body, the church; who is the beginning, the first born from the dead." Col. i. 18. The church, too! notwithstanding it goes down into the death state in consequence of trespasses and sins, will be quickened (Rom. viii. 11), raised up in the image of the heavenly (1 Cor. xv. 49), and appear with him in glory (Col. iii. 4). Then the pleroma developed into the likeness of the most glorious Christ will be united to the head, and, as a glorious corporation, be forever with the Lord. When we realize that a heavenly family are brought back from corruption and death through the riches of God's grace; from a death that had been incurred through trespasses and sins; and made equal to the unfallen angels, to share Christ's glory forever, we can but exclaim, "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out."

The quickened, raised, and glorified Christ is the head, and the body, which is the pleroma, or "filling out" of the head, will consist of the church when its redemption from death takes place. While the branches fill out the olive tree, it is nevertheless true that the increase and growth of these grafts depends upon the "root and fatness of the olive tree" to develop them into branches. So, though the body is the pleroma or "filling out" of the head, that head that "filleth all in all" fills that "complementing body" with its own life, spirit, incorruptibility, immortality and glory.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Revealed Destiny of the Ancient Jerusalem, Now a Dirty Turkish Village Trodden Down of the Gentiles.

I have been in the field of vision since 1842, (I arose in the morning) and have, during that time, seen and read a great many pros and cons for, and against the truth, but the order of Elder Taylor's "Coming Thrones," as elucidated lately in the Crisis, I cannot endorse. I have been edified by many of his articles in that paper, written in that trenchant style for which he is so justly distinguished; but now, as I read his late Crisis articles on the "Coming Throne," I press my fingers (all that are left me) to my forehead, earnestly, nay, distractedly wondering how it is that Elder Taylor, by whose side I have stood in so many of his expositions in the past of what our chart has said respecting the coming trouble, the coming reign and the coming glory, should, in this instance, have created a chasm of at least a thousand years between us. I should have thought that Peter's famous declaration (an infallible guide to every man laying his hand upon the prophetic page) should have prevented it. Here it is: "Whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken, by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the age began." Acts iii. 21.

My friend is willing, I doubt not, that his faith and teaching should be in harmony with this inspired epitome of holy guidance, and yet he adopts a theory which cramps and curtails, nay, more, which nullifies and destroys a great proportion of "what the holy prophets have spoken," adopting a narrow, self-made field of vision, which leaves not a vestige of room for some of the most eloquent and glowing utterances which ever fell from prophetic lips. I do not remember to have ever seen a more perplexing and bewildering conglomeration of light and darkness, truth and error, sunshine and gloom, I was going to say order and confusion, but of heaven's "first law" there is so little that the confusion reigns supreme as Elder Taylor's "Coming Thrones" exhibit.

I would have been glad to have noticed these articles through the Crisis, that its readers, Bible in hand, might have judged between us; but I, and such as I, who believe and teach "all that the prophets have spoken," are excluded from its pages by the sapient "editorial board" who have accepted the silly pretensions to infallibility, about which the old man on the banks of the Tiber, has been for some years raving. What matters it that we have stood by the paper from its birth, putting our hands in our pockets that friend and foe, clergy and laity alike, might learn its contents, we must be excluded, because, forsooth, we are guilty of the awful heresy of believing "all that the holy prophets have written," and are unwilling to be confined within the narrow little man-made circle, which a few of our erring fellows have thrown around them.

We may bask in the bright effulgence of that divine light, which the glorious sun of prophecy pours around and upon us from his undimmed and effulgent brow, as he traverses his glorious course from the east to the west of divine revelation, but the readers of the Crisis dare not be trusted like the Bereans of old to enquire "whether these things be so?" a little human taper which measures and illumines a few short years of human existence, and goes out when David's royal Son for the first time, seats himself upon David's vacant throne, is substituted for the matchless splendor and boundless glory of that rich, prophetic, divine effulgence, which sheds its rays across the "ages to come," in which the Divine Author is "still showing the exceeding riches of his grace," Eph. ii. 7; but "tell it not in Gath, publish it not in Ashkelon," that Paul believed in "ages to come," for our infallible guides of the Crisis might characterize it as a recent correspondent of their's did, as "age to come infidelity."

I am too old a soldier in the cause of unpopular truth to greatly dread such weapons. They have been hurled without stint upon me at every successive step I have taken in the path of divine light and truth for the past forty years, and I have invariably found that they proceeded from men who could evidently find no weapon in the divine armory, and hence, adopted the sorry substitute of reckless assertion and abusive epithet. They fall, however, upon my position, only reminding me somewhat of the effect which a grain of chaff produces upon a red hot oven.

Elder Taylor seems to have got his heel upon the neck of old Jerusalem. Let him keep her down if he can, for if he let her rise to her destined glory, just as sure as God is the Author of the Book which tells of her destiny, Judah, the lion's whelp, in splendor and national glory, will rise with her; for so God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets. Amen.

My friend has pronounced this old lady accursed. Will he oblige me with chapter and verse, where one such by either the Father or Son may be found? such as "not see his face again," "cast off forever," "blotted out," "never be built," etc. When he has furnished such, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, then may he write elect on his shield, and so bring on his "new Jerusalem" for the metropolis of the next age, and set it down on Mount Sion in Palestine, and I shall find no fault; but, if he should fail (as fail he will), then let him just leave the splendid city where John saw (it) the metropolis of a "new heaven" and a "new earth," which, neither he nor I shall see for at least a thousand years to come.

It is not to be wondered at that the patriotic Jew who read his beloved city's destiny, in the light of divinely inspired prophecy, should have seen her ultimate triumph and glory after a longer or shorter period of desolation and ruin, of change and disaster, and should have sung so touchingly and sweetly, "If I forget thee, oh, Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning; if I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy." Psa. cxxxvii. 5, 6.

Yes, Jerusalem now a dirty Turkish village, accursed enough of man, but still beloved of God, "cast out" bond-woman with her scattered children; "forsaken," but not forever; "down-trodden of the Gentiles until (until forever, no, only) until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," Luke xxi. 24, and then the fulfillment of Jehovah's promise: "Behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy," (what! create "new Jerusalem" over again?) "and I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people, and the voice of weeping and the voice of crying shall no more be heard in her." Isa. lxv. 18, 19.

When had the weeping and crying occurred in the "new Jerusalem?" Elder Taylor will explain. Was it the return from captivity at Babylon as some spiritualizing interpreter of prophecy would put it, that is called the "new Jerusalem?" or was it simply some glowing promise which God never intended to fulfill? But Elder Taylor is a literalist, and, hence, a believer in the literal fulfillment of all unconditional promises. "They shall build houses and inhabit them, and they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them"—"the wolf and the lamb shall feed together"—"they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." Isa. lxv. 25. Are these definite promises, which, in God's good time will become veritable history? or, are they just elastic figures of speech, which may mean something or nothing, according to the will of the reader? We cannot help believing "with faith unfeigned," that they are the glowing predictions of blessed facts, which God will develop into history during the millennial reign, ere yet the "new heavens or the new earth" have witnessed the descent of the new Jerusalem—Elder Taylor and the Crisis board to the contrary, notwithstanding.

"Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee;" "the Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising;" "the sons of strangers shall build thy walls and their kings shall minister unto thee; for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favor have I had mercy on thee." Isa. lx. 1-10. Was it the New Jerusalem which needed to be smitten, and whose walls the sons of the stranger should build? Elder Taylor will explain. "Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night;" "the glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee;" "the sons also of them that afflicted thee, shall come bending unto thee, and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet." Whose sons are they who have thus afflicted and despised the New Jerusalem? Will Elder Taylor please tell us? "Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee; I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations." Isa. lx. 15? Is not this the present Jerusalem, the forsaken and hated, and down-trodden Mohammedan village of to-day, which God has promised to make an "eternal excellence," "a joy of many generations?" We think so, Elder Taylor to the contrary, notwithstanding. "Violence (rampant now) shall (then) no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders;" "the sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee, but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory;" "the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." Isa. lx. 18-20. These are the glorious "times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the age began."

My friend of the Crisis seems perplexed about a location suitable for Messiah's throne. He says, "We must not wed Messiah's elect people to a purely Jewish city; we must not confound the earthly and the heavenly Jerusalem. We cannot make the present "city of bondage," "the cast out city," "the captive down-trodden city," "the accursed city" to be the "city of Messiah," and then he confesses an obscurity resting upon the whole. Why cannot we make the present city of bondage the city of Messiah? when it is the "forsaken and hated," and "down-trodden and afflicted" city which God hath promised by his prophet Isaiah to make an "eternal excellence," "a joy of many generations." God surely can do this, especially as he has promised it, and if so, it won't, we suppose, greatly matter that Elder Taylor cannot.

But, let me return and finish my quotations. I love these holy prophets and love them all the more because I believe them: "Thy people shall be all (carnal Jews; no, bless the good Lord) righteous; they shall inherit the land forever; the branch of my planting, the work of my hands that I may be glorified;" "a little one (Judah) shall become a thousand, and a small one (Israel in the flesh) a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time." Isa. lx. 21, 22. Oh, praise the Lord; we shall see wonders in the millennial age, but my fund of glorious promise, now ready to be revealed in the last time, is not half exhausted.

Come and hear more of what God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets: "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem; thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee," sums up all the blood-guiltiness mentioned in Matt. xxiii., yet beloved by Jesus, notwithstanding her ingratitude, base, cruel and heartless, though it was, could shield none of the tears or suppress none of the divine sorrow which God's Son poured out so lavishly upon her ungrateful head in that most touchingly eloquent lament, which any language, ancient or modern, ever bore upon human ear, and then the last prayer upon the cross. "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." How suggestive Paul's comment on the matter "which none of the princes of this age knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." "I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers." Jerusalem is to-day dear to the heart of God, and fresh in his memory are all his promises to her as the day when he uttered them by the mouth of his holy prophets, and sooner blot out all the luminaries of heaven than that one promise to his beloved Jerusalem should fail. Amen.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Brethren, the time is short.

If the soul is out of tune, there is no music.

God's promises are the buddings of performance.

Never find fault until it is perfectly certain that a fault has been committed.

That which could break a proud man's heart will not break a humble man's sleep.

Gray hairs, like honest friends, are plucked out and cast aside for telling unpleasant truths.

He who, when calm and cool, presses his rights to the utmost, will, when actuated by passion, overstep them.

Divine assistance is not the nurse of pride.

From vintages of sorrow are deepest joys distilled,
And the cup outstretched for healing is oft at Marah filled;
God leads to joy through weeping, to quietness through strife,
Through yielding into conquest, through death to endless life.
Be still; he hath enrolled thee for the kingdom and the crown;
Be silent; let him mold thee, who calleth thee his own.

There would be a great deal more harmony in this life if everyone would try to make himself more agreeable to others in conversation, in manners, in dealings in morality, in religion, and in all deeds.

Bickerateth: The sweetest life is to be ever making sacrifices for Christ; the hardest life a man can lead on earth, the most full of misery, is to be always doing his own will, and seeking to please himself.

Ever amid earth's darkest suffering we have the cheering promise, "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

"A few more sorrows here,
A few more partings o'er,
A few more toils, a few more tears,
And we shall weep no more."

To do good to men, as God sends his rain alike upon the just and the unjust; to look for what is good in them, as he draws us by our nobler selves and blots out our transgressions; to pity what is bad, as—while we were yet sinners Christ died for us—these are the ways by which we may grow to love one another as he loved us.

He who sets no value on his own time ought not to steal the time of another.

Send out thy light, the way is dark before me,
The path thy love has moulded out for me;
Send out thy light, that I may see thy footsteps
Calming the waters of life's restless sea.

Send out thy light, the clouds are dark above me,
Gathering in tempest from the angry sea;
Send out thy light, that I may see the storm-drops
Which fall from the dear hand, once pierced for me.

Send out thy light, and lead me, Father, lead me,
Beyond this darkness, sorrow, and unrest;
Send out thy light, and guide me, worn and weary,
To the calm shelter of my Savior's breast.

Contentment is a blessing, and it is within the reach of all, but it will not be found by him who goes out to seek it. It is something from within, and until the heart is right all effort after it must be in vain. Paul says: "I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content." It was something that came to him as he served his Master and imbibed his spirit.

LAHORE, April 3.—The British, under Captain Gough, defeated 5,000 Afghans, killing 400. The British loss was three officers and three men killed and thirty-two wounded.

LAHORE, March 21.—General Tytler yesterday defeated 3,000 of the enemy near Peshkolak. The enemy lost 200 men; the British loss was trifling. The Bengal lancers made a brilliant charge.

LONDON, April 4.—The Egyptian officer sent to break up the slave depots at Bahr El Gazel, in Kordofan, Central Africa, reports an engagement with Soleiman, the chief slave-trader and owner of twenty-five depots, in which the women alone waiting transportation into Egypt number 10,000. The Egyptian forces numbered 3,000, part armed with improved rifles, and were intrenched. Soleiman, with 11,000 Arabs, made several assaults, but they were completely defeated, and fled in disorder, leaving, 1,087 dead. The Egyptains lost twenty men.

ALEXANDRIA, April 5.—On the day after the battle between the Egyptians and the Arabs under Soleiman, 5,000 deserters came to the Egyptian camp. The Egyptians followed the retiring enemy and killed ten chiefs and 2,000 more men, and were still in pursuit at the last advices. The capture of all the slave depots is considered certain.

CAIRO, April 4.—The report of the Englishman sent by Rivers Wilson to inquire into the famine in Upper Egypt shows by statistics that 10,000 persons died by starvation alone in Girgeh, Kenn, and Esne. The famine, which was really a money famine, caused by over-taxation, has now terminated, but has left disastrous consequences. If similar taxation continues, another partial failure in the rise of the Nile will cause a famine worse than the last.

BOSTON, Mass., April 4.—The United States steamer, Plymouth, from this port March 15, for a cruise to the West Indies, has returned, yellow fever having broken out when 300 miles southeast of Bermuda. Egan, the boatswain, died of the disease. The ship came from the West Indies last autumn with yellow fever on board, and it was thought that fumigation and the frosts of winter here had destroyed all the germs.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., April 5.—The United States steamer, Plymouth, with yellow fever on board, is ordered into quarantine here.

BALTIMORE, Md., April 4.—Madame Bonaparte died this afternoon at a little past 1 o'clock, aged 90.

LONDON, April 3.—Reuter's Telegram Company has received a dispatch from Valparaiso, dated April 2, which says that Peru and Bolivia have concluded an offensive and defensive alliance, and both countries have declared war against Chili.

Predicting Plagues.

Numerous attempts have been made of late to show that the variations in the number of spots on the sun's face were the cause of excessive rains, poor wheat crops, commercial panics and other terrestrial occurrences. Now comes Mr. B. C. Jenkins, Fellow of the British Royal Astronomical Society, who says that cholera, black death and other plagues are the effect of planetary influences, and particularly of those of the four outer planets—Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune. He goes back for hundreds of years, asserts that all the plagues which have swept over Europe during that period can be accounted for by the movements and positions of one or more of these planets; and concludes with this ominous prediction: "I would say that within the next seven years there will happen that which has not happened for hundreds of years; all the planets at or near their nearest point to the sun about the same time. It is true of the earth that its magnetic intensity is greatest about the time when it is near the sun; the same is probably true of all the planets; therefore we may expect extraordinary magnetic phenomena during the next seven years, and great plagues, which will manifest themselves in all their intensity when Jupiter is about three years from his perihelion—that is, in 1883."

Burning a "Witch" in Russia.

Continental newspapers report that about a fortnight ago, on a Sunday, the inhabitants of the village of Vratshavo, in Russia, burned a woman, one of their neighbors, as a witch. They are said to be quite satisfied that they acted right. They kept the woman in her house, closed all the doors and windows by nailing boards across them, and then set fire to a heap of straw lying in one of the rooms. The house was soon reduced to a heap of ashes, in which was mingled the dust of the supposed witch.

POETRY.

Your Mission.

Hark, the voice of Jesus crying:
Who will go and work to-day?
Fields are white, and harvest waiting;
Who will bear the sheaves away?
Loud and long the Master calleth,
Rich reward he offers free;
Who will answer, gladly saying,
"Here am I, send me, send me?"

If you cannot cross the ocean,
And the heathen lands explore,
You can find the heathen nearer,
You can find them at your door.
If you cannot give your thousands,
You can give the widow's mite,
And the least you give for Jesus
Will be precious in his sight.

If you cannot speak like angels,
If you cannot preach like Paul,
You can tell the love of Jesus,
You can say he died for all.
If you cannot rouse the wicked
With the judgment's dreadful alarm,
You can lead the little children
To the Savior's waiting arms.

Let none hear you idly saying,
"There is nothing I can do,"
While the souls of men are dying,
And the Master calls for you.
Take the task he gives you gladly,
Let his work your pleasure be;
Answer quickly when he calleth:
"Here am I, send me, send me."

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—We have been silent long, but saw that you had plenty of MS. on hand as well as letters. Hence as our health is still delicate, and we have the additional care of a sweet little motherless baby, we thought best to be silent and listen to better talent than ours.

But what times we are living in to be sure! It is hard to hold our peace against the iniquities of the present day. The prophetic word is fast fulfilling. How terribly are the God of heaven and the mighty works of creation blasphemed, and held up to derision. We wonder at the long suffering and enduring mercy of God! But satan is loosed for a little season and must be diligent because his time is short.

We have had a lecture by Col. R. Ingersoll, which has caused much excitement; many are for and few against the unwholesome views he has given. Two noted lecturers are to follow, and speak against his errors; also some of our clergy could not keep silent, to the bitter regret of others. We did not go to hear Ingersoll, but read a synopsis of his discourse, with most parts of which we were disgusted. It is claimed for the speaker, on every hand that he has fine looks, talent and power. These then are attributes which allow blasphemy and error to be publicly held up to a Christian community; should a man of less magnitude speak such swelling words against the Most High and his mighty works, our people would soon carry him out of town on a rail, tarred and feathered. We fail to see the talent, however, in what we read of his lecture. His magnetism may hold an audience spell bound, but we do not call it power, or eloquence, for any common fool could ridicule the Bible and works of God as well. Still if he is but the progeny of the orang outang, we should expect nothing better. I should like to ask the gentleman if God could not as easily make man as a monkey? Surely it had a beginning, and, if, as affirmed, it sprung from the tadpole, a power not its own created the tadpole; but this is worse than foolishness; a child could reason better. Alas! that one who stands so high in the opinion of the people, and in knowledge of this world, should possess so weak a mind. We pity him with our whole soul, as any other whose wisdom is so vast that he cannot reverence his Creator. It is sad indeed that one of God's works so seemingly perfect, should lack so much. It seems an utter impossibility, that one endowed with even common faculties, could look upon this vast creation and deny the existence of the powers that created it. We are too charitable to believe that Mr. Ingersoll is wholly sound in mind,—some delicate part of the brain has become injured no doubt. We will hope such is the case rather than believe such a man such a monster.

Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. (Matt. xviii. 3.) We rejoice that we are of of the weak ones—a little child—not so learned as to see above and beyond our Heavenly Father. Bless God! we not only see and recognize His mighty works, but we feel his presence also, and it would take more learned men than the earth could hold to convince us to the contrary.

"Firm as a rock our faith shall stand
Whate'er our text shall be;
No living hand our barque shall strand,
Until the port we see."

Dear brethren and sisters, the clouds of superstition and atheism are looming high, false prophets and teachers are on every hand—the very elect will be deceived if not wary. But let us be firm and steadfast. Our redemption draweth nigh.

MRS. O. P. HALL.

Adrian, Mich.

Dear Father:—How lonely we feel when we cannot have meetings nor be associated with those who love the coming of our Lord. Those around us hate the subject. They cannot—they do not believe that this gospel age will end so soon. "If it must, let it end," "what do they care?" How can they feel so when the Prince of Peace is coming to bring in an administration of righteousness and glory? How can they hate God's anointed king? hate the coming of the time when all nations shall be blessed, and death, and tears, and pain shall be no more?

"Crown the Savior! angels crown him!
Rich the trophies Jesus brings!
On the throne of David place him,
While the vault of heaven rings
Crown him! crown him! crown the Savior
King of kings!"

Let the accents of sorrow and mourning be heard no more. Let the keys be turned in the mysterious locks of earth's myriad tombs. Let the sleepers come forth to wear the divine image of him who died that they might live. Let the shouts of the redeemed ones be heard when the bands of death are broken, and they are made incorruptible. Let flowers spring in the desert till it becomes like the garden of the Lord. Let the world be enlightened, let the poor be judged with equity, let the empire of Jesus extend till his commands are everywhere obeyed, till the reign of sin is destroyed, till his glory fills the earth!

O, I can not hate that glorious time; I cannot put by its heatific visions, or pray that it be destroyed. The poor are everywhere crying for relief. The famishing mourn for bread. Black death looks with staring eyes in the very face of the world—everywhere rise the tones of agony! Oh for the time when there shall be no more curse; when the husband shall be no more bereaved,—the mother mourn no more over the dead form of her first-born, nor the pitiful tears of the orphan fall over the lifeless form of an idolized father, nor a father's and mother's hearts be torn over a daughter in her prime, lying silent and cold in death's embrace.

I have seen enough of earth's sorrowful scenes in the last few months to make me long, as never before, for the change that will take place when Jesus comes. I have seen enough of suffering. Poor childhood! How painful when disease seizes the little active form, and makes it writhe in pain! Lord Jesus, come quickly, from a full heart I pray.

I want so much that those who have heard the truth should obey it. These are such perilous times. Death is cutting down his victims everywhere with such pitiless hands, that I can hardly sit still at home and be doing nothing for Jesus, when I know not on whom the blow may next fall, nor whether if, by being up and doing, I might not save one who would otherwise perish. Are there no words that might reach these delinquent ones? Will not the burning words that come from our yearning hearts—"Come, why will ye die?" Will not God's love constrain them to repent and take up the cross? "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." O, may they have the grace when Jesus comes to see without a veil his face! It will be such joy to behold that blessed face and not be afraid. And not be afraid! How much that means! how pure the heart and life must be—how clean the hands! I have thought so much about that passage for the last few days. How shall I live that I may not be afraid? What shall I do?

But I must close, for the pressing duties of every day life call me away. God bless you in your earnest efforts to make ready a bride for the coming king. Affectionately,

S. R. WINCE.

Editor Restitution:—It has been some time since I penned a line to you. It is not that I have not wished to, but other things have prevented. The word sown has grown to demand the obedience of faith for the remission of sins in the name of the Anointed One, that their faith may be accounted to them for righteousness, as was our father Abraham's. May they all continue in well doing until the coming of the Lord and be acknowledged before his Father and all the holy angels—is the prayer of your brother in the one hope of the gospel. We now number nine in this settlement, though several miles apart. We meet on the First day to keep in memory what the Master commanded us until he comes. I am doing all I can for the truth with the ability the Lord has given me. Others are reading what papers I circulate, and the books I have, in connection with that word that makes wise the simple, to see if these things are so.

Yours in hope of the promises made to the fathers in the name of Jesus the Christ. JAS. R. STEELE.

Cow Run, C.

Editor Restitution:—I wish to know what is going on, both among the brethren and the world. I verily believe events are occurring now which make it only a question of time, and a few years at most, when we shall see the King in his beauty descending to the throne of his glory. If I were able to, I would be willing to send the RESTITUTION to many. I have been and am doing business with another's capital for a share of gain or loss. It seems queer to me that those who believe the same things, and are worth farms, and retired from active life, should refuse to help keep the paper in circulation, as it has been and may yet be the means of bringing others to the knowledge of the truth.

My mother prized the paper highly, and used to write me often how she was cheered to bear her sufferings (of asthma and heart disease), for soon she would be clothed upon with immortality, and eternal life when Jesus comes. She longed to see the time when earth's inhabitants would not say, "I am sick." My prayer and desire is, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Yours, in hope,

COMMUNICATIONS.

"The One Hope."—No. 9.

In continuation of the subject of the one hope, in this number, I shall look at the orthodox hope, to see, if possible that it is a better hope than the universalist's. As the gentleman from England did not wish to s ir one man from his chosen orthodox denomination, but would cross the Atlantic to bring a man nearer to Christ, but would not countenance the conference if it mingled in with the rash predictions of annihilation or universalism in any form, he must have thought that to get one out of the false belief of the present mortal state of man into the sound belief of all orthodox denominations, was to turn him from the errors of his ways and save a soul from death, or, better expressed, from the death that never dies.

It is plain to me that the orthodox, so called, cannot believe as they do and yet have any just claim to the one hope of our calling; for as with all all others, so it is with them; their faith generates their hope and is with them the conviction of things not seen but hoped for until hope shall cease by faith's being swallowed up in fruition and the things hoped for shall be realized as a positive possession. What is the so called orthodox faith on the subject of death? It is, as I heard an orthodox clergyman express it, that nothing dies; that what seems to us to be death is better expressed by the term "moving out," or the soul leaving the body and going in a conscious state to heaven or paradise. Why do they believe this? From the fact that they have before believed in a doctrine which compels them to believe as they do concerning the state of the dead, and that doctrine cannot be reconciled with the state of death in any way on the literal principle.

Hence, the words of Paul to Timothy are fulfilled in these days which are, "As Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these (whom he is describing) resist the truth," etc. Can the truth of death be more successfully resisted than to affirm that nothing dies, and what appears to be death is rat ier a moving out. Now, if these things are true and not exaggerated, they are awful truths and one can well afford to be candid while treating them; but they are true as lamentable as is the fact, and as truly as such things should not be told in Gath.

I was present in a popular congregation at home in Albion (to my shame I say it) and heard a clergyman say, lifting up his right arm at full length, "That is not my arm that you see there." I ask in all soberness, whose arm was it? for he it was who held it up but denied that it was his. Do you not see that a man must be laboring under a delusion to honestly say so? Why! he could deny his own existence or anything that his creed called upon him to do just as well on the same principle. Says one, "You have intimated that you thought such men made such statements with an honest heart; is that your belief?" Most surely I believe that, and I also believe that in doing it the words of Isaiah are fulfilled that saith, "They shall speak words of falsehood from the heart." Somebody will fulfill this and to speak an untruth from the heart cannot be done by one dishonestly, but he may believe a falsehood ever so firmly and yet it is a falsehood.

I once heard an orthodox clergyman when praying over a dead man at a funeral, quote John xi. 25, 26, and comment upon it in his prayer to God, as though God did not understand it; he did this in a most solemn manner, and his arms which were extended upon the desk shook and his voice became tremulous as he said "they have lived and therefore are not dead," but Christ said in the text he had just quoted "though he were dead" at the time that Martha had made the translation of the subject, i. e., the resurrection or last day. He continued his comments in verse 26 as follows: "We live and therefore shall not die." Now, was he not honest? I say he was, but his honesty did not make his contradiction of the truth by his comments true. No! that was a word of falsehood spoken from the heart and done so gravely that if it were possible it would deceive the very elect. No doubt the people who listened thought that a good orthodox prayer, but I looked at it, in their minds, from a more heterodox standpoint, but in my own mind from the standpoint from which God does and will look upon it at the judgment. An awful thought, indeed, to go to the judgment all covered with the slime of deception; but if that is not the fate of the masses of professedly religious people, how can the Savior's words be true when he said "Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works?" But he says, "Then will I say unto them, I never knew you, depart from me all ye workers of iniquity." A solemn time it will be for those not possessed of the one hope of our calling. Oh! that all might see and take warning now.

C. F. SWEET.

"A Kingdom of all Ages."

The kingdom is an everlasting kingdom. Psalm cxlv. 13. Marginal reading—"A kingdom of all ages."

When the earth and man were created, God set apart a portion of the earth, a specific locality, specially prepared, as sacred, and probably a specific part of that as specially sacred, a sanctum sanctorum, or most holy place. Adam was placed there as the head of creation, the governor and ruler of the world, with the means within his reach of living forever. But he transgressed and continued of the "earth, earthy," unfitted for his high destiny, and was driven out of the most holy place, or out of the sacred territory.

After the flood of waters, probably Shem, the Melchisedek of the Scripture, reigned on that sacred locality, Salem, or, as now called, Jeru-Salem. Then Abraham was called out to walk through it from the Euphrates to the river of Egypt, the old boundary of the Eden of Adam, and that land was given him and his seed for an everlasting possession.

Here Jacob saw communication restored between the heavenly and the earthly—the angels ascending and descending.

It was here that David reigned, and Jesus was born and died; and the multitude of angels sang "Glory to God," etc. Where Father Jacob saw them at Bethel, or Bethlehem. From this sacred place Jesus ascended on high, and to this sacred locality Jesus will come again, in the glory of his Father and all his holy angels.

But this locality is defiled with evil men and things. How is it to be cleansed? "He shall send forth his angels and gather out of his kingdom all things that offend," etc. Here the glory of the Lord is to shine upon it. "For darkness shall cover the earth, but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee."

Here is where the net shall be drawn, for he shall gather all nations before him and separate them. When he shall say to the righteous, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world." G. BOARDMAN.

The Christian's Hope.

In the land of the holy, the realm of bliss, where the foot-fall of the loving angels presses the sward of the ever-green shore, and the innumerable company of holy ones shouts anthems of praise to him who ruleth in righteousness, wisdom and power, just over the threshold in another age or cycle of the world's era, when the King in his beauty shall plant his kingdom in the orient and whisper to the scattered ones that are afar off; when he shall again raise his standard for the nations, and gather his chosen ones into his garner; when the river of life shall ripple from beneath the throne of God, and life's towering trees yield their fruits for the joy of the multitude; when heartache, and sorrow shall return no more to cause human woe, and the earth shines again in its Eden loveliness; when the curse shall be lifted and borne away; when the weeping eye shall weep no more; when the blessed Jesus shall rule in the kingdom of men as King of kings and Lord of lords; when the fir and the pine, the walnut and oak shall clothe themselves in gorgeous attire, and the Rose of Sharon and the lily of the vale yield their beauty and perfume on the zephyrs of a world freed from the stain and the blighting, withering influence of sin; when the teeming millions of the east shall unite with the legions of the setting sun in praise and adoration, and the bands of one common brotherhood; when the joy of the Lord shall cover the world; when the priests of God shall officiate from the Holy City to the ends of the earth; when the praises of Jehovah shall resound in the northland, covered with its mantle of purity, the beautiful snow, and be echoed from the tropics and everglades of the south; when the heart of the wild beast shall be tamed, and the lion and the lamb nestle in one bed; when the serpent's sting shall no longer discharge the malignant virus; when we shall plant vineyards and gather the vintage; when we shall build and inherit; when we shall cast our seed with joy and gather our harvests in delight;

When the rolling sun shall mount on high
And beam from his zenith down,
And the God of heaven shall leave the sky
To give the earth a crown;
Then shall the Christian's hope be given.
And the pure ones, washed and clean,
Be kings and priests at the court of heaven,
In heaven's vesture seen.

Dear brethren of the glorious hope, does the love of a holy Savior, the blood of the slain Lamb, the righteousness of the King of kings, actuate us to move forward and work for the revelation of that glorious time, that holy age. Do our cheeks tingle with shame over the sins of the world and the depravity of man? Truly they must and our hearts agonize over the fact that not only individuals, but nations and fallen angels, are in battle array against the ushering in of that glorious day. Then up and to the rescue! It is glorious to lend a helping hand in this grand crisis on the side of right, justice, humanity and God. Let scoffers mock! Ours is the glorious hope, and great will be the blessing and comfort of that golden shore.

"Onward Christian, onward!
World's are charging to the shock."

Curious Predictions.

The following was copied by me from a newspaper in 1865:—

"In 1853 a pamphlet was published in Germany purporting to be a series of prophecies made by one, Madamoiselle Lenormand, in whose predictions the first Napoleon placed great reliance. They were—

"1. That in 1853 a war would break out between England and France on the one part, and Russia on the other.

"2. That when peace was declared, a war would follow between England and India.

"3. That a great emigration would then take place from Germany to the United States.

"4. That a civil war would rage four years in the United States, to be succeeded by an era of remarkable prosperity.

"5. That after its close a fearful sickness, commencing in Russia, would extend across the Baltic, desolate Germany, and cause immense mortality in England, and thence spread to the east and west."

So far all has come true, and the unfulfilled seems hastening.

The Champion Oldest Married Couple.

Zalmon Sturges, aged nearly 98, and Ann, his wife, in her 94th year, live in Weston, about four miles north of Westport, in an old-fashioned house built before the Revolution. They are the oldest married couple in Connecticut, and probably in the United States. The seventy-fifth anniversary of their marriage will occur a year hence, and their friends propose that they shall celebrate this very rare event. The old couple formerly lived in this section, and ran the old mill on Yellow Mill Bridge. They now live near what is known as "Eleven O'Clock Highway," which is one of a number of similar roads in that section running northward from the sound, and laid out by the earliest settlers, when clocks were scarce, as a time guide for men working in the fields, enabling them to note by the sun shadows the approach of the dinner hour. Everything about the house indicates its extreme age.

POETRY.

"Behold He Cometh."

Time's sun is fast setting,
Its twilight is nigh,
Its evening is falling
In cloud o'er the sky;
Its shadows are stretching
In ominous gloom;
Its midnight approaches—
The midnight of doom:
Then haste, sinner, haste, there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, lingerer, flee!

Rides forth the fierce tempest
On the wing of the cloud;
The moan of the night-blast
Is fitful and loud;
The mountains are heaving,
The forests are bow'd,
The ocean is surging,
Earth gathers its shroud;
Then haste, sinner, haste, there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, lingerer, flee!

The vision is nearing—
The Judge and the throne!—
The voice of the angel
Proclaims "It is done."
On the wheel of the tempest
His flasher shall come,
And the blaze of his glory
Flashes out from its gloom:
Then haste, sinner, haste, there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, lingerer, flee!

With clouds he is coming!
His people shall rise;
With gladness they hail him;
Redeemer and King.
The fruit-real wedding,
The rest of his tree,
He cometh to kindle
Earth's last fatal fire!
Then haste, sinner, haste, there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, lingerer, flee!

Review of "The Two Covenants, by J. N. A."—No. 2.

"The first covenant was made with the people of Israel at the time of their departure out of Egypt. This covenant no longer exists."

In my former review I established by the testimony of Moses, the mediator of that first covenant, that it was not a proposition that God submitted to the house of Israel through Moses, (Ex. xix. 5), but it is the will of God declared by his voice, and it was even ten words the voice commanded them to perform; and furthermore, God wrote them upon two tables of stone—Deut. iv. 13.

Is not that plain testimony of the witness Moses? And no prophet, Jesus or apostle, ever speaks of anything else as being the first covenant. Why should J. N. A.?

Let us compare Moses with Paul. Moses testifies: "The Lord hath declared unto you his covenant which he commanded you to perform," or keep—Deut. iv. 13. And Paul, speaking of the same covenant, calls it "the first covenant." Heb. ix. 1. And in Heb. ix. 20, "testament (or will) which God hath enjoined unto you." Moses says "commanded" and "declared;" Paul uses "enjoined," and "made,"—created. James Jones has made his will or testament. And God made his will known to Israel at Sinai; he declared it; he commanded it; and he solemnly enjoined it!

What was it he made, etc.? His will, testament, or first covenant! So reads the Bible. And if James Jones makes his will, and has it written out and recorded, as his last will and testament; and he does the declaring and commanding, and also the enjoining; and without consulting his wife, "If she will obey his voice indeed and keep his covenant," why is all the power of making a will vested in the man (husband)? So it may be his will, and his alone. But God, before he declares his will or covenant to his wife, or Israel, by the hand of Moses, sends a message to her, thus—recounting things done for her espousal—then "Now if ye will obey my voice, indeed, and keep my covenant then"—and she consents to the Lord's proposal, hence three days after his voice declares it to them his own finger writes it upon two tables of stone.

Yes, that sounds very well, but how does it accord with the facts of the case before us? Perfectly harmonious; for if Ex. xix. 5, was any part or parcel of the first covenant, it would have been written upon those two tables of stone, with the finger of God. But unfortunately for J. N. A.'s theory, the "if," the "obey," and the "keep," all pointed to the future, "declaring" that "covenant," by that "voice" they had pledged themselves to "obey," and that "voice declared that first covenant" which they had agreed to "keep," hence the voice commanded them to perform "even ten words." And hence those two tables of stone containing "even ten words, and the Lord added no more," all his servants call those ten words the first covenant; and not one place in the Scriptures are those ten words or first covenant ever denominated the moral law. Yet in all the Seventh Day Advent church publications, as far as I have been able to ascertain, that first covenant, or ten words, is called the "the moral law of God." They have the same right, and with the same consistency, to claim the covenant that God made when he placed his bow in the cloud, or the covenant he made with Abraham, or the covenant with David as "three moral laws," as to call the first covenant God made with the house of Israel at Sinai the moral law.

The wills or testaments of men, when confirmed, are not to be changed—"no man disannulleth or addeth thereto." So, likewise, God's will should not be disannulled or added thereto. And we often notice in man's will certain commands to be obeyed by the wife, and also certain lands or parcels of lands are carefully described in it. So we find in God's will so carefully described by Moses, the mediator of that covenant, and it is also written upon two tables of stone, and placed in the ark of that covenant under the mercy seat, in the most holy of all. And it has commands to be obeyed; and in the fifth word, "the land which the Lord thy God (husband and father) giveth thee." God had covenanted with Abraham 430 years before this first covenant made with his fleshly seed-ants, that "unto thee and thy seed will I give all this land. Hence in God's covenant with his seed—Paul's "brethren, his kinsmen according to the flesh who are Israelites," and with whom the covenants are to be made, he alludes to the land in that covenant. And we find that it is called a land flowing with milk and honey; a goodly land; the land God promised to Abraham for a possession. Hence the first covenant had for its object the land of Canaan, and each word of that covenant required obedience and keeping for Israel. Therefore, because the children of Israel transgressed every word of that covenant, and went after Baal and other gods, until God in his displeasure drove them out of that land he had given them for a possession, and divided among them, for many days they have been "without a king." See Hosea iii. 4, 5.

Yet they are to return. Where? To Zion. What for? "To seek the Lord their God." And God has made no other covenant with them, and will not until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. See Rom. xi. 25. "And there shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall take away their sins." Rom. xi. 26, 27. And they are under the first or old covenant until that time shall come.

Paul says: "For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins;" and "he hath made the first old . . . . ready to vanish away."

But what has the first or old covenant and the new covenant to do with the Gentiles? I say, nothing. Why? Because they are not made with us. We are never included under the first, and when the new one shall have been made "with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah," we, the Gentiles, will not be included. Never! "For this is my covenant with them, when I shall take away their sins," etc.

In my next I shall notice another proposition of J. N. A. in the Signs of the Times of Feb. 13—the ten commandments do not constitute the covenant of Ex. xxiv. 8. I claim they do.

I remain yours for the truth.

What Ought We to Preach at our Conferences?

This is a question of considerable importance, for at these meetings we expect large congregations. After we go to the trouble of advertising for the meeting, and making preparations for the accommodation of all who may come, what would be the most profitable to preach to these mixed congregations? I will state what course I think would be best. We generally meet on Friday evening for preaching, when, as a general thing, there are not many that gather to hear the word spoken; but on Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night, there is generally a goodly number comes out to hear. Now, what would be the most profitable to preach to the people at these meetings?

There are so many Bible subjects to choose from, that perhaps we might say—any Bible subject would do—it makes no difference what one we take. Let us stop and consider for a moment to see whether there is a Bible answer to this question or not. When our Lord gave commandment for the Apostles to go and preach he said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Here then we find that the gospel is the subject made choice of in preference to anything else. And why? Because in it is contained the power of God for the conversion and salvation of sinners; and, still further, the righteousness of God is made known to the people through the gospel; hence, we can see the importance of presenting this subject in as clear a light as possible, so that people may believe and obey it, and be saved. All other subjects ought to be laid aside at these meetings, and the gospel ought to be preached as Christ and his apostles taught it to the people. Every other subject was laid aside by them and their attention was given to preaching the gospel alone. I have, sometimes, been very much surprised at conferences, when the house would be crowded to the utmost, that some brother would spend from one to two hours in presenting some wild theory of his own, or hobby, if you please to call it so, something like this—"The wicked dead will never be raised from the dead;" and then, to make it worse, some one will surely have to follow him, to knock it all to pieces, as he supposes, and tell the people that they will all be raised and judged—justified or condemned—and so on.

Another will say except you meet every first-day of the week you cannot be saved; and then some one will undertake to show that he is surely mistaken about this matter. Then again, some one will give a good lecture on the signs of the times, giving dates running out in '75 or '80 as the case may be, and then tell the people he is no time-setter, and that he does not believe in the time at all. But there are his figures terminating at these dates. Then some one will have to give us a long lecture on the two witnesses, who they are, while, perhaps, no two exactly agree on these subjects. So, better let them alone at these meetings. When there is a full house to talk to let them alone, and present them to the brethren when assembled, and not to a mixed congregation. We have our heads full of doctrine, and it would, perhaps, be good to talk a little more on the subject of what we should do, and not quite so much on what we should believe. We should endeavor to impress on the minds of our hearers what they must believe and do to get into Christ. Here I believe that we can say we are at unity; but on all these subjects we are not. It would then be better to let them alone, and not let the people know we are divided on these subjects, and thereby dogmas good by acting in concert with each other.

With good feelings toward all, and a desire for the triumph of the truth as it is in Jesus, I remain your brother in Christ Jesus. J. S. ARNOLD.

SELECTIONS.

[Rev M. Baxter in Christian Herald.]

Our Earth in the Millennium.

We have already considered, in last week's article, 1, the future Millennial earth's physical condition; and now we proceed to consider it, 2. Politically and socially. 3. Religiously. 4. As respects the Jewish nation.

2. As respects the political and social condition of mankind. One Man will be King over the whole earth, even Jesus of Nazareth, the God-man; and His kingdom, like the four preceding universal kingdoms of Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome, will be a literal, visible, and earthly kingdom (Dan. ii., vii. 11; Zech. xiv. 9) over all people, nations, and languages (Dan. vii. 14), a phrase which exclusively denotes nations as they at present exist in the flesh (Dan. iii. 4; iv. 1; vi. 25).

And although Christ will from time to time manifest Himself personally in the terrestrial Jerusalem, the earth's metropolis and seat of government, yet His principal residence, together with His glorified saints, will be in the celestial Jerusalem, the metropolis of the universe, a city of pure gold like unto clear glass, and 1500 miles in length, breadth, and height (Rev. xxi. 10), which comes down into the air so as to be visible to the nations of the earth (Rev. xxi. 24), but is nowhere stated to come on to the earth; indeed, it would be quite incongruous for a perfectly square structure to be poised upon a globe only five times greater (24,000 miles) in circumference.

The glorified saints associated with Jesus, as subordinate kings in the government of this world (Rev. xx. 6; Luke xix. 17), will constantly pass up and down between the heavenly city and this planet, thus realizing the prophetic vision of Jacob's ladder (Gen. xxviii. 12; John i. 51). It is a question whether they will reign visibly over the unglorified inhabitants of the earth, or invisibly (occasionally, however, manifesting their presence), like the angels which at present have mankind intrusted to their charge and ministry (Heb. i. 14; ii. 5; Psalm xxxiv. 7), and who wear the titles of the kingdoms of this world (Dan. x. 13, 20).

It appears that the nations will retain their distinctive customs and languages (unless Zephaniah iii. 9 signifies that there will be only one language), but will probably all have the same laws, currency, and standards of measurement, by which their mutual commercial dealings may be facilitated. The earth's inhabitants will engage in agricultural, mechanical, scientific, and mercantile occupations, and follow the legal, clerical, and literary professions, just as in these days.*

But the military profession will be forgotten. Peace will prevail universally (Isaiah ii. 4; Hosea ii. 18; Psalm xlvi. 9). No standing armies or warlike navies will be maintained. Bayonets and rifled cannon will be regarded as the relics of a bygone age of darkness and barbarism. There will be no despotism, tyranny, or oppression. Cases of crime will be very rare. The whole earth will probably be covered with a network of railways and telegraphs, and the surface of the ocean unceasingly traversed by innumerable vessels, maintaining constant intercourse among all the communities of the globe.

England and North America, released in common with the rest of the world from the dominancy of the personal Antichrist, will doubtless occupy the foremost position, next to Israel, among the regenerated nations. The Millennial state of the earth is strikingly illustrated by the scene of Christ's transfiguration, which was a miniature picture of it, and therefore a prophetic vision of the Son of man coming in His kingdom (Matt. xvi. 28; 2 Peter i. 16). The six days (Matt. xvii. 1) typified the 6000 years after which the Millennium commences, and Peter, James, and John represented the unglorified inhabitants of the millennial earth, over whom the glorified raised and translated saints, represented by Moses and Elias, will reign conjointly with Christ.

3. As regards the religious condition of mankind. Instead of three fourths of the human race being in heathen darkness as at present, all persons will then be acquainted with the doctrines of Christianity, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea (Is. xi. 9; Heb. ii. 10); and Christ will have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth (Zech. ix. 10; Ps. lxxii. 8), for all nations shall come and worship before Him (Rev. xv. 4; xi. 15, xx. Ps. lxxxvi. 9; lxvi. 11; Dan. ii. 7).

Although men will be free from the deceiving influence of Satan (Rev. xx. 3), yet they will have the same naturally sinful hearts as now, and this will necessitate the continuance of the means of grace and the preaching of the gospel, which, however, will be accompanied by a much greater outpouring of the Holy Spirit than in these days (Is. xxxii. 15). Open wickedness, such as drunkenness, Sabbath-breaking, gambling, lying, dishonesty, cruelty, impure conduct or conversation, will be promptly punished whenever it occurs, and almost entirely repressed; but there will be some unregenerate persons among the nations (Zech. xiv. 19).

Probably not more than ten millions out of the thirteen hundred millions now upon the earth are truly converted or born again, but then the proportion of the converted to the unconverted will perhaps be nearly the reverse of this, so that if the earth's population is only as large as it now is (and it might, and perhaps will, be 150 times greater), there will be more adult persons saved in one generation than in all the past 200 generations (without referring to those that die in infancy). There may also be a further addition to the Bible for the Millennial dispensation, just as there was an addition to it for the Christian dispensation.

4. As regards the Jewish nation. After the battle of Armageddon, all the surviving Jews throughout the earth will be converted and restored to Palestine, being brought as an offering unto the Lord out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules (Is. lxvi. 20; see also Is. xi. 60; Jer. iii. 31, 33; Zech. viii. to xiv. Ezek. xxxiv. to xlviii. Rom. xi. etc.).

It seems that the ships of the maritime power called Tarshish (probably the United States or England, or both) will likewise assist in this work (Is. lx. 9). (It appears that they will, perhaps, have also assisted in the partial restoration under Antichrist seven years previously, Is. xviii.)

Only one-third of the Jews that were living in Palestine at the commencement of Antichrist's persecution will be surviving when the Millennium begins (Zech. xiii. 9), and those of them who are in Jerusalem when Christ descends on Mount Olivet will look upon Him whom they have pierced (Zech. xii. 10; Matt. xxiii. 39), and will immediately repent and become converted through the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, as typified by the miraculous conversion of the Apostle Paul (1 Tim. i. 16). The Jews will then possess the land from the Nile to the Euphrates, which, although promised to them (Gen. xv. 18), they have never yet obtained.

Jerusalem will be the metropolis of the earth, and will be 18,000 measures, or thirty-six miles, in circumference, and nine miles square (Ezek. xlviii. 35), each measure being six cubits (Ezek. xl. 5), and the cubit of the sanctuary being twenty-one inches. Within it (if not throughout all Palestine) there will never be any weeping or crying (Is. lxv. 19), and the inhabitant shall not say I am sick (Is. xxxiii. 24), for the very leaves of its trees will furnish an elixir vitæ and a medicinal panacea for human maladies (Ezek. xlvii. 12).

All the Jews will be truly converted (Is. liv. 13; lx. 21; Jer. xxxi. 34), and will mostly live to the age of several centuries, being only children when a hundred years old, and rivaling in longevity and trees of the forest (Is. lxv. 20, 22). They will be the chief of the nations of the regenerated earth. The Holy Land will become like the Garden of Eden (Ezek. xxxvi. 35; Is. vii. 21, 22; xxx. 23), and will be divided afresh among the twelve tribes (Ezek. 48), who will be governed by the twelve Apostles (Luke xxii. 30). Over Mount Zion will be a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night (Is. iv. 5).

The Jewish Temple will be rebuilt according to the pattern given in the last nine chapters of Ezekiel, which also prescribe the order of the future sacrifices and other rites; for Israel, though Christianized, will still observe the peculiar ceremonies of Judaism, not as expiatory or prospectively as a shadow of things to come, but as eucharistic, and retrospectively as a sacramental commemoration of the past offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

All the nations (or at least large delegations from each nation) will make pilgrimages to Jerusalem every year to keep the feast of Tabernacles, or else no rain will descend upon them (Zech. xiv. 16), and such an unprecedented amount of traveling clearly implies an extraordinary abundance at that time of facilities for locomotion, such as railways and steam-vessels.

The Dead Sea will also be completely purified by a river that will be caused to flow into it from Jerusalem (Ezek. xlvii. 8, 10). There will most probably be a channel opened for the passage of vessels between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea, by which Jerusalem will be placed upon the highway of commerce between the Atlantic and the Indian Ocean. This will be the state of things during the 1000 years of the Millennium.

*Although the business of the world will be carried on during the Millennium in somewhat the same manner as at present, yet it is vain for persons to think of retaining their possessions during the Great Tribulation of three years and a half, or to make any preparations in expectation of remaining on the earth after the Second Advent and during the Millennium. All converted persons will shortly be removed from the earth in the two translations and a few of the unconverted who are left behind will be afterward spared and converted, and will constitute the earth's population when the Millennium begins. It is clearly the duty of those who are true Christians, and who are therefore sure to be caught up in one of the two translations, to spend as much of their remaining time and property as they can in preaching the Gospel and circulating Bibles and religious books as widely as possible, before the approaching universal Antichristian persecution puts a stop to such efforts. The nearness of the end justifies Christians in relinquishing secular occupations if they can do so without serious inconvenience to themselves or society, and devoting themselves exclusively to striving to enlighten the multitudes that are perishing for lack of knowledge.

BREVITIES.

During 1873 the American and English societies distributed 3,850,370 Bibles, viz: in Russia, 740,823 in 60 languages; in Turkey, 64,503 in 9 languages; India, 343,616; China, 150,103; Japan, 61,593; Italy, 52,823; France, 133,160; Servia and Roumania, 128,170; Spain, 68,303; Austria, 374,362; Germany, 468,103; South America, 35,348; Mexico, 30,000.

The number of dissidents in Russia has greatly increased of late years, and the "old believers," though not recognized by the state, have obtained a regular hierarchical organization. Altogether the dissidents form about a sixth part of the total population; some of the more fanatical of the sects practice religious rites which are opposed to the laws of the empire; but they do not form a political opposition such as that of the clericals in Germany and other countries.

The progress of the excavations for the underground drainage at Lincoln, in England, is continually laying bare fresh traces of the Roman occupation. A portion of a very fine mosaic pavement of a guilloche pattern, together with rich wall frescoes, paving tiles, and other traces of a sumptuous Roman residence, has been discovered just outside the Exchange gate, to the west of the cathedral. These remains are within a short distance of the hypocaust found beneath the percentory in 1739, and belong, perhaps, to the same mansion.

THE BIGGEST BRIDGE IN EUROPE.

The largest bridge in Europe will be completed next year. It will cross the Volga in the Government of Samara, Russia, on the Siberian Railroad line. The Volga, at the point of the bridge, is about four miles wide in the spring season, and in autumn 4,732 feet. The bridge will be supported by twelve piers eighty-five feet high, with ice cutters thirty-five feet high, at a distance of 364 feet. The ice cutters are covered with granite. The iron work is from Belgium. A temporary colony is established for workmen employed on the bridge; it occupies about forty-five acres, and has sixty buildings, insured at 100,000 rubles. Two thousand men are employed, and among them are 100 Italian masons. Three steamers and seventy barks are constantly used for forwarding wood, stone, iron and other materials. The bridge will cost 4,630,000 rubles, or $3,500,000.

At the beginning of the present century the Porte allowed no more than three hundred of the hated Jews to live within the holy city. Forty years later that restriction was removed, but another still remained, by virtue of which they were permitted to reside only in a particular quarter of the town, which was much too small for them. It is about ten years since this last regulation was abolished, and since then the progress made by the Jews in peopling their ancient capital has been extraordinary. Almost every one of the old houses, as it fell vacant, has been bought up by them, while they have built a prodigious number of new ones in all parts of the town. Schools, hospitals and religious associations have been started on a grand scale; and the Jewish population, which eighty years ago was barely 300, was in 1875 no less than 13,000 in Jerusalem alone. Nor have the immigrants neglected to provide for the material improvement of the country. Besides numerous other examples which might be quoted, a school of agriculture has been founded and endowed by a rich Jew of Venice with several thousand pounds.

A correspondent asks which are the largest three libraries in the world, and which the largest three in this country. By far the largest in the world is the National Library at Paris, which in 1874 contained 2,000,000 printed books and 150,000 manuscripts. Which the next largest is, it is difficult to say, for the British Museum and the Imperial Library of St. Petersburgh both had in 1874 1,100,000 volumes. After them comes the Royal Library of Munich with its 900,000 books. The Vatican Library at Rome is sometimes erroneously supposed to be among the largest, while in point of fact it is surpassed, so far as the number of volumes goes, by more than sixty European collections. It contains 105,000 printed books, and 25,000 manuscripts. The National Library at Paris is one of the very oldest in Europe, having been founded in 1350, while the British Museum dates from 1753, or a time more than four hundred years later. In the United States the largest is the Library of Congress at Washington, which in 1874 contained 261,000 volumes. The Boston Public followed very closely after it with 260,500 volumes, and the Harvard University collection came next with 200,000. The Astor and Mercantile, of New York, are next, each having 148,000. Among the colleges after Harvard's Library comes Yale's with 100,000. Dartmouth's is next with 50,000, and then came in order Cornell with 30,000; the University of Virginia with 36,000; Bowdoin with 35,000; the University of South Carolina with 30,000; Ann Arbor, 30,000; Amherst, 20,000; Princeton, 28,000; Wesleyan, 25,500; and Columbia, 25,000.

The Philippi mentioned in the New Testament was a city of Macedonia, and not far from the borders of Thrace. It was built by Philip, the father of Alexander the Great; and thence its name. It was the first locality in Europe where the gospel was preached; and the occasion of its being thus distinguished was the appearance of a vision to the Apostle Paul, in the night. "There stood a man of Macedonia and prayed him, saying, Come over and help us." He was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision, but straightway went to Philippi and abode there certain days, and preached the glorious gospel of the blessed God with marked success. This was the place where Lydia was converted, the Lord gently opening her heart to receive the word, as the sun opens a flower in the spring; and where the stern jailor was converted, his stout heart capitulating to the power of divine truth and grace as capitulates a strong fortress which is taken by storm. Philippi is further memorable from the fact that it was here that two great battles were fought between the Romans, in one of which Octavius Augustus vanquished Brutus and Cassius, destroyed the Republican party, and decided the fate of the Roman empire. A Christian church, moreover, was established here—a fact of more interest and importance than any battle—which church by its spirituality and benevolence was of great comfort to Paul, and to which, during his residence at Rome he addressed an excellent epistle—The Epistle to the Philippians.

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the Immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and baptism as a prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Questions Answered---A Church Without Elders, or Elders Without a Church?

A. B. MACRIDER.

Some brethren in California write to enquire for fuller information as to the questions above propounded. They ask:

1. "Whose duty or privilege is it to attend to the Lord's table? Some think it requires an officer in the church, others hold that any orderly Christian may do so.

2. "There is a desire among us—about twenty-five in number, and mostly young—to have elders and deacons chosen and set apart to these offices. Some think hands should be laid upon them and that these things are necessary before this body can rightfully be called the Church of God.

3. "There are different views about the weekly contribution. Some think that gifts dropped into a box may be made for show."

It is added, "These things may all have been before other brethren till they are satisfied, but not so with us. We have seen your pieces in THE RESTITUTION and would be pleased to have something from you in THE RESTITUTION on the above subjects. We want advice how to proceed, and, as some think we have not persons who fill the Scripture requirements, we ask:

4. "Can a church exist without elders?"

5. "Did churches exist in early times without elders? If so, how long?"

Always willing to impart any knowledge I may have gained from the word of God—the only source of truth on the subjects proposed—let us follow the example and borrow the words of the Great Teacher sent from God: "What saith the Scripture? How readest thou?"

1. In reply to the first interrogatory above. It is written in Acts viii. 1: "At that time there was a great persecution against the church at Jerusalem and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles;" and in verse 4: "Therefore they that were scattered went everywhere preaching the word."

From this it seems that every disciple (not the apostles only) was at liberty, and felt himself in duty bound to "preach the word wherever he went," (or "was scattered abroad,") and such was their practice. Now, we reason logically that, if every Christian may preach the word, every Christian (not an officer, we perceive,) may likewise do any other act to make the preaching effectual to man's salvation, viz.: To teach and instruct, to baptize, to pray, to praise God and to break bread to and with God's people for their edification and comfort. Can any man say nay to this conclusion?

But to make this even plainer. If to preach Christ, as it appears those scattered abroad did, was the mission of every Christian disciple in primitive times, was not to baptize those who were taught and accepted the gospel (teaching a necessary consequence? And should the teacher stop there and not instruct or lead the newly made Christian to the Lord's table?

Does not the greater duty include the less? The command given to the original twelve disciples in Matt. xxviii. 20, was to teach the baptized to observe (practice) all things I have commanded you. Where, then, do we get the doubt of the lawful authority of every disciple to preach the word, to baptize, to teach the new converts and all other disciples to eat at the Lord's table and to help such to do so, seeing it is one of the "all things" they were to observe? No such doubt comes from the Bible, surely.

Further, who baptized Paul of Tarsus? The answer comes to us from Acts ix. 10, "A certain disciple (of no official rank or title) at Damascus named Ananias."

In these premises found in the word of truth, I answer, then, "any orderly Christian" may dispense the communion at the Lord's table, with entire propriety.

2. To this question, Paul's letters to Timothy and Titus seem to furnish a satisfactory answer. See also 1 Peter v. The wisdom of having elders and deacons in every congregation is properly argued from Bible premises. St. Paul inscribes his epistle to the Philippians—which was probably the best ordered of all the primitive churches—thus: "To the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons." Thus we learn the primitive custom was, to have in each church or congregation, bishops or elders and deacons, and that the apostles recognized in the church a plurality of bishops, while their modern "successors," so-called, the clergy of the day—appoint one bishop to many churches.

There were both bishops and deacons in Philippi, for, doubtless, they had, in their number, the proper materials for selection, and where such can be found in any church, they should be chosen and appointed by the brethren for the work. These qualifications are pointed out by Paul in his letters to the churches in 1 Tim. iii., and Titus i. But it must often happen, especially in a church composed of young disciples, that these qualifications are not at once to be found. In that case, we must, like the woman whom the Master commanded, "Do what we can," the best we can under the circumstances of the case, and appoint the best men we have, that, thus we may "Do everything decently and in order."

3. As to the laying on of hands in respect to those selected for office, it does not seem that the practice was extended beyond the apostolic age—the power of conferring special spiritual gifts thereby, was, it seems, possessed and exercised by the apostles only, and possibly, as in the case of Timothy, and others, in the early age of the church. This, we learn from Acts viii. 14-24. The apostles, Peter and John, were sent from Jerusalem to Samaria in order to impart to the Samaritan converts the gifts of the spirit by the laying on of their hands, and this they had done previously—Acts vii 6—in the choice of deacons at Jerusalem. We have no record of any other than the apostles exercising this power.

It is true that Titus was left in Crete "to set in order the things wanting and to ordain elders in every city." Chap. i. 5. But nothing is said here of the imposition of hands as any part of the process.

I do not see any objection, when desired by the members, to the brethren, collectively, or one for all, designating the choice of the body for these officers by the stretching forth or imposition of hands. But, to say, that, unless this is done, the body of disciples "cannot be called the church of God," is (I give my judgment) a clear mistake, for the church must come into being—must exist before it can be organized and have officers. Both Timothy and Titus were sent to minister to churches already in being.

4. As to the weekly contribution, we are not taught any special method of contributing. In that case, considerations of expediency must govern with entire toleration of differing opinions. Acts ii. 42; 1 Cor. xvi. 1; Rom. xiv. 1-5; Ibid. xv. 1-6.

Thus the unity of the spirit is preserved in the bonds of peace. Questions 4 and 5 are answered in what has already been submitted.

Grace, mercy and peace to all the brethren.

Faith, Hope and Charity Abides.

And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity. 1 Cor. xiii. 13.

Contrasted with, "but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues they shall cease; whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away." Verse 8. Thus far the case is plainly stated, and we all agree, that the three supernatural prerogatives have "failed," "ceased" and vanished away, while the three natural qualifications, faith, hope and charity abide, remain, not "failed," not "ceased," not "vanished away." Now, it seems that a proper solution of one question ought to forever settle this controversy: The reason why the prophecies, or rather the prophets or the prerogative to prophecy, and the power to speak in the unlearned languages, and the unstudied supernatural knowledge has "failed," "ceased," "vanished away." There can be but two reasons assigned for this:

1. The apostasy; men abandoned the faith, and God withdrew his spirit.

2. They, having accomplished their mission, run out, failed and ceased by limitation.

Now, the first position cannot be true, as it contradicts the stated facts in the premises. That, while there has been a fearful falling away, a general departure from the faith, yet the divine system was not entirely subverted, as the apostle affirms that faith, hope and charity abides, remains. In other words, when those spirit manifestations have ceased, men and women still exercise faith in the gospel, God's plan of salvation, are still the creatures of hope, having the crowning qualification of charity which never fails. But, says one, this partitive knowledge, power to prophesy, speaking the word of life to the understanding of strangers, supernatural, or unstudied knowledge, etc., were only to be done away, when that which is perfect is come. Verse 10. Very well. Now, what time is referred to? If you say the future and final perfection at the coming of our Lord, then you have two positions, unless the coming of the Lord and the apostasy are identical. Now, if those things have passed away, then that perfect thing has come. And that they have ceased and vanished away is the only logical deduction from the premise, while faith, hope and charity abides, remains; has not passed away. The apostle is not speaking of physical perfection at the final consummation; by no means, but of the perfection or completion of the will of God, the plan or system of salvation, of which they knew and prophesied in part, which was finally perfected, completed and made known through those God-given parts, or channels of communication, which parts, or channels having served their purpose, the will of heaven made known and confirmed with signs and wonders, naturally cease by limitation.

The circumstances connected with this subject fully explain their object. God, in his wisdom, selects poor, illiterate fishermen to make known his plan of salvation to every creature, tongue and tribe, an utter impossibility from a human standpoint. What must be done? as they have no time, means or disposition to establish a college: "But tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." The necessary qualification, "Behold I send the promise of my father upon you, the Holy Spirit, which shall guide you into all truth, and bring all things to remembrance what I have said unto you. And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirmed the word with signs following." This was not done to make them Christians, or because they were Christians, but for the work whereunto God had called them, who deputized and qualified assistants when necessary. The work being completed, the will of heaven made known and established, no more to be added thereto, they "fail," "cease" and "vanish away." But, don't the Master say where two or three are gathered together in his name, "I am in the midst?" Yes; but he don't say he will be there in a miraculous manner. He is there to approve, bless and sustain, his watchful care is over his people, as David says: "If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there." Otherwise brethren, can't you test this matter and settle this question? Yes, but don't Paul say: "Now, if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Yes; but don't you know that spirit has many significations? and here it refers to the mind or disposition to serve God, in contrast with the carnal mind, or mind of the flesh. Read the connection. Rom. viii.; 1 Cor. ii. 10; Phil. ii. 5. Brethren of the opposition, let me suggest that you cease tearing down, beating and banging the servants of God until you can give them something better; place your feet on the sure rock foundation with proofs, signs and real demonstrations, or cease your unequal warfare and be consistent; delay is dangerous. Don't say the Scriptures are insufficient, water baptism is not essential, and stand still and see the salvation of God. Whereas, wisdom cries, no time to delay; all things are now ready. Awake, ye sleepers; go forward, doubt not, for the last three years and a half may be too late for you and me, and hardly gives room for our King in '80. So, brethren, stand firm in the faith, quit you like men; be strong; look to Jesus, the Author and finisher of our faith, who, instead of saying, "Stand still and see the salvation of God," would say: "Awake, thou that sleepest; be up and a doing while it is called to-day." Now is the accepted time. Run with patience the race set before you. Jesus pleads for you, may he not plead in vain and another take thy crown. "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples which are not written in this Book, but these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, and that believing, ye might have life through his name."

Lamar's Commentary.

G. M. MYERS.

In addition to the quotations we made from McGarvey's commentary on Matthew and Mark, a few additional from that on Luke may prove of interest. The commentary on Luke has been written by Eld. J. S. Lamar—a man of considerable ability as an expositor of the Disciple church. He says—

"'Of his kingdom there shall be no no end.' Luke i. 33 It will be noticed that (της βασιλειας) for ever, is here equal to (εις τους αιωνας) without end. This declaration is not in conflict with 1 Cor. xv. 24. The end there spoken of is not, says Alford, "of the kingdom of Christ, but generally the end when all shall be accomplished, the bringing in and fulness of the kingdom by the subjugation of the last enemy, the whole course of the mediatorial work of Christ, the salvation of the elected; the time indicated by Matt. xxv."

This is quite an improvement on the Disciple preachers, as they have almost universally on these texts, when in debate with us on the line of the organization of the kingdom, contended that at Christ's advent he will, instead of taking a kingdom, deliver one up to the Father.

Though considerably cloudy when taken throughout on the case of the rich man and Lazarus, yet his comments are wonderfully in advance of the position generally advanced by his brethren in their discourses.

"'A certain beggar named Lazarus.' Luke xvi. 20. The name not pointing to any individual (for this is parable and not history), but given to add liveliness to the picture, and discreetly given for the suggestiveness of its signification—God my help."

"'And in hell he lifted up his eyes in torments.' v. 23.—The word hell in this place (hades) simply means the state of the dead, or, if we localize the the conception, the place of the dead. It is what we mean in modern phrase by the unseen world, or, the future state—It is Shakspeare's 'undiscovered country.' Into this country all alike go at death, both the rich man and Lazarus, the good and the bad."

"'Send Lazarus,' v. 24—I suppose that our Savior does not mean to teach us that such a conversation as this actually takes place in the future world, but that he does mean to set forth graphically and vividly to the covetous and deriding Pharisees, who heap up their treasures in this world, and are not rich toward God, how helpless, impoverished, dependent and wretched they will be when they pass to the other side. If such was the truth which he designed to impress, the parabolic drapery in which it is presented is most happily chosen. In any case we must not forget that this is a parable and not history, and consequently that its lesson is not what its imagery is, but what it means."

"'I pray thee . . . send him to my father's house.' v. 27—We may presume that the scoffing Pharisees, who had been listening to the parable, and who perceived its application to themselves, were saying in their hearts, 'this is all false—a mere bugbear to frighten us. If it were true, if such a fate as this really awaited us in the spirit world, the God of Abraham would not have left us in ignorance of it until now; he would have sent us messengers immediately from hades to warn us.' Now to meet this thought of their hearts, the Savior exhibits their rich representative in hades as asking this very thing for them; and puts into Abraham's mouth the assignment of the reason why the request had not been complied with. The plain unadorned truth of the matter, divested of its parabolic imagery and nomenclature (and it is especially important in the interpretation of this parable to divest it thus, because from its peculiar construction we are so strongly inclined to view it as history), is that the hearts of the Pharisees, right there before the Savior were presenting the request, and that Christ here on earth, and not Abraham in hades, was giving the answer. He tells them (if we may substitute the direct for the indirect address), you have Moses and the prophets; they are sufficient if you will heed them in their letter and spirit, to make known your duty, and to lead you to him who can make you happy and blessed forever; and if you will not hear them, neither would you be persuaded though one should rise from the dead."

Thus, from the above is to be seen, that whatever Eld. Lamar may write of this case, he has conceded the very points for which we have so often in discussion with his brethren contended. And further, in the future in discussion with the Disciple preachers upon this case, Eld. Lamar, for whatever he as an author is worth, must serve as a breastwork in the contest.

"'They were terrified, and supposed they had seen a spirit.' Luke xxiv. 37.—i. e., 'a ghost, a shade, a spectre.' In a word, they thought it was the dead Christ that had come back to them, and that he was still dead. He proceeds to remove this false impression, and to show them that he is really restored to life, and that it is his very self that stands before them."

This remark is good; and in his chosen synonyms of spirit, ghost, shade and spectre, he but agrees with the marginal readings of the Greenfield and Griesbach text in which they give phantasma for pneuma—spirit."

"'For they are equal unto the angels.' Luke xx. 36. If the Sadducees denied the existence of angels (which, as they believed the Pentateuch, is, perhaps not the meaning of Acts xxiii. 8, but rather that they denied the current belief in angelic and spiritual manifestations, somewhat as men now disbelieve in the spirits of a popular medium), at any rate, the Savior argues from it as a certain fact."

As we are so often charged, and especially by Disciple preachers, as being Sadducees, disbelieving in spirit—what they they call disembodied conscious spirit—I have quoted the above remark, and quoted it especially for the words in parenthesis. If Eld. Lamar is correct, then the Disciple preachers are largely Sadducean in belief as to spirit, and, therefore, the argument, the odium, and the prejudice against us must go. And, again, the Elder, for whatever he is worth as an author among the Disciples, must stand between us and those of them who abuse us.

"'The children of God.' Luke xx. 36. Begotten to a new life, and born from the dead, the immediate power of God, they are in a peculiar sense His children by virtue of being the children of the resurrection. Their life is derived not mediately through parents, but directly from Him."

Again we say good; the Elder has placed the birth just where the Savior placed it—at the resurrection from the dead—a point as to time hardly ever seen and set forth, at least by Disciple ministers. But here we will close our quotations at least for the present.

Chalmers: The errand of the Savior was to restore this sinful world, and have its people re-admitted within the circle of heaven's pure and righteous family. But in the government of heaven, as well as in the government of earth, there are certain principles which cannot be compromised, and certain maxims of administration which must never be departed from, and a certain character of majesty and of truth on which the taint of even the slightest violation can never be permitted, and a certain authority which must be upheld by the immutability of all its sanction, and the unerring fulfillment of all its wise and righteous proclamations. All this was wise in the mind of the arch-enemy, and a gleam of malignant joy shot athwart him as he conceived his project for hemming our unfortunate species within the bound of an irrecoverable dilemma; and as surely as sin and holiness could not unite into fellowship, so surely did he think, that if man were seduced to disobedience, would the truth and the justice, and the immutability of God lay their insurmountable barriers on the path of his future acceptance. It was only in that plan of recovery of which Christ was the author and the finisher, that the great adversary of our species met with a wisdom which over-matches him.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 16, 1879.

We find our paper nearly filled at the moment of writing, and so submit one more number to our patrons without further editorial brevities.

We live in a most wonderful period of this world's history, when men's hearts are failing them for fear as they are anticipating coming troubles. Prophecy is fulfilling in a most extraordinary manner. To chronicle and herald abroad the great events that make up the history of our times, is one of the great objects of our paper. We hope to make it a reflector of light on the pathway of our brethren. We ask their prayers and financial aid.

Prophecy Fulfilling.

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the Islands of the sea.

And there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in that day that he came up out of the land of Egypt. Isa. xi. 11, 16.

From these verses it will be seen that the restoration of Israel from the lands of their dispersion is not only foretold, but also that remarkable highways shall be constructed to facilitate this restoration. We clip two important pieces of intelligence which we give below; one on "Railways in the East," from the Christian; the other on "The Jews Regaining their own Land," from the Chicago Evening Journal, both of which we think will prove interesting to our readers. Despised and down-trodden as Jerusalem has been, she shall yet be a name and a praise in the whole world; rejected and contemned as the scattered tribes have been, they shall yet be gathered and be constituted the first of nations in that land, that shall become the glory of all lands, under the rule of the soon-coming Messiah. The times of the Gentiles near their close; the blasted fig tree of Jewish nationality, that has been waste and fruitless for this age, is budding and putting forth its leaves to bear its fruits in the age to come. Let us wait, watch, and pray.

RAILWAYS IN THE EAST.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says: General T. D. Lovett of this city, formerly Chief Engineer of the Southern Road, has just completed a contract for the building of a narrow-guage railroad from the city of Jerusalem to the port of Jaffa, in the Holy Land, and has written to Major John Boyne, also of this city, the champion narrow-guage railroader of Ohio, to join him in the enterprise. The road will be some forty miles in length, the air-line distances between the two points being something over thirty miles. Joppa is a small maritime town of Palestine, on a tongue of land extending into the Mediterranean, and lies in a northwesterly direction from Jerusalem. It was formerly the port of Jerusalem, and was the landing place of the cedars and stones of which the temple of that city was built. It has a considerable trade in cotton, corn, and fruit, as has also the country lying back toward Jerusalem, through which the road will run. A large factor in the business of the road, however, will be in the annual visits of the pilgrims at the Easter season, and travelers at all seasons. The proposed road is backed by a party of French capitalists, and is to be pushed forward to an early completion. Mr. Lovett is now in Paris preparing for the work."

With reference to these oriental railways, the Jewish Chronicle remarks: "The report that the Porte has granted a concession to an English company for the construction of the Euphrates Valley railroad, and to a French company for the Jaffa-Jerusalem line, has been very favorably received by the Jews in Jerusalem, especially as, according to their belief, a prophecy in the Scriptures will thereby be fulfilled. The Euphrates railway, so it is proposed, will intersect the former provinces of Assyria and Babylonia, and will have stations at Mosul and Hillel, in the neighborhood of which towns are Assyrian and Babylonian ruins. It has been suggested at Constantinople that eventually a junction might be effected between the Euphrates line and the Egyptian railways, which, if carried out, would confirm the following prophecy of Isaiah xix, 23: 'In that day there shall be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.' 'In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land.'"

THE JEWS REGAINING THEIR LAND.

A French newspaper says: "Judging by reports, which appear tolerably well confirmed, the Jews are little by little retaking possession of their ancient patrimony. Eighty years ago the Sublime Porte permitted residence in the holy city to only 300 Israelites. Forty years ago this number was raised, but the Jews were obliged to reside in a special quarter of the city which bore their name. This last restriction, however, disappeared in its turn ten years ago, and since then the Jews have bought up all the land in Jerusalem that could be bought, and have even built entire streets of houses outside the walls. Synagogues and Jewish hospitals have multiplied. The German Jews have no less than sixteen charity associations, and in the interior of the city one may count already twenty-eight congregations. Two journals have been established. In the Rothschild and other Jewish hospitals 6,000 patients are ministered to annually. A Venetian Jew has given 60,000 francs to found a school of agriculture in Palestine. Baron Rothschild, at the time of the last loan of 200,000,000 francs made to Turkey, accepted as security a mortgage on the whole of Palestine. Owing to the Jewish immigration the population of Palestine has doubled during the last ten years."

SELECTIONS.

(Cincinnati Gazette.)

Mesdames Bonaparte.

The attention of the public has been attracted to the condition of Mme. Bonaparte, who is still living at Baltimore, having reached the unusual age of ninety-four. The history of this woman is not only very sad, but it also has a romantic aspect. In 1803 Jerome Bonaparte, who was nineteen, visited Baltimore. He was the youngest child in the family, being the junior of Napoleon by fifteen years. He had some experience in naval matters, and had reached the rank of Lieutenant. While in Baltimore he became attached to Miss Patterson, a young lady of wealth and beauty, whom he married, notwithstanding the protests of the French Consul. The bride was a year younger than her husband, whom she accompanied to Europe, but the imprudent couple found, to their surprise, that they were not allowed to enter France. Jerome left his wife at Lisbon in order to seek an interview with his brother, the Emperor. The latter not only refused to recognize this marriage, but, worse than this, he persuaded Jerome to abandon his wife, and the young couple, thus suddenly separated, never met again. The neglected wife was early called to suffer great agony. Having no hope of her husband's return, she took passage to England, where she became the mother of a son, with whom she sailed for Baltimore. Since then she has passed her life in that city with the exception of a trip to Europe many years ago. How strange to recall the fact that this woman, though thus shamefully deserted, has always cherished an affection for her husband! She refused any second alliance, and hence has remained Madame Bonaparte. Chief among the sorrows of her latter days was the death of her only son, which occurred in Baltimore some years ago. He bore his father's name and was bred a lawyer, but never practiced, for having married a woman of wealth, he was enabled to live in handsome style until removed by death at the age of sixty-six.

ANOTHER MADAME BONAPARTE.

How little is known of the mother of Napoleon? Hence while speaking of the Baltimore Madame Bonaparte I may add a paragraph concerning the original of that name. Letitia, the wife of Carlo Bonaparte, was married at seventeen, and became the mother of thirteen children, of whom five died in infancy. She was only nineteen when her second child, the wonderful Napoleon, was born. At the age of thirty-five she was left a widow, with eight children, of whom three were daughters. Joseph (the eldest) and Napoleon were then attending school, and the remainder of the family was soon compelled to remove from Corsica to Marseilles to escape the dangers of war. Within two years from this time Letitia Bonaparte saw her second son the first General in Europe. When he became Emperor she removed to Paris, and was appointed Protectress of Charitable Institutions. She was then fifty-four, and her intense anxiety concerning Napoleon rendered her life one of constant distress. The rejection of Josephine, the retreat from Russia, the exile to Elba, and Waterloo were among her sad memories. She was sixty-five when he was banished to St. Helena, and six years afterwards she heard of his death. After his fall she retired to Rome, where she died in 1836, being then eighty-six. She had lived in widowhood fifty-one years, and had survived not only Napoleon, but also her two daughters, Marie and Pauline. No other woman was the mother of so many monarchs for while Napoleon was Emperor, her oldest son (Joseph) was King of Spain, while the youngest (Jerome) was King of Westphalia. Louis was at the same time King of Holland, Lucien Prince of Canino. The three daughters were also (through marriage) each raised to the dignity of a Princess.

(Sunday Afternoon.)

Fine Churches and Faith.

The numerous and elegant churches that stand in their superb beauty in every city and village, are esteemed by many cheering evidences of the abundant faith that is filling the earth. To me, they seem, alas! too often a sign of fatal infidelity. Not that infidelity which consists in doubting my favorite dogma, or finding comfort in what appears to me a broken reed or a vain delusion, but the more deadly faithlessness that is practically false to its own profession and makes void faith a lie. For the spirit that builds and sustains these loudly consecrated "offerings to the Most High" is sadly at variance with the simple mission of peace on earth and good will to men, the simpler duty of saving souls and serving to the utmost the least of our brethren. Because giving to the poor is lending to the Lord, it does not follow that a perpetual loan to the Lord in the shape of enormously expensive church property, legally tied up to the incorporated company of stockholders, and half-buried under mortgages, will be found acceptable as an unstained gift to His beloved poor!

There are many earnest and excellent people on whom the ministry of an archangel would be spent in vain, if the architectural surroundings were not strictly ecclesiastical. It is useless to argue with such or to rail at them. Formalism of any kind is a good pickle. It has prevented much backsliding, upheld many a weak and tottering institution and—covered untold sloth of understanding. Let them rest in peace. I can only appeal to those who accept the duty of working out each one his own salvation in things temporal and in things eternal who do not shut-let their thinking—who hold it no irreverence to render a reason for their faith and show good cause for their work.

No, God is not mocked. We cannot buy heaven with any direct offering of toil or wealth. Let us speak and act the truth to ourselves as well as to our neighbors; and the truth is that we lavish toil, fine art, and rich material on our churches because we enjoy the prestige of having them at our command and of being thought able to pay our share of their cost. Underlying other motives there is a vague notion not far removed from superstition, that "in some strange unlooked-for way" this elaborate display, ostentatiously dedicated to the infinite Creator, will operate to our eternal advantage. The sale of indulgences we think of with holy horror, but still nourish the feeling that the divine favor is not wholly regardless of the value of material gifts and sacrifices—that they will after all bring us a reward somewhat proportioned to their cost!

(The Messenger.)

The Thief on the Cross.

The other portion of Scripture, on which I expressed my intention of submitting some remarks to the judgment of your readers, is found in Luke xxiii. 42, the English rendering of the original of which ascribes to our Lord the following reply to the appeal of the penitent thief on the cross: "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise."

It is not, of course, my intention to enter here into a consideration of the the general question involved, as bearing (as it so plainly does) on the important subject of the intermediate state, with which it is so obviously connected, and to which I have already elsewhere addressed myself at large, but simply to request attention to the evident erroneousness of the translation in this case, as in not a few others, wherein this subject is concerned.

My present object is to show that the statement thus ascribed to our Lord, in the words quoted, imputes to Him not merely opposition to the uniform, abundant, and unmistakably intelligible testimony of the whole Word of God, from cover to cover, as to the condition of the departed, from the moment of their drawing the last breath of the life that now is until the period of their resurrection, but also necessarily involves Him in the plainest self-contradiction, as I now proceed to show.

How, I would ask, could it be possible to reconcile, consistently with common sense, the statement here ascribed to Him with the equally plain, and far more Scriptural, language of His oral declaration to Mary at the sepulchre, after His resurrection—"I am not yet ascended to my father?" Surely, surely, this single statement from His lips at such a time, and under such circumstances, did it even stand alone, uncorroborated by any other portion of the Word, ought to have the effect of preventing any possible misapprehension or misconception as to the passage before us. But, so far from standing alone, it is in complete and entire harmony with the uniform and abundant teaching of Scripture on the all-important subject referred to.

And now, to come to the consideration of the alleged reply of our Lord to the appeal of the poor man, I would commence by putting a question, the due reply to which should be sufficient to satisfactorily dispose of the whole case. It is this: Whence came the introduction of the element of time into our Lord's reply? Let us suppose, for a moment (for argument's sake), that, as I observed in a letter to a friend some time since, the appeal had consisted of merely the three first words—"Lord, remember me" (omitting the other six), what sense would there have been to the following reply to that appeal on the part of our Lord: "To-day I say unto thee, I will?" I confidently ask, whether it be conceivable that he could, in that case, have given such a reply?

Whence, then, I ask again, came the introduction of the element of time into the case? The answer is at hand, obvious and all-sufficient, viz., that the poor man's appeal had introduced it, in the words—"Lord, remember me when Thou comest in Thy kingdom." Here the time is most plainly specified, and the truth acknowledged, that that, and not the time of death, is the predicted period of the reward of grace which awaits the believer, and to which he looked.

In short, as in the case adverted to in my former letter, it is evident that our Lord, in His reply, necessarily referred to the day of which the poor man had made special mention, viz., that of His coming in (not into) His kingdom, and not to the day on which they had the converse in question, and then our Lord's reply will necessarily and properly stand thus: In that day (or this day), which thou hast especially referred to, "thou shalt be with Me in paradise."

There is a further mistake made, also, in the current theology as to the locality of paradise, which is on earth, not in heaven. The geographical situation is well known, so that, had our Lord even gone to heaven on the day of His death, that would not have taken Him to paradise. I may just add here, that the "American Bible Union" have seen the necessity of altering the text of the translation of the passage before us, and adding, in a foot-note, that otherwise the Lord is involved in self-contradiction, and opposition to the uniform testimony of the Word of God on the subject of the condition of the departed throughout the whole interval between the close of temporal life and the resurrection.

Faithfully yours,

J. C. M'CARELAND.

I omitted to add above, that as our Lord is to come to earth, and have his throne there. He will literally make good—aye, more than good—His promise to the poor applicant, who shall be with him in paradise. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus?"

Quiet Lives.

Christ's lowly, quiet workers unconsciously bless the world. They come out every morning from the presence of God and go to their business or their household work, and all day long as they toil they drop gentle words from their lips, and scatter little seeds of kindness about them; and to-morrow flowers from the garden of God spring up in the dusty streets of earth, and along the hard paths of toil on which their feet tread. More than once in the Scripture the lives of God's people in this world are compared in their influence to the dew. There may be other points of analogy, but specially noteworthy is the quiet manner in which the dew performs its ministry. It falls silently and imperceptibly. It makes no noise. No one hears it dropping. It chooses the darkness of night when men are sleeping, and when no man can witness its beautiful work. It covers the leaves with clusters of pearls. It steals into the bosom of the flowers and leaves a new cupful of sweetness there. It pours itself down among the roots of the grasses and tender herbs and plants. In the morning there is fresh beauty everywhere. The fields look greener, the gardens are more fragrant, all life glows and sparkles with a new splendor. And is there no lesson here as to the manner in which we should seek to do good in this world? Should we not strive to have our influence felt rather than to be seen or heard? Should we not scatter blessings so silently and so secretly that no one shall know what hand dropped them?

The whole spirit of the gospel teaches this. "When thou doest thy alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth, that thy alms may be in secret." We are not to seek praise of men. We are not to do good deeds to receive rewards from men. We are not to sound trumpets or announce our good deeds from the housetop.

NEWS ITEMS.

PESTH, April 10.—Seventeen thousand persons in Szegedin and the neighborhood of that city are still subsisting on charity. It has been raining for ten days. The supply of bread is becoming exhausted.

A Lahore (India) dispatch of the 3d says a British force, under Capt. Gough, had defeated 5,000 Afghans, killing 400. The British loss was three officers and three men killed and thirty-two wounded.

MADRID, April 9.—A terrible sporadic fever is raging at Casas Blancs, Morocco, among both natives and Europeans. Business is at a standstill.

The British agent sent into Upper Egypt to inquire concerning the famine reports that 10000 persons had died from starvation alone in Girgeh, Kena and Esna.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The Department of State to-day received a telegram from the United States Charge de Affaires at St. Petersburg, announcing that this morning an attempt was made on the Emperor's life while he was walking near the palace. The assassin discharged five shots at the Czar, but none of them took effect. The assassin was arrested.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 14.—While the Czar was taking his morning walk early to-day, near the palace, four shots were fired at him. The Czar was unhurt. The man who fired the shots was arrested by the crowd, which the firing attracted. The city is now being decorated in thankfulness for the Czar's escape.

LAHORE, April 14.—A bad feeling is growing against the British among all the tribes interested in the Khyber Pass. They complain that the British are acting as though they intended to keep the pass in order to spy out the hill fastnesses.

LONDON, April 13.—A dispatch from Cairo states that business is completely suspended, and it is likely to remain so till the decision of England and France is known. The Government is collecting money throughout the province, using every means of compulsion. An immediate levy of 10,000 soldiers has been ordered. A special envoy has been sent by the Khedive to Constantinople. He took with him a large sum of money for the Sultan.

LONDON, April 14.—A dispatch from Alexandria says a great fire is raging in Cairo, and has destroyed blocks of buildings hundreds of yards long.

Further advices were received from Cape Town, on the evening of the 8th, which announced another disaster suffered by the British forces in South Africa. About 4,000 Zulus had attacked a company of the Eightieth Regiment, which was conveying a wagon train intended for the relief of Col. Pearson, and killed all but five men of the 104 of which it was composed.

LONDON, April 14.—The Times' Rome correspondent says: "The Pope's letter concerning the education question has great importance apart from the subject of which it treats, as it directly confirms the impression which some newspapers have combated, that the Pope understands the liberty and dignity of the Papacy to consist in removing from Rome all means of preaching and propagating whatever the Church holds to be heretical; and that his gradually increasing insistance on the restoration of temporal power is prompted by the equally increasing conviction that until the Pontiff regains his earthly sway it will be impossible to prohibit liberty of worship and instruction. Thus, he declares, in this holy city the religion of Christ ought to reign sovereign, and the universal teacher of the faith ought to have full power to close all access against impiety, and to maintain the purity of Catholic teaching."

By proclamation of the Governor of Louisiana, quarantine will be established after May 1 against vessels arriving from West India and South and Central American ports.

DEPTH OF THE OCEAN.

Soundings in the Atlantic ocean have shown a depth of 18,000 feet, or about three miles and a half; those taken in the Southern Atlantic, to the west of the Cape of Good Hope, showed a depth of 27,000 feet, or more than five miles, and then no bottom was found. At a point 300 miles from the Bermudas, 5,700 fathoms of line were payed out—nearly six and a half miles—and no bottom found. Near the same parallel bottom was found at less than half the above depth. Midway between the Islands of Tristan d'Acunha and the mouth of the Rio de la Plata, the bottom was reached at a depth of 2,500 fathoms, equal to 45,-000 feet, or eight miles and three-quarters. The time occupied by running out the line was nearly three hours.

BREVITIES.

Martin Ewing, an old darkey of Dalton, Mass., claims to be 114 years old. Colonel James Ewing, who brought him from Virginia, and who died in 1839, aged 81, said that when he was a little child Martin was large enough to plough.

Christian Union: A French engineer has made a report on the project of a railroad across the Desert of Sahara. The projected line would run from Algiers to Timbuctoo, a distance of some 1,200 miles, and would rest mainly on layers of sand, and toward the end on primitive volcanic rock, granite, etc. No mountainous obstructions would have to be encountered and the average heat does not exceed 75 deg. Fahrenheit. The proposed tunnel between Spain and Africa is still before the public. This tunnel, according to the plan at present contemplated, is to extend from within a short distance of Algeciras, on the Spanish side, to between Tangier and Ceuta, on the African side. The length of the submarine tunnel will be nine miles, with an inclination of one foot per hundred. The greatest depth of the sea is 3,000 feet; and as it is intended to have a thickness of some 200 feet of rock left between the roof of the tunnel and the sea bottom, the greatest depth of the tunnel will thus be 3,300 feet below the level of the sea.

Instead of the proposed Euphrates Valley Railway from Scanderoon or Livadia to the head of the Persian Gulf, with an extension along the Mekran coast to Kurrachee at the Indus, Mr. Haughton suggests a line passing through Sivas and Diarbekir in Asia Minor, Mosul and Kafr in Turkish Arabia, with a short line to Bagdad, crossing the gates of the Lagros range on the Persian frontier, going through the Persian towns of Hermanshah, Hamadan, Teheran, Shahrud and Mushed, crossing the Afghanistan frontier, and passing through Herat and Kandahar and through the Bolan Pass into Shekapoore on the Indus Valley Railway. A branch line would also connect this system at Diarbekir with either Livadia or Scanderoon. Besides the strategical importance of his route, Mr. Haughton urged the fact that it would open up a vast field for trade. The enterprise of the United States in constructing a transcontinental railroad was advanced to encourage the timid who might hesitate to engage in so gigantic an undertaking.

THE TALLEST TREES.

The largest trees in circumference and the grandest ever discovered are those known as the Big Trees of California, the Sequoia Gigantea. But they are not the tallest. The highest Sequoia now standing is in the Calaveras Grove, near Stockton, and measures 327 feet in height. It is altogether probable that among the fallen trees in California forests there were those which reached greater height, and it has been shown that some of them had a height of 400 feet. In Gippsland, Victoria, there are some extraordinary specimens of Eucalyptus, and on the bank of a river a fallen tree was measured, showing a total length, from roots to top, of 435 feet. The crest of this tree was broken off, but the trunk at the fracture was nine feet in circumference, and the height of the tree when growing was estimated at more than 500 feet. The tree, however, was dead. Near Fernshaw, in the Dandenong District, Victoria, has been discovered a specimen of Eucalyptus amygdalensis, or almond-leaf gum, standing alive, which measures 330 feet from the ground to the first branch, and 450 feet to the topmost twig! Its girth is, however, only eighty feet, which is less than that of many Sequoia, but it is probably the tallest living tree in the world.

Book Notices.

We acknowledge the receipt of a copy of "Temperance and Anti-Tobacco Tracts" written by the late George Trask, from the publisher, H. L. Hastings, 312 Washington street, Boston, Mass. We wish this little work was in the hands of every man and boy in the United States. Let those who do not indulge in the use of either tobacco or spirits send for the work and read it, and we believe they will never commence the practice; let those who have formed the pernicious habits send for the work and they will see good and sufficient reasons for breaking off at once in practices so ruinous and detestable as this book demonstrates both the using of the weed and of intoxicating beverages to be by its faithful delineations. Price 40 cents, address as above. We lovingly beseech all our brethren to fling their pipes, cigars and tobacco boxes to the moles and the bats before the angels come for the elect. We feel sure that the heavenly messengers will never hunt through a saloon for one of the chosen, and we confess to some misgivings about the pipe and tobacco box. Angels do not smoke, and tobacco using would be horribly out of place in the New Jerusalem.

The April number of The American Young Folks, published at Topeka, Kansas, comes to us full of the very best reading for our boys and girls. It is a paper parents need not hesitate to place in the hands of children. It is finely illustrated, and combines all the requisites for a first-class youth's paper. It is sent one year for fifty cents. The publisher offers to send a sample copy free for examination. No cheap humbug premiums are offered to secure subscribers, but the best paper for the least money is given.

POETRY.

"Abide in Me and I in You."

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

That mystic word of thine, oh, sovereign Lord!
Is all too pure, too high, too deep for me;
Weary of striving, and with longing faint,
I breathe it back again in prayer to thee.

Abide in me, I pray, and I in thee;
From this good hour, oh, leave me never more;
Then shall the discord cease, the wound be healed,
The life-long bleeding of the soul be o'er.

Abide in me; o'ershadow by thy love
Each half-formed purpose and dark thought of sin;
Quench ere it rise, each selfish, low desire;
And keep my soul in thine, calm and divine.

As some rare perfume in a vase of clay
Pervades it with a fragrance not its own,
So, when thou dwellest in a mortal soul,
All heaven's own sweetness seems around it thrown.

Abide in me. There have been moments blest
When I have heard thy voice and felt thy power.
Then evil lost its grasp; and passion hushed,
Owned the divine enchantment of the hour.

These were but seasons beautiful and rare;
Abide in me, and they shall ever be;
Fulfill at once thy precept and my prayer:
Come, and abide in me, and I in thee.

CORRESPONDNCE.

Editor Restitution: For some months I have been a close reader of your paper, THE RESTITUTION, and have been benefited. This writing is the result of a mistake made by one of your special contributors, G. M. Myers, in the last issue. I write not to criticise, but simply to correct, I refer to his article headed, "Extracts from Commentaries." He says: "A few volumes of the new commentary now being issued by the leading and distinguished men of the Christian or Disciple church have recently come into my possession."

On reading this much of the article, nothing unusual passed through my mind, for I know very well that such churches there were as the "Disciple," and "Christian" churches. But I was more than a little surprised, when I read further and found him referring to J. W. McGarvey, and James Challen, as being identified with this "Christian or Disciple Church." Now I am at a loss to know why he has done this. Certain I am that he is mistaken. J. W. McGarvey, is not a member of the "Christian or Disciple Church." Did not Mr. Myers know this? The church of which he is a member is not the "Christian or Disciple Church," but "The Church of Christ" instead. There was an institution called the "Church of the Disciples," which has recently come to nought. If I mistake not, it was located some where in or near New City, and of it George Hepworth was the pastor. It originated with him. This is why it failed, and why all similar institutions will fail, ultimately. Gamaliel, a lawyer in Israel predicted this of them, ere they began to exist. Hoping you will give this a place in your columns, I am fraternally, CHAS. W. W. COOPER.

A member of the Church of Christ,

Editor Restitution:—Strikes! Yes, strikes! Strikes, when from all quarters the cry comes: Bad trade, markets dull, prospects gloomy and failures daily. Yet men strike, and, perhaps, of all strikes none have been so absurd as the Liverpool strike. I venture to say that if any workmen on the continent of Europe had been making wages as have the Liverpool strikers, the foreigners would have stuck to their work, paid their way, and actually enriched themselves. Yea, John Bull's neighbors, on the same island, Scotchmen and Welshmen, thousands of them, would have been glad of the chance that this multitude of Liverpool dockmen, coal-heavers, and others have had. But they struck, and a great proportion of the population of the great northern port were sufferers thereby; the wholesomeness of provisions waiting unloading was jeopardized, and, of course, the community embarrassed. Far be it from me to do injustice to the working man; but really in innumerable instances he is the direct cause of the sufferings of his family. Good wages, promptly paid, were ready for these Liverpool strikers; but they were discontented, asked for more, and failed. The arm of the law kept some jealous men in check; though they succeeded in frightening others who came to fill their places; this, however, only partially. Much, not pleasant to tell, could I say about the mass of my countrymen. The millions seem unaffected by either the clergy of the establishment, or those of the dissenting bodies; and the religious feeling of the Scottish people is manifestly on the wane; this has of late been proved by statistics. Here in Britain, the land of freedom. Preachers of any sect can go anywhere, and can demand protection, if abused or insulted; but the people pay little attention to them: in short, Brother C., Protestantism seems to have lost its power in impressing the multitude. Catholicism holds its numbers, and, without much noise, adds to them.

Now and then I step into a chapel, and, notwithstanding the misconception of much Scripture, some truth is set before the hearers. The last discourse I heard, was, in part, excellent. Not a hint was given of the world's conversion under preaching, but the advent and resurrection were dwelt on as prominent Bible truths. The continued commercial depression, the distress, especially in Cornwall, the terrible visitations of flood, etc., on the continent, the trouble that Britain continually has in Asia and Africa, the nervousness about Germany in apprehension of the emperor's death, the harass unremitting in the remaining "dominions" of the Sultan, all these, and more, impress the minds of the thoughtful. "Watchman, what of the night?"

But a fraction of the Times which I mail you have I read myself. The letter from India I looked over, and is not this enough, in view of the condition of other parts of the world, to bring to mind Wakefield's rendering of Luke xxi. 25—"anguish of desponding nations?" You will see also, by the Times, that there is some alarm about the vast expenditure in wine, spirits, ale, etc. Facts, indeed, are stubborn things, and figures give the facts. Spite of "hard times" what money Britain spends for drink!

Concerning the anti-christian development of the "last time," I might say much were my health sufficient for the undertaking. That Popery does not exhibit the full characteristics as set forth by Paul and John is plain enough. The Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford has rebuked the infidelity of the age like a hero. No Romish Pontiff, no Romish cardinal, bishop, or priest, denies the Father and the Son. I pray that God may grant us clearer light concerning "the last end of the indignation."

Exactly did the editor of the Christadelphian express my own mind about France, in saying that the late exaltation of Republicanism might be the precursor of its downfall. Was it not remarkable that the Emperor of Germany, eighty-two years old, should take the reins from his son's hand, the crown prince being over fifty? There has been some sport in newspapers about young Napoleon going to South Africa, yet his destiny may be little understood. H. HEYES.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—May I ask one or two questions? I have never taken that liberty before, and if you think them unworthy of an answer please throw this in the waste basket, and I will be well satisfied, believing, that God, in his loving kindness to us in these last days has given us sure waymarks down the stream of time. John says, Rev. xiii. 1: "And I stood upon the sand of the sea and saw a beast rise up out of the sea having seven heads and ten horns," (and on). If this is the Pope and his dominion, who is this in the eleventh verse, and on to the end of the chapter? Verse 11: "And I beheld another beast come up out of the earth." The next question, Rev. iv. 6: "And round about the throne were four beasts full of eyes before and behind," and verses 7, 8 and 9? Chapter v. 6, 8, and who or what are those? and verse 11? I have been as brief as I could and must leave it, hoping the brethren will divest themselves of all theology that is not according to the word; for the Gentile times is about completed. The unspotted can only enter the kingdom.

A. A. BABCOCK.

Albion, Mich.

Editor Restitution: It is a long time since I have been heard to speak through the columns of your excellent paper, THE RESTITUTION. It is not because I have lost interest in the great and glorious truths it advocates, for I am more and more interested in the prophecies and signs of the times. O how fast the prophecies are fulfilling, and how many things are taking place to encourage our faith in God's immutable word! I have been absent from my home the most of the time since September advocating these great truths in public, and in private, whenever an opportunity has offered itself, or been secured for that purpose. I have spent the time mostly in Providence, Rhode Island. I found among the so-called Adventists there, some of the greatest opposers to the age to come, or reign of Christ on David's throne, future, that I have ever met, but, I did not shun to declare the whole counsel of God and his servants on that subject to them; but contended earnestly in public, and in private with them, for the faith once delivered to the saints. Several were led to embrace the truth for which I praise God and take courage. We are living truly, in solemn and momentous times! How much there is pointing to the day of the Lord, as near, very near. What manner of persons ought we to be who have the light in these days of darkness and peril? Lord help us to let our light so shine before men that they may see our good works, and God will be glorified thereby. My heart was made sad, when I heard of the death of my dear friend and brother, G. R. Lederer. He has been a friend and brother and correspondent of mine for twenty years, or more. I wrote to him three weeks ago, and wondered I did not get an answer, but the reason is revealed in the news of his death. He rests from his labors and his works, follow him. May you, dear Bro. Chaplin, be abundantly blessed in your work of faith, and labor of love with all the dear ones scattered abroad, is the prayer of your sister. ABBY A. PERRY.

COMMUNICATIONS.

"The Two Covenants."—No. 3.

"The ten commandments do not constitute the covenant of Exod. xxiv. 8." Moses does not describe "the covenant which the Lord hath made with you," for two reasons:

1. The "voice" of God a few days previous had declared it unto them.

2. He had not only declared and commanded the ten words, but "wrote them upon two tables of stone."

Hence, Moses says: "Behold the blood of the covenant;" not the covenant behold. If I could get J. N. A's mind to discriminate between "the covenant God wrote upon two tables of stone" and "placed in the ark under the mercy seat" out of the sight of Israel, and every "precept" or commandment God gave to Moses on the mount after "his voice" had declared his covenant ten words or precepts, he at once would discover that the first precept or commandment in "the law," is this: "Thou (Israel) shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." This is the first and great commandment, and the second like unto it: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." On these two commandments hang all the law (precepts) and the prophets, says Jesus, Matt. xxii. 37-41. Here we notice a marked distinction made by Jesus between "the first covenant" his Father had "made" with Israel, and "the precepts" he had given Moses on the mount afterwards, for he quotes two of those "precepts" out of the many found in Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy, and all carefully written in the Book containing those "ten words," declared by his "voice" and "wrote upon two tables of stone." Hence, "the covenant which the Lord hath made with you," Exod. xxiv. 8, is in the past. And the "if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant," I have amply proved was sent to Israel two or three days before "my covenant" was "declared and commanded." And as Exod. xix. 5, refers to "my covenant" to be "made" with the house of Israel when they are prepared, etc., so Exod. xxiv. 8, refers back to "the day of the assembly," etc., and at the time the "covenant," as found in Exod. xx. and Deut. v. was "declared" by God's "voice" and "commanded them to perform" or "keep it."

J. N. A. has admitted that those "ten words" that God "wrote upon two tables of stone" "was the first covenant in its secondary sense." How did he obtain such knowledge? Moses did not say the "ten words were his covenant, in a secondary sense!" Moses, and Israel receives, hears and accepts of those "ten words" the "voice" declared and commanded them to perform," as God's will and nothing less, and it was "my covenant" that they had promised "to keep" and "do," and they never treated it otherwise, but as the expressed will of God "unto them." And we find Moses and the prophets, Jesus and the apostles, leaving a wide margin between "the first covenant" and "the law added because of transgression of that covenant." See their writings, and especially Rom. iii. and Gal. iii.

Mr. J. N. A. speaks of the "ten words" as the moral law, "and all the other precepts" as "the ceremonial law, or law of Moses;" but the quotation from Matt. xxii. 37-41, and others, forever settles the question. What is "the law" of God? "How readest thou?" "In the book of the law;" "and the law came through Moses," but the "first covenant" was not given through Moses, but was expressed, "declared" by God's "voice unto them," and all the other "words or precepts, statutes and judgments," were spoken only to Moses, and he to the people. See Heb. ix. 19. Here Paul and Moses make a clear distinction between "the law" given him "on the mount" during the "forty days and nights," and "the covenant declared by the voice," etc. "For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law . . and sprinkled both the book and all the people, saying, this is the blood of the testament (will) which God hath enjoined unto you." Here Moses declares that God had enjoined (declared, or commanded) his covenant unto Israel. And after they had heard it enjoined they said again: "All that the Lord hath said will we do and be obedient." There was no "love" in the covenant that was enjoined unto them either expressed or implied from the language used. But the first and great commandment or precept "in the law" to Israel is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God." And the apostle says: "Love is the fulfilling of the law," and "God is love." And Jesus says: "The law shall all be fulfilled; I am not come to destroy (the law), but to fulfill." See Matt. v. 17, 18. Israel did not fulfill the law, as they did not "love the Lord thy God" as the "law" required, and they did not love their neighbor as they were commanded. Hence God raises up that "prophet" promised them, to fulfill the law not only in the spirit, but in the letter, inasmuch as he became a curse according to the law.

Mr. Blackstone has defined "law as a rule of action." And the Lord invites Moses up into the mount to give him "a law, and commandments which I have written;" and as he wrote "ten" of "all the commandments" given to Moses while with him forty days, and Moses afterwards wrote those "commandments, statutes and judgments," etc., in a book, and that is designated as the Book of the Law" and "the book of the covenant." Well, as "the first covenant and the giving of the law," pertained to Paul's "brethren according to the flesh," Rom. ix. 3, 4, what are we to do to be saved? If we are not "under the law" or "the first covenant," what are the Gentiles under? Those that believe "the gospel" Paul preached, and have been baptized into Christ, "they are under grace," being adopted into the family of whom Jesus is "head." And since the commission has the gospel to be preached and believed and obeyed, it excludes not only the first covenant, but even the idea of covenant is not to be found therein. The first covenant was to or for the house of Israel, and "the Sabbath is a sign between me and them throughout their generations." And we find the "gospel" preached to Abraham 430 years before the law was given through Moses. Now, since the middle wall of partition is broken down between Jew and Gentile, not in regard to "the covenants," (see Paul's argument "as the apostle of the Gentiles," etc.,) we find that the preaching of "the gospel is to every creature," but the first or old covenant and the new have been and is to be with the house of Israel and the house of Judah," and hence must be national, in toto, while the gospel is "universal."

This Generation be Fulfilled.

Editor Restitution:—Herewith I send you a critique on Matt. xxiv. 34; Mark xiii. 30 and Luke xxi. 32, by G. W. Boon, as found in the Prophetic Key, Vol. I., P. 512: "Verily I say unto you this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." We have been waiting patiently for months to submit the subjoined for your careful consideration, hoping that when you shall have given it a careful analysis you will give us your conclusions as to its merits or demerits. It seems to me that, just now is the opportune moment, while this subject is undergoing such a thorough investigation, to obtain all the light we can on "this generation." The writer says: "In this sentence the principal predicate is modified by the subordinate one heos an genetai in Matthew and Luke, and mechris hou genetai in Mark. The particles heos and mechris—'until'—never send their force through the period of time embraced in the predicate, but stop near the beginning of it —'The law and the prophets were until (heos) John.' Achri would mean till the end of John's ministry.

"The verb also genetai from ginomai—etymologically and historically, always implies a beginning, never an ending. It is used about 675 times in the New Testament, and at only one other place did our translators make it express the very opposite of its radical and essentially inherent sense, by rendering its present participle thus: 'Being ended.' John xiii. 2. That word achri, throwing its force through the time embraced in the predicate, together with a verb (pleroo) that does both imply, express and assert an ending, but not a beginning, may be found in Luke xxi. 24. 'Until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.' If plerothosi means 'be fulfilled'—i. e., finished, ended—at this place, how came genetai to be used in the verses under consideration, to mean the same thing? Again, genetai is aorist, past tense. Surely, Jesus said: 'This now living generation shall not pass away till the fulfillment of all these things in this prophecy has begun.'" (The Italics are Boon's). Will John G. Wilson of the Prophetic Times, and Brother B. Wilson, please give us their opinion also of the foregoing?

Questions Wanting an Answer.

1. If all true believers are entitled to spirit manifestations, as claimed by latter-day Saints, Adventists, and others, based on Mark xvi. 17, 18, why is it that among their thousand of believers, only about one at a time is found worthy? How is this?

2. If the promise made by the apostle Peter on the day of Pentecost, relates to the holy spirit, in manifestations like those witnessed on that occasion, embracing everyone through all time that the Lord our God shall call, why is it that demonstrations are so scarce? There are thousands who claim that God has called them, and claim that the promise relates to them. What's the matter? Now, one of two things must be true: God has not called them, they are mistaken, deceiving and being deceived, or their faith on this point is wrong, a mere empty theory. "But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?"

3. If those spirit manifestations ceased and vanished away on account of the apostasy, leaving faith, hope, and charity, will some one be kind enough to explain the meaning of apostasy? T. E ADAMS.

DUNKER EMIGRATION TO KANSAS.

Nearly 200 Dunkers, or German Baptists, as they are often called, have just emigrated from Lancaster county, Pa., where so many of them have settled, to new homes in Kansas, Abilene and the vicinity, Dickison county, being where they are to pitch their tents. That is a fine agricultural region, and their long experience and their skill as farmers will make them very desirable citizens for the West. They have sold all their land, with improvements, in Pennsylvania, getting good prices, and have reinvested much of the money in Dickison county, thinking it will be a better place for their children. As they have set out with their bishop, ministers, and a full church organization, no colony that has gone beyond the Mississippi for years can be said to be better equipped ecclesiastically. They are virtually one family, all of them being related either by blood or marriage. They were joined at Harrisburg by other Dunkers from the Cumberland Valley, and it is said that when they shall have reached Kansas the will number at least 1,000, embracing three generations. They are unusually well off, for emigrats, some of the families being worth from $60,000 to $70,000, and nearly all of them are in comfortable circumstances. More Dunkers have been going to Kansas recently than to any other western state, it is said, special inducements having been offered for them to settle there. While they are very observant of religious forms, they are very shrewd and practical, and understand the value of a dollar as well as the most secular-minded person.

The finest talents, the most exalted station, the greatest deeds, cannot give one a passport to the favor of God. To obtain it, there is but one way—one way alike to the high and the low, the rich and the poor, the learned and the ignorant, the child and the man; and that is through the Mediator Jesus Christ, who declares himself the way, the truth, and the life.

POETRY.

A Prayer.

L. M. BURGESS.

Give me "a willing heart"
That I may bring to Thee—
As did Thy chosen people old—
The best thou givest me.

And let me build for Thee
A tabernacle fair
As that of old, within my heart,
And deign to enter there.

Place there the mercy seat,
And there the blushing rod
Of all Thy precious promises
And gracious words, my God.

Tho' priceless dyes and woods
I cannot hope to bring,
I give Thee all I have to give,
Accept it gracious King.

As in the olden days
When to Thy servant near,
Oh, know me also "by my name,"
And fill me with Thy fear,

And with Thy boundless love.
And as to him to me;
Oh, say Lord, "I will give Thee rest,"
"My presence go with Thee!"

Blot me not from Thy book;
Thy grace in me revealed;
Let me to Thee uplifted look,
And all my wounds be healed.

Lead me into Thy rest.
Thine angel lead before,
To lead me to Thy Promised Land
To dwell forevermore.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Revealed Destiny of the Ancient Jerusalem, Now a Dirty Turkish Village Trodden Down of the Gentiles.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and say unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned, for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." Isa. xl. 1, 2.

"For Zion's sake I will not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth and the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, all kings thy glory, and thou shalt be called by a new name which the Lord shall name; thou shalt be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God; thou shalt no more be termed forsaken, neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate. I have set watchmen upon thy walls, oh, Jerusalem. Ye that make mention of the Lord keep not silence, and give him no rest till he establish and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." Isa. lxii.

Can there be any reasonable doubt in the mind of any unprejudiced student of the word, that those glowing predictions apply to the Jerusalem—and to none other—over which our Redeemer wept, once the royal seat of David, now the forsaken, now the downtrodden of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, then to become the royal seat of David's Lord and David's Son? Nay, verily; to me it has long appeared that upon this subject there can be no reasonable doubt.

Here we find the royal city—the city of the great King—the seat of empire—the city from above—the mother of the Hebrew church—Paul's continuing city—the city of the living God—the heavenly Jerusalem, or Jerusalem in the heavenly state—in the long promised glory laid up for her, and ready to be revealed in the last time upon Mount Sion, the metropolis in regal glory throughout Messiah's reign over the nations.

But is this the city that Abraham looked for, which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God? Heb. xi. 10. Yes, yes; "no two cities between Paul's eyes." See Isa. liv. 8-11. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a little moment—1800 years, one of God's little moments—but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy upon thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest and not comforted, behold I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires, and I will make thy windows of agates, and all thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders with pleasant stones.

If Elder Taylor had kept his heel off the neck of the old troddon down city, and allowed her to rise to her destined glory—which she will whether or no if God be the author of the Book—and given more heed to that spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets, he might have spared himself the perplexity of hunting up a suitable seat for royalty, for that is written as with a sunbeam, other than wandering off a thousand years into the dark future, laying violent hands upon the metropolis of a new heaven and earth, evidently beyond Peter's burning day. Rev. xxi. 1, 2.

This one city is an object of greater interest to the divine mind than all the new heavens, new earth and New Jerusalem together, as is evident from the fact that the inspired prophets never name or make further allusion to them than simply to announce the fact that at a given time at the divine fiat they come into existence. "Behold I create new heavens and a new earth." No expansive promise, no glowing predictions, no entrancing glory such as he dwells upon in connection with the old cast out city, now forsaken and desolate, then to be the royal seat of empire, the diadem in the hand of his royal Son in his glorious reign over the nations according to the predictions of all the holy prophets to Israel, Judah, Jerusalem, and the nations which have not heard of his name. Amen, so let it be.

My Crisis friend says, and says truly that "Paul had no two cities before his eyes." This is abundantly evident from the prophecies I have quoted, but friend Taylor will have it that the present Jerusalem, now in bondage with her children, forsaken and trodden according to unerring prediction, must fall and not rise again, must pass away and not be forgotten like the thralldom which has bound her for so many centuries, whilst I assuredly know that whereas in the past she has been forsaken and hated, she will in the future be made "an excellence, a joy of many generations," for God by the mouth of his holy prophet Isaiah hath spoken it. Isa. lx. 15.

I listen with profound interest to the prophet's commission, "speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned, for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." Isa. xl. 2. And I hear with eager interest the divine words, "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, oh, Jerusalem, the holy city, for thenceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumsed and the unclean." "Break forth into joy! Sing together, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem, for the Lord hath comforted his people; he hath redeemed Jerusalem." Isa. lii. To all this I say, Amen and amen. Cannot Elder Taylor join me, even though some Crisis theories should get rudely shaken, or perhaps even be dissipated into thin air?

The sarcasm and witticism evoked by the consideration of Ezekiel's temple and glory had better be dropped, or at least held in abeyance, until some of the theological problems we have laid at the elder's feet for solution be disposed of. All I shall say is, that the temple and glory, being in the Book, are worthy of equal credence with the New Jerusalem, and may—nay, will—come into effect a thousand years sooner, plainly implying the national restoration of Judah and Israel, as God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets; and if the Lord, on his return, should send Judah and Israel back to learn what they never understood before, namely, the significance of sacrifice, who should object? Were it not wiser to exclaim with Paul, in reference to this very subject, "Oh, the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out"? Rom. xi. 33.

Need we wonder that the Hebrew Christian, as readily as the Gentile converts, should take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, and even the loss of their lives, when they heard the painful history, and compared it with the glorious destiny of their beloved city, under the benign rule of their long promised Messiah, to be again, in a more glorious sense than ever, the royal city, the metropolis of the resurrection age, around which cluster, both in her humiliation and desolation in the past and present, and in her revealed destiny in the future, more sacred memories, more rich and glowing promises, and more entrancing, heavenly glories than around all the other cities of our planet, past, present and future?

The New Jerusalem of Rev. xxi. was no part of God's message to his prophets; never once named by one of them; no part of the message delivered by Jesus to his apostles; never once named by them, save by John nearly a century after the Christian era; never once mentioned by Paul to either of the fourteen churches which he established and to which he wrote! Why this silence on the part of inspired writers, whether prophets or apostles? Was it that the message was unimportant? It would seem as if it were relatively so, in the face of such frequent and full information about Jehovah setting his King, not upon the New Jerusalem or new earth, but upon the holy hill of Sion, to reoccupy the long vacant throne upon which the son of Jesse once sat.

For the New Jerusalem we must look beyond Peter's burning day at least a thousand years, and be willing to correct the mistakes of the past the moment they are pointed out by the sure word of prophecy. We can, therefore, say with all heartiness, from those expositors whose preconceived ideas impel them to mutilate, misapply or utterly ignore dozens of the plainest prophetic promises, as though the Book contained them not, in the language of our Episcopalian brethren, "Good Lord deliver us."

We cannot help thinking that if the present dispensation—shortly about to close, and characterized during its entire length, and especially toward its end, by almost universal human apostasy and wickedness—is the only opportunity which Adam's sons, whether savage or civilized, will have to know and obey the world's Redeemer, in that case, we could not think that the prospect would be such as to satisfy the boundless sympathies, the exhaustless mercies, and the inextinguishable love of that redeemer who is yet "to see the travail of his soul and be satisfied." How, in that case, would the Father of the faithful view a saved progeny numerous as the stars of heaven, the dust of the earth, or the sands of the sea? or how would the Captain of our salvation have in all things the preeminence if the mighty hosts of the lost exceed beyond all proportion the multitudes of the saved?

If our divine Redeemer has purposed that his matchless grace and redeeming mercy, are not to be bounded by the present dispensation, but are to be still gloriously manifested in the coming dispensation of his personal rule and reign, who should object? If he has purposed to bring our revolted planet into subjection to the divine mind and will, by the exercise of wisdom, the exhibition of grace, and the resistless power of love, rather than by destroying it by his Omnipotent power, why should we not believe and rejoice in it even though Elder Taylor frown and the good people of the Crisis brand our belief as "age to come infidelity."

If we have read in the divine Book that "in the restitution, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory the twelve who followed him in his lonely wanderings through Judea centuries ago will then sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," should an orthodox frown prevent us from believing it? Nay, verily; more than forty years ago we counted the cost of not only following truth but also of fearlessly avowing it at all hazards, and whether we basked in the smile of a friend or braved the frown of a foe was a matter of indifference to us if we could only be instrumental in bringing a single neglected, forgotten, despised and unpopular truth to the light of day; and though eighty winters have frosted our brow, and the eye which was once bright is getting dim, we have not lived long enough to regret following the purpose of early life, namely, to call no man father on earth, but in the light of our Father's Word to learn his will, and in the Master's spirit contend, however feebly, for the faith once delivered to the saints.

Finally, there is some little difference between thinking with God, and getting God to think with us. Happily for the world, and the church, too, he neither alters his purposes nor takes counsel of his creatures. Amen.

J. PORTER.

Boscobel, Wis.

The Two Covenants, First and the New, Are we Under Both?

Covenants existed prior to that made with the children of Israel in Horeb, but it was the first in which a future reward was promised on certain conditions of obedience; it belonged to and was made exclusively with them and was unknown to the fathers or preceding generations, and consisted of the ten commandments, Exodus xxxiv. 28.

The New Testament (or covenant) is also called the "second," and the "better" covenant, and states that it is better because its promises are better, it is second of the same order: a future reward is promised on certain conditions of obedience; it is new, because it is the second, and a better.

In both covenants, the second party agrees to observe absolute obedience to God, in order to inherit the reward, but that the specified obedience required by the new is not the same as is required by the first is evident, hence another reason for calling it the new covenant.

Israel failed to obey the conditions of the first covenant, hence the necessity of a new (or another) in order to carry out God's predetermined plan of salvation, for we read Heb. viii. 7: If that first covenant had been found faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. The prophet Ezekiel informs us of God's intention of doing with them (Israel) as they had done with him in despising the oath, in breaking the covenant; and that the Lord did break his covenant with them, the prophet Zechariah puts beyond all question, when he says, "And I took my staff Beauty and cut it asunder, that I might break the covenant which I had made with all the people, and it was broken on that day," the day in which his staff Beauty was cut asunder; or, as the prophet Daniel informs us, "After three-score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself." The manner and time by and at which God chose to break, or take away the first covenant was also the manner and time He chose to establish the new, for we read Heb. x. 9: "Lo, I come to do thy will O God. He taketh away the first (covenant) that he may establish the second." The same writer informs us that where a new testament (covenant) is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator; and that Christ, who is the mediator of the new covenant, has redeemed us from transgressions under the first; in other words Christ has, in taking away the first given as the second or new; hence we find Paul writing the Romans that they were "not under the law" or first covenant, but under grace, or the new covenant which may properly be called the covenant of grace. That it was so understood by the New Testament writers may, I think, be easily demonstrated; for instance, Paul says: "Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ (who is the mediator of the new covenant), by whom also we have access by faith into his grace (or covenant) wherein we stand."

The parties with whom the first covenant was made, were instructed to inform and teach their children, that it would be their righteousness if they would observe to do all these commandments, but says Paul, "now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe." The new covenant has come unto all, Jew Gentile, bond and free, male and female, but is only upon them that believe. The conditions of the new covenant are these and require absolute obedience. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life, but, he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." Truly, in the words of Paul, "If that which is done away (the first covenant) was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious (the new covenant)."

The argument in Paul's letter to the Romans, 7th chapter, clearly demonstrates that, if the first covenant has not been taken away it is unlawful for us to join ourselves to another, but he continues, "ye are delivered from the law (first covenant) and that by the body of Christ," and so at liberty to become one with the new covenant. In another letter the same writer informs us that the first was only added until the second should come, and that before the new came they were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith afterwards to be revealed, and to observe it was their righteousness; but now that faith has come we are not now justified by obedience to the first covenant, but by obedience to the new; hence says Paul: "We believed that we might be justified." Writing to the Romans, Paul states that Israel which followed after the law of righteousness (first covenant) hath not attained to the law of righteousness (as it now is in the new covenant), because they sought it not by faith.

Hence we conclude that we are not now subject to the specified obedience of the past covenant given from Mount Sinai, neither to its penalties, for "Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law being made a curse for us."

And now the new covenant "the grace of God that bringeth salvation, hath appeared unto all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works."

"Jehovah One Elohelm."

"The Lord (Jehovah) he is Elohelm—none else beside him." Deut. iv. 35. And in verse[39: "Know this day and consider in thine heart that the Lord (Jehovah) he is Ha-Elohelm (the Elohelm) in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath; there is none else." (God implied). 1 Sam ii. 2: "There is none holy as the Lord (Jehovah); for there is none beside thee; neither is there any rock like our Elohelm (in construct state, Elohaynu).

Isa. xliv. 6: "Thus saith the Lord (Jehovah), the King of Israel, the Lord of hosts: I am the first and I the last, and beside me there is no Elohelm (God)."

Isa. xlv. 5: "I am Jehovah—there is no Elohelm beside me."

Isa. xlv. 18: "Thus saith Jehovah that created the heavens; Elohelm that formed the earth and made it.... I am Jehovah, and there is none else." (Jehovah is this Elohelm—the only God.

Gesenius notes this usage 200 times in Deuteronomy alone. It occurs over 2,600 times in the Bible.

Then, all this is consonant with the Great Teacher. "The Lord our God (Jehovah, our Elohelm) is one Lord." Mark xii. 29. So in Luke x. 27. "Thou shall love the Lord thy God." (Jehovah thine Elohelm). Thus 1 Cor. viii. 6: "But to us, one God."

The root of all this truth lies deep in the primal revelation. "I am the Elohae (construct form of Elohelm) of thy father; the Elohae of Abraham; Elohae of Isaac; Elohae of Jacob; and Moses hid his face, for he was afraid to look upon Elohelm." Ex. iii. 6; and iv. 5, is a still stronger affirmation of the same form of words to state this truth: "Elohelm spake unto Moses and said, I am Jehovah." Ex. vi. 2.

No language can be more determinate, "one Elohelm! one Jehovah!"

Then, to complete and crown this plain truth of Revelation, we know that the angels, in the clearer light of New Testament Revelation, are never embraced in the Divine Name—the one God (Mark xii. 29; Heb. i. 13-14,) employs angels as his servants, messengers, and ministers; and hence they cannot be at all anywhere comprehended in his name. No, no.

Again, he says: "I am Jehovah. I change not," etc.

Of course, if not now, then the angels as such were never encompassed in that incommunicable name. They were always, like the winds and fires, the forces of nature—but "ministers of his that do his pleasure." Psa. civ. 20-22.

But what, then, shall we say of the Elohelm as Judges of God's ancient people? Ex. xxi. 6; xxii. 8, 9, 28; Deut. i. 17; 2 Chron. xix. 6. I answer: "The judgment is the Lord's who is with you in judgment." For all that was as "the pattern shown in the mount."

They were but a part and parcel of the system of types to foreshadow "the good things to come" by Christ and his co-heirs and co-kings in the "judgment of the great and appearing day of the Lord—as a thousand years." Acts ii. 20; 2 Peter iii. 8. This judgment to come will be emphatically the judgment of God. But the type of this would have been incomplete had it not included the ultimate idea of God's final purpose in judgment. However, as the typical system is not thus imperfect, we read: "God (Elohelm) standeth in the congregation of the mighty and holy people. Arise, O God, (Elohelm), judge the earth; for thou (singular) shalt inherit all nations." Psa. lxxxii. 1; Dan. viii. 24; John x. 34-36. "God was with the judge, and delivered them." Judges. ii. 18; iii. 9-10. The judge represented God, Elohelm. Amen.

Hence Jesus and his co-kings will personate Jehovah, and judge the world in righteousness. For as Moses and the judges judged Israel in the name of Jehovah; so in the antitype will the saints, under Christ, take the kingdom and reign.

Thus we have the plain word of the Lord, which makes the whole clear and consistent. Aside from this we know nothing of all this lofty range of Divine truth.

The plural, Elohelm, is construed with verbs and adjectives in the singular. It thus expresses unity. Nay, more, this unity expressed by singular connectives may seem absolute by the authority of Christ. "Hear, O Israel, the Lord thy God (Elohelm) is one Lord." Deut. vi. 4. Mark xii. 29; 1 Cor. viii. 6.

Further, the plural terms, associated in some instances with Elohelm are but an old formula used in Polytheism. Gesenius's Lexicon.

However, there opens still another more palpable, profound and comprehensive proof of this truth. "The tabernacle was built according to the pattern shown in the mount." Then, the four side sides surrounding it had each a triple tribal encampment with its ensign. The man, the ox, the lion and the eagle, furnished these fourfold forms. Than these forms, on the four cardinal points about the tabernacle, with the divine presence over and distinct from the mercy seat, in the center of the twelve tribes and the twenty-four courses of the ministering priesthood constituted the basis of the prophetic imagery in Isaiah vi., Ezek i. of the coming throne of the Lord as in Rev. iv. They all concur in one harmonious divine proceeding toward the crowning consummation of the whole great purpose in "the city of the living God." The metropolis of the better and heavenly country, where God will be all in all. Then angels and men and all creation will be each in their proper sphere of subordinate subjection to him "who is over all, God, blessed forever."

Thus, whatever there be in creature diversity, we find over and above it all the unchanging unity and supremacy of everlasting divinity. Jehovah Elohelm—the Lord our God—one Jehovah.

The manner of revelation has varied, but the absolute one (-ness of Deity) is maintained. Yes, both in typical and antitypical Revelation. Amen.

Knowledge is Power.

What a grand and glorious power is knowledge. What would the human family amount to without this great and grand accession? It is as indispensable as time and eternity; they both go hand in hand each gliding along on its golden thread which issues forth from the Almighty, who is the climax of all things both great and good.

Wisdom could never be obtained without knowledge, nor knowledge without wisdom, because they are as inseparable as time and eternity. Take the best and purest amongst the race of human beings, that we have any history of, which is our Savior. And we find all through his history from the time of his birth until the time of his resurrection from the dead, that knowledge, which is the power of God unto salvation, was brought to light through the gospel. Let the wisest, noblest, and purest of the human race that exist at the present day, stop and consider the analysis of that great and eternal word (knowledge; where are his thoughts led to? as his mind contemplates onward and onward he looks up to the blue sky, and beholds the sun, the moon, and then the stars, and he looks down from the lofty peak where he stands and gazes with eyes of admiration and astonishment, and cries out as it were in almost tones of thunder, Oh! God, thou art the source from which flows all truth, all knowledge, and all wisdom. Without thee and thy word of truth we are computed with the things of vanity. Again, the wise man collects his thoughts together, and commences to contemplate upon the great science of astronomy. He stands and gazes from the lofty height; he watches the moon as it rolls along through the light gray clouds of the universe, now and then breaking forth through the misty clouds its radiant light of silvery spray; still beyond he discovers the cluster of stars called the milky way, shining as it were like so many glittering diamonds; on, still on, he gazes, and he can just barely discover, far beyond all the other lustrous orbs, a beautiful shining speck as it were, glistening like a diamond lost amongst a million others. He places the great telescope upon it, the most powerful known, and he gazes at the little speck as it looked to be, and to his astonishment it is an immense planet, larger ten times than this little mundane sphere of ours. And still further, beyond this beautiful orb, he could discover millions, and millions more of the lustrious specks, throwing forth their fulgent light of sprays, like a world of stars beyond. Awe stricken as it were he falls to his knees and cries aloud: Oh! God, how wonderful are thy ways, past finding out; poor mortal man can only trace the golden threads of eternity to a limited extent, and then he is lost in one dark abyss of obscurity.

The Rev. C. W. Bardsley on "Heaven."

On Sunday evening the Rev. C. W. Bardsley (a son of Canon Bardsley), preaching at the parish church, Ulverstone, of which he is vicar, said that after a careful and prayerful study of the Bible, after perusing arguments of learned men and also the works of atheists, he had come to the comforting conclusion that the heaven of the future would be upon this earth, and at the resurrection man would have but to arise through six feet of earth. When God created the earth He saw that it was good; but when he placed man upon it, God said it was "very good." By the disobedience of our first parents the earth became accursed, and man was doomed to labor, to toil, and to strife. At the deluge the world was destroyed; but it was not annihilated. We were told that the world would be again destroyed, by fire; but we were not told that it would be annihilated. We were told of Christ's second coming; but we were not told that he would ever leave us again. Most people believed in a far-off heaven, and would point upwards to it beyond the skies; but if they pointed so at twelve noon and twelve midnight they would point in opposite directions. His firm belief was that when the earth had become purified from the curse by the fire which would pass over it we should all resume our natural forms, and, with Christ for our king, we should resume our lives upon this earth amidst the scenes we had lived and loved in our mortal life, and that the earth would then be the paradise or heaven which God first intended it for.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the earth; the re-adoption of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Wife of Zebedee—Her Theory of the Kingdom of God.

Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshiping him, and desiring a certain thing of him. And he said unto her, what wilt thou? She saith unto him, grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on the right hand and the other on the left hand in thy kingdom. Matt. xx. 20, 21.

We shall say nothing of the interest and selfishness and measure of ambition here exhibited by this woman in her request to our Lord; for a mother's great love and devotion, always to the welfare of her children, and especially that they might attain to honor and position in life, may well excuse her. But that her theology was sound as to the nature of the kingdom of God, we have every reason to believe. The language of the text forbids a mystical or spiritual view of the subject, and altogether ignores the popular theory of a church kingdom or kingdom set up in the heart by conversion, and leaves no room for us to question but what her ideas of the kingdom were of a territorial and material character, and that this was the prevailing opinion in those days, and accepted and advocated by the early church.

Indeed, we are led to believe that it never was questioned in those times as to the kingdom being a matter of fact, of a mundane nature, a tangible, visible affair. It no doubt had been this woman's privilege from time to time to listen to the Savior when discoursing upon this sublime subject of his kingdom and future reign on earth; hence her views were founded upon the plain and lucid statements uttered from his own truthful lips; and hence the correctness of her views, her petition comporting with the same. It is quite evident that she had an intelligent and enlightened understanding of the matter, and that her prayer was compatible with the light she had received, or the Savior would at the time have gently reproved her for her erratic and materialistic notions of the kingdom—as they are called now-a-days by popular church-goers and theologians—and disabusing her mind from such notions, would have put her right at once, telling her that his kingdom was of a purely spiritual nature, and that the believer's heart was its only receptacle, and that it was there alone where it could be established; that her ideas were very gross and earthly. But no, he does not undertake any such thing, but accepts her views as being entirely correct. This we infer from the fact that he says nothing in effect to the contrary, which we have good reason to believe he would have done, as he ever did on every occasion when those with whom he came in contact had held to erroneous views, especially when they pertained to the matter of human redemption or "the kingdom of God in the name of Jesus Christ." This was one important feature in the mission of the Son of God that he might loosen the bonds of human ignorance, give light to those who sit in darkness, and "bear witness to the truth." But what in truth were the views of this woman relative to the nature of the kingdom?

It is quite evident from the phraseology of the request desiring that her two sons might sit, one at the right, the other at the left hand, with Jesus enthroned in his kingdom, that she held and believed that it would consist of territory, longitude and latitude, center and circumference; that it would embrace a throne and a King to occupy it; that it would contain also subordinate rulers (Isa. xxxii. 1; Psa. xlv. 16; Matt. xix. 28); this being the very feature that most deeply interested her—that her children might be exalted to this high position of subordinate rulership in the kingdom, and have the privilege to sit nearest the throne, one at the right and the other at the left hand of Messiah in the times of his reign.

This was quite natural, on her part; and what mother who really loved her offspring could not desire the same future bright destiny for them as this woman for hers? especially if favored with such glorious visions of the coming kingdom as the wife of Zebedee was supposed to have had. It will be a great privilege to simply be a subject of that kingdom, and participate in its blessedness and infinite joys; but for one to have a high position assigned him by the King, to become co-ruler, to co-operate with the blessed Son of God in wisely administering the government—what a royal endowment! what an esteemed honor! It might be regarded as a happy issue to secure the lowest place there (if there is such), but to be called by the King to come up higher, to take a prominent seat near him—how blessed! To become merely an opaque body in the celestial system of those bright orbs in the kingdom is much to be desired, but how infinitely more desirable to "shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars forever and ever," which will be the happy destiny of those who prove faithful to the trust committed unto them who pursue a wise course in turning many unto righteousness. Dan. xii. 3; Matthew xiii. 43.

These characteristics of the kingdom, as clearly expressed in this ambitious woman's request, are fully set forth in several instances as given in Scripture.

The thief on the cross would appear to regard the kingdom in the same aspect or light. His request is very similar to hers, with the only difference—she prays for others, he for himself: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Doubtless this poor thief, too, had heard the Savior discourse freely upon this sublime theme of the kingdom. It may be that he had some time heard him give an exposition of the great image in Dan. ii., showing what that image symbolized—the four great universal monarchies of antiquity, and that the people in those days were living in the domination and power of the fourth kingdom, Rome—pagan, and that they would soon descend into Rome—papal, and so down into the extreme toes of the image, which would be about the time of his second advent to the world, at which time the stone kingdom would then be set up, breaking in pieces all those previous kingdoms, and in its onward progress would become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth; and that its setting up was wholly contingent upon his return to earth in power and great glory. Hence the request of this dying man was the result of an enlightened understanding, and in keeping with that theory which he formed as gathered from the lips of the Savior. He had plainly told the people that he was going away for a time; that it was expedient that he should go away, but that he was coming back again to set up his kingdom and reign.

And this is where the trouble was among "the rulers of the darkness of this world," and the established priesthood. They could have endured him so long as he confined himself to his simply preaching to lost sinners and to the improvement of their moral and spiritual condition; but when he undertook to speak in reference to their civil and religious arrangements, and how that they were all finally to come to an end and be superseded by a new and divine economy, then they became excited and alarmed, and sought to persecute and kill him, as in the parable, "Come, this is the heir, let us kill him." Had he told them he was about to depart for another world, there to establish a glorious kingdom and that all who believed on him would at death be permitted to come there and enjoy the glory with him, their United Grand Lodge and Lodge sessions would have ceased to exist, and they would have regarded him as a very kind and amiable personage. So it is to-day; so we believe in the popular wake and tendency with the fashionable preachers of "the world to come," who keep only day" and who endorse the present preaching of the material, quietly acquiesce in the theory of natural immortality, reward and punishment at death; the doctrine of Trinity, or the kingdom set up in man's heart, the conversion of the world, etc., it is all well; you are a clever man. But attempt to question the soundness of orthodoxy and the present church arrangement; speak of the increase of crime in the world; of the alarming frauds and corruptions in both church and state, and that things are waxing worse and worse; raise your voice in disapproval of ill-feasts and fashionable religion of the day; point to the signs of the times and declare that they foretell the coming near that Christ's second advent is at hand—that he is coming, coming to judge the world in righteousness, and the people with equity; and see how soon their voices will be changed toward you, from "Hosanna!" to "Crucify him!"

But to return to the thief's request—"Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." The simple answer to this in plain English is, "I will." "When I come again I will repay thee." Luke xxvii. 42. This is in perfect keeping with the subsequent circumstances and facts of the case as attending Jesus's death, ("if we believe that Jesus died,") his burial, resurrection, and his ascension, until forty days following his crucifixion. It is in keeping with the parable of the nobleman representing himself as retiring to a far country to receive a kingdom, i.e., instructions, power, and authority, which, after being invested with, he then returns for the purpose of exercising these powers. It is in perfect keeping with the fact that this kingdom is not set up until the termination of all mere earthly kingdoms, which does not take place until the loud blast of the seventh trumpet, which we know is a future event, as that brings us out to the resurrection of the dead in Christ, the re-compilation of God's great power to himself, which is in the day of the Lord, which day is introduced by the return of the Nobleman, or the coming of Jesus to reign in triumphant glory.

It is in keeping with the whole tenor of God's Word, with his plan and purpose as revealed.

It is in harmony with the very last question the disciples asked Jesus, just prior to his ascension to heaven, viz., "Lord, will thou at this time again restore the kingdom to Israel?" Acts i. 6. From the nature of this request—not unlike that of Zebedee's wife, and of the dying thief—it is evident that they viewed the kingdom in a material and geographical light, and regarded it as not an established fact then and there, but as a something to come, a future affair. We may safely infer that they did not entertain the remotest idea of a mystical or purely spiritual kingdom as being set up in the heart; for had they been taught this and believed it, they never would have asked the question they did. And should they have been mistaken in any way, as might have been indicated in this inquiry, and that there might have existed such a thing as this prevalent notion of the kingdom of God in the heart of man, and as being in their own hearts, (and they unconscious of it,) or in the matter of church organism, Jesus would have certainly set them right on the spot at once. But he accepts the petitions and inquiries of these three parties here as being correct, and answers each one in keeping with their requests or inquiries, and in such a manner and form of expression, as to leave us not the slightest ground to question the kingdom being a material, substantial matter, and yet in the future, its locality being under the whole heaven, or on the earth. Dan. vii. 27; Rev. v. 10.

With this view of the kingdom and the glory of the kingdom as described by the prophets and apostles, we see the propriety of praying, "Thy kingdom come;" and knowing what is to come with that kingdom—the times of the restitution of all things, etc.; that all the evils of the earth are to pass away; the wickedness of the wicked is to come to an end; that crime of every species is to terminate; that every knee is to bow and every tongue to confess to the glory of God the Father; that the earth is to be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea; that God's will is to be done on earth among men as it is done by angels in heaven—the result is that we pray more earnestly, "Thy kingdom come." Seeing that it will put an end to all theological strife and controversies; forever decide all vexed questions of the day; bring to a close all sectarianism and formal worship; end all human woes, sorrows, tears, miseries and wants, and finally wipe out every evil thing beneath the sun, we pray with still greater ardor, "Thy kingdom come!" And believing that the signs of the times warrant us in saying that this kingdom is nigh, even at the door; and if so, the great practical question is, Are we ready for the event? As the wise virgins are represented as having their lamps trimmed and oil in their vessels, that when the cry was made they were ready and went into the great chamber—so when the kingdom comes shall we be prepared to enter in with joy.

In view of this, O let us add unto our faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness," etc., that "an entrance should be ministered unto us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." And to this end may grace from on high be afforded us through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Judge Not.

And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day. John xii. 47, 48.

This is a world-wide field of thought in these texts. They embrace the magnitude of the love of God. My main object, however, is to present what seems to me to be taught in the texts. Perhaps we may get a glance of the love embraced in them.

"Judge not." Does he mean we shall not judge at all? Yes, brother; he means that we shall live with our minds free from judgment—unbiased. He has left on record for us what good and evil is; we are to learn this, and if we have, we know when individuals do those things; but we do not know the heart. "Judge not."

That man actualizes a mean, ugly disposition? Facts show this; but do you know the heart? Do you know his mental constitution? He could not avoid that. He ought to try to do better? So had we—poor, frail creatures, sinners every day of our lives! 1 John i. 8, 10. Then, too, do we know his training? does not education have anything to do with our characters? He hears, or has a chance to hear what is right. Yes, brother; but do you know you say, believe this? another says, believe that? their name is legion. How is he going to decide? He has the Bible? Yes; but he speaks "to them in parables that seeing they may see and not perceive; and hearing they might hear and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins be forgiven them," Mark iv. 11, 12. They have the same word you have got. Yes; but circumstances over which they had no control prevented them from accepting it—their name is legion. A person may appear lazy; but you know nothing, comparatively, about him. I could not, nor do I think any one else could, begin to enumerate the things that make people do just as they do. I do not even know them. To all outward appearance, man may do things just to be mean; but if you knew that man as God knows him, I believe your condemnation would turn into pity. If it should not be so, woe be to that man when he falls into the hands of an unjustly treated God! "Charity (love) suffereth long and is kind." Is it love to judge without knowledge? Is it being kind and suffering long to condemn from external appearances? God and his Son do not judge in that way, (Is. xl.) "Be ye perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect;" for "he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust."

We can not go into any class or society where this command will not apply, except differences between individuals in the church—little personal difficulties, 1 Cor. vi. 1, 2. It takes in the very lowest and extends upward. It takes in every form of vice. God does not love evil. No, brother; but you and I could not be perfected without it, and therefore he permits it for all-wise purposes. "He has blinded" the eyes of those that are without that we might be glorified. We could not be without they were. Had not their eyes been blinded by being spoken to in parables, he would not have suffered on the cross; and had he not, the world would have had no Savior. But why did he say, "Lest at any time they should be converted and their sins be forgiven?" I will not give an answer now; perhaps you may see it. The language, "I speak to them in parables," etc., is as applicable to the Gentiles who do not see, as those Jews. Then, if God has kept anything back from them that they should not see, for all-wise purposes; and taking into consideration that there are circumstances, which we can know nothing about, which prevent them from accepting that degree of light which we do, and that refusal, also, is for our glory—let us "be merciful ever as our Father, which is in heaven is merciful," doing good unto all and being long-suffering, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. (Shall we limit the time of his long-suffering? or does he reveal his limits?) And let us judge nothing before the time; for the Lord is coming. Then will be the time; for he will make manifest the hidden things, 1 Cor. iv. 5. You may not see this; but this is the spirit we have all got to cultivate if judgment is given to us. We do not know, therefore "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

This necessitates a knowledge of the order of judgment in order to understand it; and in order to understand the order of judgment it is necessary to be familiar with the purpose of God.

God purposed to people this earth with a class of beings called man; and that in their perfected state they should constitute a kingdom. This implies a king. I do not need to stop here and prove that he is going to have somebody to reign with him; for we all believe this—the promise is to all who overcome. And if a king, then subjects. The earth must be peopled, and during this time the king and his bride, and if any other particular class, and the subjects, must be perfected. Who would be the most likely to perfect first? The king. Jesus has the pre-eminence in all things. The bride comes next. She will be perfected when Jesus comes, as also any other members of the royal family if there are any, although the bride may include the whole, as the Old Testament prophecies concerning Christ included the saints.

Then we see the order of judgment. First the king, God judges him; and then all judgment is given to him, Jesus the Christ.

The bride is now under trial, and her judgment is completed when Jesus comes to gather them from the four winds of heaven.

The world at large Christ and his saints are to judge, which can not take place until the perfection of the judges.

Are the saints undergoing trial? If so, it necessitates that the process of judgment is going on. The Judge is hearing the account. I shall not attempt to prove this; for the fact that Jesus does not judge after the hearing of his ears, and that the dead will be raised incorruptible, is sufficient evidence.

"Judge not that ye be not judged," then, means this: If you want to be judged now, and have the right to judge in the great judgment day given you, do not judge now. It does not mean you shall not be judged at all; but that you will not be judged by Christ and his saints in the coming judgment if you do not judge now, but show mercy, and form the requisite character.

I wish to add one thought suggestively. If it was necessary for the perfection of the bride of Christ that the world at large should be ignorant, will they always remain so? If he is long-suffering, not willing that any should perish, will he keep any knowledge from them that would ensure their salvation? God is love.

May we be enabled to escape the Divine judgments of the great and terrible day of the Lord by being members of the bride of Christ, is the prayer of your brother in the "one hope" of the reign with Jesus.

S. H. REEVE.

Watch.

Watch therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. Be ye therefore ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh. Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh, Matt. xxiv. 42, 44, 25.

The words of Jesus of Nazareth, to his disciples, when with them, pointed forward to his second coming. If it was needful for Jesus to exhort his disciples to watch and be ready, when they all lived in the beginning of the Christian dispensation, is it not well for his disciples who live in the close of the same era, to regard and profit by the same exhortation?

Jesus did not exhort his disciples to watch for his first coming, for he was already with them; neither was it the destruction of Jerusalem, because in the same connection he speaks to them in parables concerning the establishing of the kingdom of God in that event. Therefore, it must be the second coming when he shall come to reign King on the earth, that he exhorted them to watch, that they should be ready to meet him at that time. How plain are the illustrations of the Great Teacher. He said: "But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up." Matt. xxiv. 43.

Jesus then refers to the faithful and wise servant who shall be up and doing, ruling well his household, and to that evil servant who shall become indolent instead of watchful, and shall say in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming. These were both servants of the same Lord; one was ready for his Lord's return at any time, that is, he who shall be blessed and made ruler over his Lord's goods, but the slothful servant shall be cut off, and his portion shall be appointed with the hypocrite.

In the next lesson Jesus likens the kingdom of heaven to ten virgins, all with their lamps going forth to meet the bridegroom. Virgin, signifies purity; therefore, the persons here referred to are good and holy people, they all having their lamps and going forth to meet the bridegroom, shows that they had like confidence in the promises of the coming of the bridegroom; but, while the bridegroom tarried, they all became heavy with sleep, (as did the disciples on the mount when Jesus was transfigured before them). But when the cry was made: "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him, then all the virgins arose and trimmed their lamps."

Thus far we see no difference in the character of the virgins. But now comes the test. Only one-half of those who go forth to meet the bridegroom are ready to enter in with him to the marriage, while the other half are making ready the door is shut; they are too late, and they follow after and call unto the Lord to open to them; the answer is, "Verily I say unto you, I know you not." Is this not a great lesson to every one who is looking for Jesus (the bridegroom) to descend from heaven and gather his saints (the bride) to meet the Lord in the air? where I believe the marriage feast will be celebrated. Let us all inquire within ourselves: Am I ready if the Lord should come now, or is there some earthly toy that binds me down? Let us hold the things of earth with a loose hand and ever remember the words of the Lord Jesus.

Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.

Sound religious experience has for its basis sound doctrine. It rests on the word of God. Its type is thoroughness. As far as it goes, whatever degree of advancement it has reached, it is solid. It is established upon the Rock. It stands when the storms beat. There is soundness in conversion, soundness in the experience of entire sanctification, and soundness in the advancement to still higher attainments. It is a radical experience. It changes the whole man. It will stand the test. It is full of Jesus. It has eternal life. It is accompanied with holy boldness to stand up and testify for Jesus.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 23, 1879.

We occupy but little space this week, choosing to give room for the communications of others.

THANKS for papers and pamphlets from different individuals. Have received a pamphlet from Brother Wm. H. Wilson, entitled, "The Infidel Silenced," which, owing to absence from home, we have not had time to read, but will notice hereafter.

[Prophetic Times.]

The Dispensation of his Coming.

While the saints will be in the air with Christ, a dispensation of the same length of time will be given to those left in the earth. It will not be an extension of the Christian dispensation. That, with all its probationary privileges, and gracious influences, and glorious rewards, will not extend beyond the restoration of Jewish nationality; for then the mystery of God in taking a people out of the Gentiles for his name, to complete the church, will be finished; and the result of the dispensations of grace, as foreseen and predetermined, will have been achieved. The number of believers in Christ, under the new covenant, will equal the number of the children of Israel under the old or Sinaitic covenant. The grafted branches, the Gentile believers, taken from the wild olive tree, will equal the number of natural branches broken off the good olive tree because of unbelief. The redemption of an elect and peculiar people to be kings and priests in the coming kingdom will be consummated, and the means and instrumentalities of that redemption will be employed no more. The gospel of the kingdom will be no longer preached or, if preached, will not be attended by the Holy Spirit for the regeneration of them that shall hear it; for the Master of the house, having risen up and shut the door, all further efforts to obtain the great salvation will be in vain.

But the end of this age or dispensation will not be the end of the world or kosmos—the heavens and earth which are now, which began at the deluge, and will continue until the kingdom of God shall come. There have been several dispensations during the course of this world, and the dispensation of his coming belongs to, and will be, the final one, intended to prepare the way for the manifestation of the kingdom of heaven. The translation of the saints will not produce any change in the physical condition of the earth and its atmosphere, nor in the politics of the world, nor in its moral and religious institutions. It will produce great consternation for a time, and arouse attention to the advent of Christ, as it will be evidence of his having come to the air where the saints shall meet him. Then there will be great searching of heart among all mere professors and formalists who shall be left in the earth, for they will then see that they have built on the sand, and multitudes will anxiously inquire, "What shall we do?" And the answer will be in the words of the angel of Rev. xiv. 6, 7, which represents the ministry which will be raised up for that age: "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." It will be a time of judgment, having reference to the subjection of the nations to the divine government, when to Zion shall come the first dominion, and the kingdom to the daughter of Jerusalem. The restoration of Jewish nationality, at the beginning of this period, will be followed by a rapid emigration of Jews from all countries to Palestine, taking their gold and silver with them, and settling the land after their old estates. In this they will be aided by the people of the countries where they are scattered; for after the translation of the saints it will become evident to many that the prophecies concerning the restoration and supremacy of Israel will all be fulfilled, and they will seek their favor by facilitating their return, anticipating the speedy coming of Christ and his saints to establish his kingdom, and reign in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously.

But the delay or tarrying of the Lord with his saints in the air will give time to test the disposition of the nations toward his people, and to develop the hostility of the rulers of this world to the new order of things which will gradually be manifested as the Jewish nation shall exhibit great wealth and prosperity, and become the centre of commerce, civilization, and political influence in the earth. The duration of this dispensation is indicated in Micah vii. 15. "According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I show unto him marvelous things." Those days were forty years, and so we conclude that this future dispensation of trial and judgment will be forty years. And the prophet adds, "The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might; they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf. They shall lick the dust like a serpent, they shall move out of their holes like worms of the earth; they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall fear because of thee." Micah vii. 17, 18. They will be afraid of the Lord, who, though unseen, will be declared to be in the air with his saints, and expected to come and establish his kingdom at Jerusalem. And they will be afraid of the Jewish nation whose great wealth and influence will excite their cupidity and jealousy. And when years shall have passed of the Lord's tarrying, they will cease to fear him, and begin to vex and injure the Jews, until at last they shall combine under the leadership of Gog and come up against the land of Israel, an immense army, to waste and destroy, and to lay their hands on the treasures of silver and gold. This invasion will issue in the battle of the great day of God Almighty. And when all nations shall be in the siege at Jerusalem and the city shall be taken and pillaged; then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations, and his appearing shall fill them with consternation and dismay; and they shall slay one another until but a sixth part of them shall be left. And the Lord shall come, and all his saints with him. Then the Jews will look upon him whom they had pierced, and confess him as their Messiah, saying, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Of this wonderful event the case of Saul of Tarsus, on his way to Damascus, was a type. In his Jewish blindness he verily thought he ought to do all in his power against Christianity, and was exulting in anticipation of the havoc he would make of the followers of Jesus, when the light, more brilliant than the sun, shone around him and the love of the Lord Jesus appeared to him in a glorious form; turning him from a bitter enemy to a loving friend, and he says: "For this cause I obtained mercy that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all long suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to everlasting life." 1 Tim. i. 16. He was not a pattern for those who believe the gospel, as he was not the first to believe the gospel, nor was he a pattern to the Gentiles; for Gentiles are not favored with the light from heaven and personal appearing of the Lord. But he is a pattern to those Jews to whom Jesus will appear when he shall go forth against those nations who shall be gathered against Jerusalem to battle in the hereafter of which Paul speaks.

The Revival of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Among all the desolations which for more than eighteen centuries have brooded over the land of Israel, which once flowed with milk and honey, the memorials of ruined Sodom, Gomorrah, and the Cities of the Plain have been the most remarkable. And whatever indications of hope and promise have been noted in the soil and climate of that land, there have been few rays of light shooting through the clouds that overhang the site of those doomed and desolate cities. In the recent governmental and social changes affecting the welfare of Palestine, in railway enterprises and other tokens of progress, there has been little to give much encouragement as to the future of this locality. But recent discoveries seem to indicate that the productive resources of even this desolate region are worthy of attention, especially the stores of natural combustibles which abound there. Says a secular paper:

"Hitherto the main obstacle to the development of steam traffic in the Levant has been the total absence of combustible material. Not only Egypt, but the shores of Syria and the Red Sea are completely stripped of wood; and the coal imported from the west commands a price ranging from $10 to $21 a ton. Now the masses of asphalt continually thrown up by the Dead Sea attest the presence of vast subterrean layers of fossil vegetable matter, and these signs were not overlooked by the enterprising men attracted to Suez by the opening of the canal and the movement of commerce in that direction. Recently numerous soundings have been made between Jaffa and the Dead Sea, which so far, have not disclosed any deposits of coal proper, but, on the other hand, have laid bare inexhaustible beds of lignite,—a kind of woody coal, in which the grain of the wood remains visible.

"Of itself this store of lignite is likely to prove an inestimable gain to the industries and commerce of the Levant; but we should add that the juxtaposition of asphalt in great quantities furnishes the elements of a mixture of lignite and asphaltum in the form of bricks, which is equal in heating capacity to the richest bituminous coal, while its cost on the ground is only $2.50 a ton. It is known that similar bricks, made up of coal dust and bituminous debris from gas works, are much sought after by French railways, since, besides their heating power, they greatly facilitate stowage, owing to their regular shape. Of course the bitumen of lower Palestine has been known from immemorial times, and was used to impart solidity to the structures of unbaked clay in Assyria and Egypt; but it may be said that the discovery of the subterranean combustible has lifted once for all the curse which has so long rested upon Sodom and Gomorrah, and will transform the wasted shores of the dead sea into a focus of industry and magazine of wealth."

Thus speaks the secular press. But the student of Scripture can hardly fail to recall with fresh interest the words of the prophet Ezekiel, where he says to Jerusalem: "Thy elder sister is Samaria, she and her daughters that dwell at thy left hand; and thy younger sister, that dwelleth at thy right hand, is Sodom and her daughters. When I shall bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them: that thou mayest bear thine own shame, and mayest be confounded in all that thou hast done, in that thou art a comfort unto them. When thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate. For thus saith the Lord God: I will even deal with thee as thou hast done, which hast despised the oath in breaking the covenant. Nevertheless, I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant. Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thy elder and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for daughters, but not by thy covenant. And I will establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord; that thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord God." Ezekiel xvi. 46-63.

Jeremiah's House-Lot.

"So Hanameel mine uncle's son came to me in the court of the prison, according to the word of the Lord, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the country of Benjamin: for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord. And I bought the field of Hanameel my uncle's son, . . . and weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver." And of this field he took what we call a warranty deed of Hanameel, signed and witnessed, and delivered, which he gave to Baruch, to be put in an "earthen vessel," to be kept many days. "For thus saith the Lord, . . . Houses and fields and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land." See Jer. xxxii. 8-15.

Now, why did Jeremiah buy this property for himself, knowing as he did that his people were to be in captivity in Babylon seventy years? He could not expect to live to the end of that time, to return and occupy his purchased possession. But Ezek. xlv. tells us that when the land is divided by lot, a portion, called the "holy portion," shall be 25,000 reeds long and 10,000 wide. And this portion is for the priests, the ministers of the sanctuary, "a place for their houses." In this portion of the land Jeremiah has a deed of his future house-lot. The inheritance is his by birthright, and he has bought the redemption, and his deed will hold it against all subsequent claimants.

But the Eastern question is not yet settled. The Turk will soon be compelled to relinquish his claim on the land of Palestine; for Christ and antichrist will not both reign over the same territory at the same time. Christ will soon take the throne of his father David (Luke i. 32), and blot out the present wicked governments of the land promised to the fathers, and being in the living saints and the righteous dead by a resurrection to life immortal. Jeremiah, being raised to life, will bring forward his old deed, and lawfully claim the land he bought of Hanameel, his uncle's son. "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare; before they spring forth I tell you of them." Isa. xlii. 9.)

The captivity in Babylon is passed; Jeremiah has bought his house-lot; but he is now dead; and the new things declared are the resurrection of the righteous dead, and Jeremiah's claim to his inheritance. How wonderful are the ways of God! The Bible student need not be ignorant of the future, which is so clearly revealed. There are many other things to be looked into hereafter, such as the tree of life (Rev. xxii. 2), and the "hidden manna" (Rev. ii. 17).

NEWS ITEMS.

April 22.—August Belmont, the well-known banker and politician, of New York, was thrown from his carriage to-day, and probably fatally injured.

CALCUTTA, April 21.—The continued drouth causes much anxiety. There has been hardly any rain in Bengal since Christmas.

LONDON, April 22 12 M.—Intelligence has just reached this city from South Africa that Ekowe was relieved on the 4th inst., after severe fighting.

Advices from Capetown, April 9, via St. Vincent, say: Lord Chelmsford's camp at Gingle-Lova, on the road to Ekowe, was attacked at daybreak, April 2, by 11,000 Zulus, who made frequent and desperate attacks on all sides, but were repulsed and pursued with great loss. Four hundred and seventy-one Zulus were found dead around the trenches. The final attack was led by Dobeclumanzi, who commanded at Isandula. Lieutenant Johnson, of the ninety-ninth regiment, and four privates were killed. Colonel Northey, of the sixtieth regiment, the surgeon and fifteen men were severely wounded. Colonel Crealock, Major Barron and ten men were wounded.

A Capetown dispatch of April 8 says, in a fight between Colonel Wood's command and the Zulus, on the 26th of March, the retreat of the Zulus was cut off, and a hand-to-hand fight ensued. Colonel Weatherly and his son, Captain Barton, Baron Von Steitkneker and seventy men were killed, and on the 29th Lieutenants Nicholson and Bright were killed; Major Hacket [illegible] Lieutenant Smith and Captains Gardiner, Cox and Pearse were wounded. The total of the British losses in both engagements is estimated at 220 killed and wounded. The Zulus lost 2,500 men.

CHICAGO, April 20.—About 1,100 Communists paraded the streets here to-day, and displayed inflamatory banners. About 400 of them were armed. No disturbance occurred.

LONDON, April 20.—Reuter's dispatch from Bombay says, that according to intelligence received there from Mandalay the king declared to his counsellors that fear had heretofore made him yield to the British demands, but henceforth he would neither listen to nor speak of proposals for accommodation with England.

BELGRADE, April 20.—Eight thousand Servian troops proceeding by forced marches were expected to reach Kurshumlie on Sunday. Severe fighting is expected. The Albanians, whose number is estimated at upward of 4,000, are divided into two columns, which have advanced, one six and the other two and a half hours' march, within the Servian frontier, massacreing and burning as they proceed.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I am doing all I can to spread the truth. I send my aunt THE RESTITUTION when I read it—Mrs. T. B. Greer, Evansville, Ark. I hope they will become interested; they would have such a good influence. My uncle has been selling goods to the Cherokee Indians for about eight years. My uncle has built the church, deeded town lots, and pays a preacher to come from Benton county to preach for them every month, in the Baptist faith. Oh, that they would preach as the Baptists did in 1600! but, alas! they preach entirely a different doctrine. I read in THE RESTITUTION of Brother Heron, who resides in Benton county. If he has an opportunity I hope he will call at my uncle's, and preach for them. I think my aunt is some interested in the faith. He will inquire for T. B. Greer, Greersburg, Ark. Hope my aunt reads THE RESTITUTION without prejudice, and will soon teach the glorious good news of the kingdom, that when our Savior appears she will receive a crown of life that fadeth not away.

Your sister, in hope of eternal life.

MRS LOU. BUTLER.

Memphis, Tex.

Editor Restitution:—I was called to hold a discussion at Gifford Station with Mr. Barker, a Baptist preacher. I went with the sword of the spirit, and depended upon the spirit to use it, knowing that "big I" could not use such a sword.

The result is I baptized fourteen and have three more to baptize when I return to renew the meeting. I have never witnessed such a complete victory for the truth. The spirit in which the truth was presented won the good feelings of the whole community.

I would say, the peculiar climate of Iowa is breaking down my voice, and as I am dependent upon talking (as that is my ability), I would notify my brethren that I desire changing my field of labor, and if I do not I may be obliged to return to labor at something else. "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country," and especially one who has only been preaching three years. There is too much jealousy among older people. I have been most of the time in evangelist fields, and my work has been in the territory of other preachers. I only preach for one church, and what little they pay is all I get; they do all they can. I had engaged at another place at ten dollars per week, and held a meeting there on trial for two weeks, and did not get one convert. It was the only meeting I ever held without good additions. So I had to give up the appointment. I think there were too many idle, jealous preachers there to effect anything until they would go to work. I have the greatest success in the evangelist field, but cannot always work in new places without help.

I am now ready to receive a call from any other state or return to labor in the shop. I will pray over the matter and do with my might what the Lord has for me to do.

J. W. HAUGHAWOUT.

Exhortation.

As we see the prophetic Scriptures being rapidly fulfilled it must be apparent to every thinking mind that we are upon the threshold of the new and glorious dispensation when earth's rightful ruler will take his blood-washed throng to a place of refuge while a wicked world undergoes the fearful retribution of a long-suffering Creator, when the seven vials of the wrath of God shall be poured out without mixture of mercy upon the sinful inhabitants who have so long rejected the Son of his love, and chose death rather than life. Oh, friendly sinner, let me exhort you to turn in with offered mercy before the death-angel shall snap asunder the brittle thread of life, or the coming of our Redeemer find thee unprepared! The great day of separation may be near. Oh, how heart-rending will the stern realities of that day be when husband and wife may bid each other an eternal farewell! When some will have to say, farewell, father and mother, who have often prayed for me; farewell, Jesus, who died to redeem me; farewell, bright crown, purchased by thy blood; farewell, forever. Oh, dear reader, flee to Jesus, that he may shield thee from the impending wrath that already hangs over a sinful world and give thee a crown of life and an inheritance in that gem-built city, and the privilege to ramble in the Edenic bowers of the glad garden of God and eat of the ambrosial fruits of life's fair tree, and bathe your weary souls in the pellucid waters of life's beautiful river. Oh, how my heart thrills with joy in hope of being among that number prepared to meet and welcome our Redeemer and the bright seraphic hosts upon the crystal sea.

BREVITIES.

The greatest activity prevails in carrying out the preliminary measures for the construction of the submarine tunnel between Calais and Dover. No less than 7,971 soundings have been taken, which have brought up 3,207 specimens of different geological formations. The tunnel, which is to be 22½ miles long, will be dug through a stratum of gray chalk.

At the beginning of this century the Jews in Jerusalem did not exceed 300, but in the past ten years, owing to the removal of restrictions, the influx has been great. Nearly all the old houses, as they became vacant, have been bought by them, and a great many new ones have been built in all parts of the town. Schools, hospitals, and religious associations have been started, and the population has increased to over 13,000.

Four Turkish officers were recently baptized into the Russian Church at Sebastopol, where they had been held as prisoners of war. During their stay there they had established such a friendship with their former foes, that when the time came for their release they reluctantly returned to Turkey. When they reached their Turkish quarters, the Sultan's Government refused to pay them for the twenty-two months they had been prisoners in Russia, and so they determined to go back to Sebastopol and become subjects of the Czar. To do so properly and acceptably, they embraced Christianity. At their baptism the most prominent Russians of the place quarreled with each other for the honor of being the godfathers of the new Christians, who at once acquired many powerful friends and patrons. There have recently been other cases of the baptism of Turkish men and women in Russia. Then several Russian regiments adopted Turkish orphans found on battlefields or in the deserted villages during the late war. The orphans, when baptized, received the names of the regiments adopting them, and these regiments agreed to support them till they are of age.

Cochabamba, the granary of Bolivia, and the most productive section of the country, is now the scene of famine. From the 1st to the 20th of January last the dead bodies of eighty-one persons who had succumbed to hunger were found in the streets and conveyed to the hospital. During the same period 125 persons died in the hospital of hunger and misery, making a total in twenty days of 206 victims, or ten per day. If the benevolent societies had not come forward many others would have perished in like manner.

A gentleman in Washington has received a letter from the United States Consul at Tangiers, dated March 19, giving a terrible account of the famine, cholera and typhus fever that have been raging in Morocco. In the city of Morocco the daily deaths from typhus ranged from 200 to 250. So great was the starvation and suffering that parents ate their children, and in other places the dead were devoured by the living. Bodies were half buried, or wholly unburied, and the atmosphere was poisoned by the horrible effluvia arising from them. Nearly half of the European residents had succumbed. The Moslems would buy the garments of the dead, and, putting them on, themselves soon fall victims to the plague.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Greek Proverb: In heaven hands clasp forever.

Johnson: The sublimity of wisdom is to do those things living, which are to be desired when dying.

Rev. E. P. John Hall: The best way for a man to get out of a lowly position is to be effectively conspicuous in it.

The Christian is very frequently the only Bible the world will read. How sad that the copy should be so defaced.

Lord Byron writes: "I date my first impression against religion from having witnessed how little its votaries were actuated by true Christian charity."

"Doctor," said a gentleman to his pastor, "how can I best train up my boy in the way he should go?" "By going that way yourself," blandly replied the pastor.

Sickness or health our earthly portion,
Riches or need our lot;
Whether our loved ones yet are with us,
Or, "called of God," are not;
Bravely we walk amid the shadows,
Or tread the thorny way;
God walks with us—a living presence—
And night is turned to day.

Life is a book of which we can never have but one edition. Let each day's actions, as they add their pages to the indestructible volume, be such as we shall be willing to have an assembled world read.

Dr. Pusey: Pray modestly as to the things of this life; earnestly for what may be helps to your salvation; intensely for salvation itself, that you may ever behold God, love God. Practice in life whatever you pray for, and God will give it you more abundantly.

Said a landlord of a public house, at the verge of death, "If I had my time to live over again, I would sweep crossings, or beg, or even starve to death, before I would again see the misery which I and my trade have produced."

"Pilgrim, are thy crosses growing
Heavier, and the journey long?
Art thou saddened by the knowing
Right is conquered by the wrong?
Strive a little longer, bearing
All, though drooping spirits mourn;
Crowns will be more worth the wearing,
If the cross be nobly borne."

How heavy and damp would our atmosphere become if deprived of the light of the sun to disperse the mists and vapors of the night. So with moral character without the love of God. It is, in reality, a delusion, if depended upon to save the soul. Such a dependence will deceive to ruin.

As you love your souls, beware of the world; it has slain its thousands and ten thousands. What ruined Lot's wife? the world. What ruined Achan? the world. What ruined Haman? the world. What ruined Judas? the world. What ruined Simon Magus? the world. What ruined Demas? the world. And what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

POETRY.

"The Lord is Coming."

E. C. C.

"This was the joyous and usual salutation used by the members of the church apostolic, in the second and third centuries. How much more should we, upon whom the morning of the resurrection is about to break, use the same soul-reviving expression."—Int. Millenarian, June 1, 1844.

The Lord is coming! let this be
The herald note of Jubilee,—
And when we meet, and when we part,
The salutation from the heart.

The Lord is coming! sound it forth
From east to west—from south to north,
Speed on! speed on! the tidings glad,
That none who love him may be sad.

The Lord is coming! saints, rejoice!
We seem to hear his glorious voice,
Majestic uttered from afar
As on he hastes his conquering car.

The Lord is coming! fearful, dire
Are all his judgments and his ire,
And none can hope to 'scape his wrath,
Who walk not in the "narrow path."

The Lord is coming! seas, retire!
Ye mountains melt to liquid fire!
Ye oceans cease to ebb and flow!
His stately steppings ye should know!

The Lord is coming! who shall stand?
Who shall be found at his right hand?
He that hath the garments on
That the Righteous King hath won.

The Lord is coming! watch and pray!
Watch ye, and "haste unto the day,"
So shall thou then escape the "snare,"
And Christ's eternal glory share.

The Lord is coming! let this be
The herald-note of Jubilee,
And often as we meet and part
The salutation from the heart.

Baptism in Its Relation to Remission of Sins.

I have heard it asserted in the pulpit that persons "should be baptized because their sins have been forgiven." If this assertion is true, none should be baptized but those who have received the forgiveness of sins, and have the knowledge of forgiveness. But how can a person know that his sins have been forgiven? I suppose the answer would be, "By the Holy Spirit." Then the Holy Spirit should, in every case, be given before baptism is administered. But, as a general thing, in the days of the apostles, the Holy Spirit was given after baptism. There is but one exception to this rule—the case of Cornelius and his household. The three thousand on the day of Pentecost, the Samaritans, Acts viii. 5-17, the twelve disciples at Ephesus, Acts xix. 1-7, all received the Holy Spirit after baptism. Let those who take the case of Cornelius and his household as an example, be sure that the subjects of baptism give the same evidence that they have received the Holy Spirit, that Cornelius and his household gave, that of speaking in "tongues."

Suppose, instead of going to Cesarea for a "beginning," we go to Jerusalem, remembering that Jesus said to his disciples when he opened their understandings that they might understand the Scriptures: "That thus it behooved the Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Luke xxiv. 44-47.

Peter, on the day of Pentecost, at Jerusalem, preached, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, repentance and remission of sins in the name of the Anointed Jesus, to the multitudes, in answer to the enquiry, "What shall we do?" "Repent," said he, "and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Acts ii. 38. In examining this important text, three things are to be considered:

1. Peter was addressing unpardoned sinners. While in that state they could not be baptized, because their sins had been forgiven.

2. They were to receive the Holy Spirit after baptism, therefore the gift of the spirit could not be a witness of the forgiveness of their sins before baptism.

3. They were commanded to "repent and be baptized."

These two words are united together by the copulative conjunction "and." We cannot separate them and say that they were to "repent" in order to remission of sins, and to be baptized because of remission of sins, without adding to the word of the Lord. By doing so we should make baptism a sign of remission of sins, whereas it is a sign of repentance. Those enquirers were certainly required to repent in order to remission of sins; and this fact is sufficient to determine the meaning of the word "for" placed before the word "remission." The adjunct "for remission of sins," according to the construction of the language, qualifies "repent" and "be baptized;" tells what they were to repent and be baptized for. Now, as they were to repent to obtain remission of sins, they were to be baptized for the same object. And let it not be supposed that this conclusion in any way militates against the doctrine of justification by faith. Can a person be justified by faith without repentance? Certainly not. Then, if baptism is a sign of repentance, and the sinner is required to repent before being forgiven, may he not be required to signify his repentance by being baptized before he obtains forgiveness, and yet be justified by faith? Not only is the sinner required to repent, but also to "turn" in order that his sins may "be blotted out." "Repent and turn," said Peter, "that your sins may be blotted out." Acts iii. 19, American Bible Union Translation.

A sinner cannot turn to God without obeying him. If baptism is a sign of repentance, it is the first act of obedience, or the turning point in the sinner's life. He is buried with Christ by baptism, or by being baptized into Christ's death, in order that, as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so he should walk in newness of life. Rom. vi. 4. That baptism is a sign of repentance is evident from what is said about John's ministry. "John came baptizing in the wilderness, and preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Mark i. 4; see also Luke iii. 3. Baptism is a significant rite; the baptism of repentance is the baptism that relates to, or belongs to repentance; it must, therefore, if it signifies anything, signify repentance on the part of the person or persons baptized. This is confirmed by the fact, that those who were brought to repentance by John's preaching, were baptized "confessing their sins;" Matt. iii. 5, 6, and also by John's declaration, "I baptize you in water unto (eis, with respect to) repentance." As the Jews understood the design of baptism as preached and administered by John, when they heard Peter say, "Repent and be baptized upon the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins," they would understand that they were to repent, and signify the same by being baptized; and that their baptism was to have special reference to Jesus as the Messiah, through whom they were to receive remission of sins. Understanding this, they were baptized immediately, without waiting for prayers, or any other ceremony. And so it was in every case in those primitive times, except Paul, who was chided for his delay. Acts xxii. 16. Whenever persons hearing the gospel, made up their minds to turn to God and follow Christ, they were baptized immediately.

From all of these evidences and considerations, I come to the conclusion that the only prerequisites of baptism are faith and repentance, and that no minister has any authority to ask the applicant this question, requiring an affirmative answer: "Do you believe that God, has for Christ's sake, forgiven your sins?" and no authority to take persons into Christian fellowship, and put off baptism three or four, or six months, for convenience. Let us go back to the "beginning" and start right. The beginning was at Jerusalem.

Elkhorn, Pa.

The One Hope No. 10.

I remember the Savior said that of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh and that he commanded to pull out the beam in thine own eye in order to see clearly how to extract the mote in a brother's eye, but I believe that I have shown clearly and with all humility that the reason the orthodox look upon death as they do is because they are compelled to, by what they believe i. e. that the soul of man is immortal. And one must see that if this is so death is not death, but is better expressed by a moving out, for in that case nothing dies, for the body is not alive at any time it only seems to be to us while the soul is in it and when the immortal soul, which gives it the appearance of life while it possesses it, moves out to us it seems to die. But nothing dies, on the hypothesis that the soul is immortal it only seems to us to be so, but we are deceived and the Bible—which says "thou shalt die" and also the Apostle Peter saith "that soul shall be destroyed" is literally wrong. Do not understand, says the orthodox that the Bible is wrong for "we would cross the Atlantic to bring a man nearer to Christ," but that your literal understanding of it is wrong; in a word such texts as those quoted above wherever found in the Bible or out of it must have a magical interpretation in order to make them harmonize with the doctrine of the soul's immortality which we orthodox do most heartily believe, and although not definitely revealed in the Bible yet we take it for granted to be a Scriptural doctrine without its being anywhere strictly or literally revealed. Now if in this supposed statement I have misrepresented the orthodox faith by discoloring it in any way I am not aware of it and if I have stated their faith fairly then as faith generates hope, it will follow that their hope is to have the conscious and immortal soul go to heaven or Paradise when they seem to us to die but infact move out; that is the soul moves out of the body. All can see that the center of all such hope is in the soul's moving out at what seems to us to be death. Well, sir, what can you say against it if it is as you have shown? Why! sir, you doubtless know the fact and if I state it again will remember that the orthodox as I have shown hold the doctrine of the immortality of the soul not as a Bible doctrine being literally revealed nor any where clearly expressed; but they assume that the Bible assumes it without any such expression any where in it. I was preaching in Penn, at one time occupying a so-called orthodox pulpit and among other things I said I would obligate myself to pay any person $1000 for the two words in connection in King James' version "immortal soul." I further said I would not be very particular what were the connecting words to make out the sentence, and further I would get down upon my knees before the public and confess my hitherto ignorant opposition to truth and I promised the tinder of the two scriptural words that I would never upon the conviction that it was a doctrine of the Bible preach against the doctrine any more. I say so now.

Let the reader examine the subject and he will find it just as the clergyman of the orthodox pulpit which I was then occupying told his son, who hearing the proposition I had made and seeing its fairness, not being able to put his own finger on the passage went to his father in full confidence that his father knew where to find it and said to his father, "The preacher has made a proposition" and stated it saying, "Now, father I want you to tell me where I can find it and I will fetch him; there is no mistake about that." Well! says the father, you will not find it. Not find it, said the son with surprise well, what is the reason I shall not find it? Because, said the father it is not there.

Thus I have proved by an orthodox clergyman to his son that they know that the Bible does not teach the immortality of the human soul; yet they hate me and if the gentleman that would come across the Atlantic to bring souls nearer to Christ speaks the words of soberness and is a true representative of the orthodox in his action of not mixing in any way with and discountenancing the conference or me for believing more in the words of Paul and Daniel than any man in these perilous times and especially if their words claim to be supported by scripture and cannot be found therein, you can all see that the hope of the orthodox cannot be the hope of our calling for that is a hope of eternal life as the gift of God through his Son to be possessed by the dead by means of a resurrection at the coming of the Lord, as that is the time of the consummation of "the hope of the gospel." There is a Christ in this hope, and a work for a Christ to do, but there is no Christ in the ortoodox hope nor any need of one, for he would have nothing more to do to have it consummated than he would in the spiritualist's or moralist's or even the universalists hope for if the immortal soul is in and goes out to consummate death and comes back to produce the resurrection, then Christ is not the resurrection and the life as He said and the grossness of the pretension is seen, and also the hollowness of Paul's statement that Christ hath abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel and his saying, that to all those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor and immortality, God would finally award eternal life. Are all these scriptures with many more to be taken as not meaning what they say, and must they be given a magical touch by uninspired man before they can or must be received? How can they be resisted by a plea of this kind and the person thus resisting them not be found guilty of what Paul said would come to pass in the perilous times of the last days and if such resistance is resisting the truth as he said there would be, there is an incumbent duty for me to do, as he directs that instead of siding and abetting or in any way giving aid and comfort to them, he says "from such turn away." Shall we obey him or shall we try to popularize a truth at the expense of "the truth" for their benefit? Readers with this, No. 1 shall discontinue the subject. If in the foregoing I have misrepresented any one's faith or hope, I ask pardon being not aware of it. You, my reader, must and will judge whether I have dealt fairly or not, and also which of all the classes have the gospel hope and may God enable you to see clearly, as the writer thinks he sees, the hope of the gospel and to lay hold upon it and be saved by it finally and sanctified through it in this mortal life is the prayer of your humble servant.

C. F. SWEET.

By Faith.

Yes, Brother Reave; and were it proper in your sight, I would gladly make several quotations from your article, and say yes, heartily. But as the opportunity may never again occur, allow me to add a brief specimen of what duty demands:

I. You say: "We have it (the Spirit) by faith....because the spirit gave the words that produced it," etc.

Again: "Good fruit is always the product of a good tree." And you add: "I believe it." Very well, so far, if this were all. But it is obvious to remark that the branch bears not the root; but that the root bears both the branch and its fruit, too. This logically assigns to the Spirit its proper authorship of the word of faith, and so makes it the root of the tree that bears the good fruits of love, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Gal. v. 22; 1 Thess. i. 6.

II. You say again: "I think the Holy Spirit dwells in us as Jesus does." Yes, of course. This was and is the chosen text on this subject. Eph. iii. 17. "That Christ might dwell in your hearts by faith. And if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his; and if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness." This is the Spirit that quickeneth the dead." Rom. viii. 9-11; v. 23.

III. This, given copiously to the Apostles by Jesus, and at Pentecost, John xx. 21-23; Acts ii. 4; is yet to be poured out upon all flesh. Acts ii. 17-20. Joel ii. 28-32; Zech. xii. 10. At the unveiling of Israel and all peoples. Isa. xxv. 7-9. Of course the Spirit's plenitude is yet to be realized.

IV. The Messiah was long known only by faith in promise; then further in his humiliation; but it remains for him to be fully seen and appreciated in the glory of his royal priesthood in his kingdom! This all should understand. Hence, as we do not for such cause regard Christ, at second-hand, even while his glory is not fully disclosed, so we should not regard the Holy Spirit in that light. Nay, further:

V. God himself was revealed to Israel, by signs and wonders, and their national deliverance, and inheritance in their land by Moses and Joshua; and yet, beyond all that, he greatly enlarged on his still future, and more abundant blessing to them under the Messiah—the new covenant, and the throne and the mercy, established in "the rebuilt tabernacle of David." Isa. xvi.; Jer. xxxi. However, as the Lord was God, and Jesus was the Messiah, so the Holy Spirit is the Spirit received by the hearing of faith, through this gospel age. Gal. iii.

Then, the Spirit of truth, as embraced in our subject, is as comprehensive as it is profound; for inasmuch as we know God the Creator, as revealed at and in creation, and also to Moses and Israel by faith. Heb. xi. 3, Nay, further, as we thus know Jesus, the Messiah, only as he had been revealed in promise, in the foreshadows of the temple worship, and in his power to heal, open the gospel, and raise the dead; so, precisely, we having heard that there is an Holy Ghost, Acts xix. 2-6, and knowing it by faith—we find that no man, except by this spirit, can call Jesus Lord to the glory of God the Father. 1 Cor. xii. 3; Matt. xvi. 16; John xv. 26; 2 Cor. iii. 5-6.

However, we contemplate the Divine Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier, in the baptismal formula—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—we understand (it only) by faith," Heb. xi., (by believing the record he has given us). Hence I dare not deny, disparage, or even disturb one term rather than the other two, in baptism or the apostolic benediction. 2 Cor. xiii. 14. This fellowship is filled by the communion of the Holy Ghost.

The revelation of God to man was gradual and progressive through over four thousand years. It has been on the line of this hymn:

"More and more, more and more,
Ever more to follow."

Thus may we grow in grace and knowledge—not anchor back in a theory, and so stagnate or starve out our life, but anchor ahead within the veil. Heb. vi. 19, 20.

Please note: The Spirit, as well as the Word, was prominent in creation. Gen. i. 2; Job xxvi. 13; Psa. civ. 30. Now all I ask is to allow its revealed place and blessed functions in redemption. John vi. 63; xvi. 7-13; 1 Cor. xii.

"By faith"—by believing God—Father, Son and Spirit, we rest in the Rock of ages. Isa. xxvi. 4, and avoid the contraband theories that underlie all sects, from Rome to the Rocky Mountain Mormons! Nay, more: "By faith we please God," and may well hope to be enrolled among the worthies, the general assembly and chosen of the first-born. Heb. xi. and xii. "In the love of the Spirit." Rom. xv. 30.

The Spirits in Prison. 1 Peter iii. 19, 20.

"Quickened by the Spirit; by which also he went and preached." Noah was a prophet, as his wonderful prediction concerning the three grand divisions of the human race proves. Gen. ix. 25-27. And it was "the spirit of Christ" which testified in the prophets, that is, they "spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." 1 Peter i. 11; 2 Peter i. 21. Hence it was not personally, but by this spirit, that he went and preached," through Noah; just as by the same Holy Spirit, inspiring his apostles, he "came and preached" unto the Ephesians. He did not go personally to Ephesus. Eph. ii. 17. "Unto the spirits." Persons in flesh and blood are called "souls" in the next verse—"eight souls were saved by water." And John is evidently alluding to false teachers in flesh and blood when he says, "believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world." 1 John iv. 1.

"In prison." This also is easily understood when we remember that persons in an ignorant and sinful state are said to be "bound" and to be "prisoners;" but when enlightened and pardoned they are "delivered" and "free." Heb. ii. 15; 1 Pet. ii. 16. Their enlightenment and conversion is "the opening of the prison to them that are bound" Isa. xlii. 7; lxi. 1. Especially was this language applicable in the days of Noah when "the earth was filled with violence," and the day of execution had been appointed, and yet the Lord offered, through Noah's preaching, a pardon and release to all who would repent. This text is therefore not involved in such profound mystery as some people imagine.

Book Notices.

I beg leave to take this opportunity of announcing that I expect my new book, "The Gospel of the Kingdom, advocated in a series of Ten Discourses," to be returned from the binders and ready for delivery to purchasers about the 28th of April. Subscriptions have been received from Canada in the bleak north, to Florida in the sunny south, and Texas in the far west. Many thanks to the kind brethren and sisters who have given me such encouragement, but above all, to our heavenly Father for giving me health to complete the work. The book sent by mail will be only one dollar per volume. Do not send the money except by postoffice order or registered letter. Orders will be thankfully received and promptly attended to.

DIED.

ALLING—At his residence in Norwalk, Ct., April 17, 1879, Elder Prudee Alling, in the seventy-first year of his age.

Bro. Alling was converted to Christ in Rochester, N. Y., in the winter of 1826-7, and united with the Presbyterian church soon after. He soon after accepted the Advent message as announced by William Miller. He was among the first to proclaim the message in Ohio. Early in the movement in this state, he was set apart as an Elder, and when the present organization of the Norwalk church was established, he was appointed one of the Elders of it, which office he has since retained. In his younger days brother Alling took an active part in proclaiming the gospel message, and though not gifted as a speaker, yet he advocated to the best of his ability and in a fearless manner the truths for which he was willing to sacrifice all that he had. As a writer, brother Alling was well known, as his name is familiar to the readers of every periodical devoted to the spread of Advent truth. In his death the Norwalk church has sustained an irreparable loss, society a useful member, and the family a loved and loving husband and father, and all alike mourn his loss. Yet we do not mourn as those who have no hope, for we know that just as sure as that Jesus died and rose again, so sure will those that sleep in Jesus be brought together to life eternal when Jesus appears.

During his sickness his sufferings were great, his disease being erysipelas of the most malignant type, which terminated his life after an illness of eleven days. A large congregation of sympathizing friends gathered to lay him away to sleep with the silent ones till Jesus comes. Words of comfort by the writer from Job v. 26.

POETRY.

Cometh Rest.

L. M. BURGESS.

Into the griefs and trials, Lord,
That throng my weary breast,
The anxious wishes and desires
With which I am possessed
Cometh rest.

When sleepless at the midnight hour
My heart stands all confessed
And naked, trembling at thy power,
Penitent and oppressed,
Cometh rest.

Like as a father pitieth,
And "I will give thee rest!"
Fall like a flood of golden light,
And to my soul distressed
Cometh rest.

But a little while and His foot-steps fall
On the shores that knew Him best;
He will reign supreme in His gracious power,
When none His power contest,
Cometh rest.

To the weary and heavy laden heart,
To the fainting foot-steps, rest!
To the soul athirst for right, success,
In the cup to the parched lips pressed
Cometh rest.

The name of our coming King is Peace,
Soon with His presence blest
The earth will leap at the Bridegroom's voice
While into each waiting breast
Cometh rest.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Answer to Brother Ogilvy.

Dear Brother:—In compliance with your request, and by permission of our much esteemed editor, I will now proceed to answer some of your queries in your reply to my strictures on Brother Morgan's article on the subject of "Judas's Presence or Absence at the Institution of the Lord's Memorial."

The first thing that claims my attention is the following, from your pen:

"The records all show that the sop was given to Judas at the Passover Supper in Jerusalem, and not in Bethany." "And now to the evidence." You then quote Matt. xxvi. 18-25; Mark xiv. 12-20 and Luke xxii. 18 21. All of which I believe with all my heart, and I endorse every word of it as it stands in the book; but the change you make in Matthew's language I object to, and which I will notice in the proper place.

But, lo, and behold! Not one of your witnesses says one word about, or gives the most distant hint to the point you propose to prove by them; and yet you claim to have proven your point conclusively.

You next call John to the witness stand, to prove what? Answer: That the sop was given to Judas at the Passover Supper in Jerusalem. And what does John say about the matter? Answer: Although he speaks of the "sop," he says not one word of the celebration of the Passover Supper, or of the introduction of the communion, which took place at the Passover. Hence, so far from his saying the sop was given to Judas at, or after, the Passover, John positively declares at the beginning of the thirteenth chapter, that the incidents which he is about to relate occurred before the feast of the Passover, and not, as you say, at, or after that celebration. But, upon examining all four of your witnesses I fail to find any evidence whatever to prove what you introduced them for. So, I conclude, that your case is inevitably lost. But I will follow you a little farther.

You refer to John xii. 1, 2, where, you say, we read of "the" supper made for him in Bethany. Why do you not say "a" supper, as the text has it? Why do you use the definite article "the," as though the Savior never ate but one supper in Bethany? Was it not for the purpose of evading my argument, that you referred to this text? But I must follow you farther still.

You refer to the twelfth verse of this chapter. "On the next day much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem, took branches of palm trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried Hosanna; blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord."

You then say: "That he went to Jerusalem at that time, I presume no one will gainsay; and that it was the next day after the supper in Bethany." But, why does my brother break off so abruptly here without giving the reader the least hint as to the time of these events relative to the time of the Passover celebration? Did you mean, by referring to this supper in Bethany, to evade my argument showing that Satan entered into Judas two days' prior to the celebration of the Passover, and that, as this occurred after the sop, the giving of the sop must have been two days before the Passover? Compare John xiii. 27, with Matt. xxvi. 14; two days before the Passover; Mark xiv. 10, also two days before the Passover; and Luke xxii. 3, 4, when the Passover drew nigh.

But, can it be possible, after referring the reader to John xii. 1, 2, that you were ignorant of the fact that Christ's riding into Jerusalem occurred five days before the Passover? It does seem to me, that to read those verses with the least degree of candor, a person could not help seeing that. Hence, for the satisfaction of the reader, I will insert it here, as you simply referred to it in your dissertation. "Then Jesus, six days before the Passover, came to Bethany, where Lazarus was who had been dead, whom he raised from the dead." "There they made him a supper."

In the twelfth verse and onward we have an account of his riding into Jerusalem, which occurred the next day after this supper, and consequently five days before the Passover. And in the day time he taught the people in the temple, and at night he abode on the Mount of Olives, at the foot of which was the town Bethany. Luke xxi. 37; xxii. 39; John viii. 1, 2; Matt. xxi. 17, 18. The next day after his riding into the city, which was four days before the Passover, as he was returning from Bethany to Jerusalem, he cursed the fig-tree as Peter says. Matt. xxi. 18, 19; Mark xi. 12, 13. And the next morning, being three days before the Passover, as they passed the fig-tree on going to Jerusalem, Peter said unto him, Master, "Behold, the fig-tree which thou cursedst is withered away." Then follows quite a number of parables, recorded without specifying any particular time.

The next specification of time brings us down to two days before the Passover, when, as the records of Matthew and Mark inform us, the chief priests, the scribes, and the elders of the people assembled together and consulted how they might take Jesus by subtility and kill him. And in connection with this event, Matthew says that Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, where a certain woman anointed his head with the ointment of spikenard; and in immediate connection with this event, Matthew says: "Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests and said unto them, what will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver." "And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him." Matt. xxvi. 2-16. As Mark's narrative of these events is of the same import, I will simply refer the reader to Mark xiv. 1-12.

Luke sets in with his narrative at the point of the chief priests and the scribes seeking how they might kill Jesus, and in immediate connection with their consultations about this matter, Luke says: "Then entered Satan into Judas, surnamed Iscariot, ... and he went his way, (after Satan had entered into him,) and communed with the chief priests and captains how he might betray him unto them. And they were glad, and covenanted to give him money. And he promised, and sought opportunity to betray him unto them in the absence of the multitude." Luke xxii. 2-6. Query: When did these things occur? Answer: Matthew and Mark both say that it was two days before the Passover, and in Simon's house in Bethany. Now, when and where was it that Jesus gave the sop to Judas, after which Satan entered into him? John xiii. 27. I leave the reader to answer this for himself.

I am now prepared for my brother's questions.

1. Was there any one present, save Jesus and the twelve disciples when Jesus washed their feet at the giving of the sop to Judas? I answer, yes. At least, the woman who anointed the Savior's head with the ointment. And as it was in Simon's house, it is altogether probable that he, and all his household were present.

2. Could Judas, although he sought to betray his Lord, do so before the time, or before Jesus' hour had come? Answer: No. Yet I believe he did so, at the first convenient opportunity that presented itself.

But, what does my brother mean by asking this question? Does he mean to intimate that, because John said, (John xiii. 1): "When Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father," this must all be accomplished in one short hour of sixty minutes? If so, let me remind you of the fact that Jesus, after his resurrection, told Mary that he had not yet ascended to his Father. Hence, I conclude that this expression does not refer to a single hour, but simply to a short, indefinite period of time. Proof: John xii. 23. In connection with Christ's triumphant entry into Jerusalem, five days before the Passover: "And Jesus answered them, saying, the hour is come, that the Son of Man should be glorified." Verse 27. "Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour; but for this cause came I unto this hour." This being five days before the Passover, it is evident that "the hour" simply refers to a short, indefinite period of time.

Now, my dear brother, I will briefly notice your next crowning argument, or rather, objection to the truth, as I view it. After quoting what the evangelists have written on that subject, (all of which I heartily endorse, and so will not requote the same,) you go on to say: "Now, will Philos please show any evidence that the record given by John xiii. 1-38, concerning the supper, feet washing, the giving of the sop, and the reply of Jesus to Peter, did not all take place at one and the same time?"

Dear brother, I have already done that, but to accommodate you, I will try, and, if possible, make the matter a little plainer yet. In the first place then, I would remark that events are not always recorded in the exact order in which they occurred. And secondly, that the arbitrary and erroneous division of the Scriptures into chapters, disconnecting portions which ought not be separated, and connecting others which really have no natural connection at all, is a very sad disaster. And this last difficulty, I presume, is the main cause of your having fallen into those erroneous views on the topics under consideration.

By supplying in John's testimony what the other evangelists have spoken of, and was omitted by John, and supplying in the testimony of the others what is spoken of by John, and omitted by them, we will have no difficulty in harmonizing the whole of their testimony. And we will also see at once, that what is recorded in John xiii. 1-32, occurred two days before the Passover, while what is spoken of from the thirty-third verse to the end of the chapter transpired after the celebration of the Passover and introduction of the communion; about neither of which, John says one word, except incidentally referring to the Passover, and that, too, as being yet in the future, even after Judas had received the sop. Also, by a proper division into chapters, the same conclusion would most surely be arrived at. If, for instance, the third chapter of John were to end with the thirty-second verse, and the remaining part were joined to the fourteenth chapter, no one would ever have thought of confounding this supper with the Passover and the communion, or of connecting feet-washing with the communion.

Now, Brother O., I am ready for your last argument, viz.: John's record of the Savior telling his disciples at the supper table that one of them should betray him, which, you claim, was at the Passover, but facts show that it was two days before the Passover. And as this seems to be the last prop upon which you lean for the support of your assumption that the supper, recorded in the thirteenth of John, was the Passover, I shall examine it somewhat critically, with the view to set forth the whole truth in the matter.

I will begin with John's testimony. "He (Jesus) was troubled in spirit, and testified, and said, verily, verily, I say unto you that one of you shall betray me." "Then the disciples looked one on another, doubting (or wondering) of whom he spake." "Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom, one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved. Simon Peter therefore beckoned to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom he spake. He then, lying on Jesus' breast, saith unto him, Lord, who is it?" John xiii. 21-25. Now, John certainly did not ask this question that all who were present heard it. Neither did Jesus answer him in that way, but simply gave John a sign by which he might know, and which none of the rest knew anything about. This is clearly shown by the sequel; for, when Jesus said to the traitor, "That thou doest, do quickly," (verse 27,) none of them understood what was meant by this, but thought, because Judas was their treasurer, Jesus meant to say he should buy those things which they needed for the feast. Brother O., pray, tell us how this idea got into their minds, if, as you say, they had just finished its celebration?

Now, mark, Brother O., John does not inform us of any one asking any questions at this time concerning the traitor, except John, who asked secretly, and was answered in the same way, by a sign which no one else understood.

We will now come to Matthew's testimony. "And as they did eat, he said, verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me. And they were exceedingly sorrowful, and began, every one of them, to say unto him, Lord, is it I?" Matt. xxvi. 21, 22. We might here pause to enquire, why was it that they were so exceedingly sorrowful at this time, on hearing these words? The reason is very obvious. It was simply this: That two days before, he had told them the same words, and, notwithstanding, however closely they might have watched each other during all this time, yet they failed to discover any sign in any one of their number turning traitor. This fully accounts for their extreme sorrow on that occasion.

Verse 25: "Then Judas, which betrayed him, answered and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, thou hast said."

You say: "Judas, which had betrayed him." Why do you make this change? You certainly did not mean to say that he had then already betrayed his Lord, did you?

Mark, this was not accomplished till Judas, leading the men that took Jesus, came and said, Master, Master, and kissed him. "But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?" Luke xxii. 48.

Now, in conclusion, I will briefly notice your summary remarks. You say: "We will not intrude further upon your valuable time, but will say, from the evidence," or, rather, you should have said, without a particle of evidence:

1. "That the sop was given to Judas at the Passover Supper, in Jerusalem, and not at Bethany." Set this down as (I had almost said, assumption, but will say) error No. 1.

2. "The supper recorded by John xiii. was the Passover or memorial supper." Set this down as error No. 2.

3. "That feet-washing is in connection with that supper." Very truly feet-washing stands in connection with that supper, but that that supper was the Passover, is a sad mistake of yours, as the Passover was celebrated two days later.

As to your No. 4, not seeing anything in it worthy of notice, I will simply pass it by.

And now, Brother O., I would tender you my warmest thanks for your reply to my former article, thus affording me the opportunity of a more thorough investigation of the subject. Now, permit me to say, right here, that feet-washing never was designed, by the Savior, to be practiced as a church ordinance at all. See 1 Tim. v. 10.

Finally, my brother, let me refer you to Paul's admonition to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Respectfully your brother in Christ,
PHILOS.

SELECTIONS.

(Gordon Calthrop, in Christian Herald.)

The Prophetic Conference at Mildmay Park, London.

I suppose I may say that all students of Scripture, whatever their views may be, and who seek for the teaching of God's Holy Spirit, expect ultimately the establishment of a kingdom of God. They look for the fulfillment of those bright and glowing predictions of the ancient prophets. They are anticipating the time when the wilderness shall blossom as the rose, and when the knowledge of our God in Christ shall cover the earth, even as the waters cover the sea. At the same time there may be, and we know that there is, amongst excellent Christian people a very great diversity of opinion as to the method by which God intends and proposes to accomplish this great result.

Some think that it is to be brought about by the expansion of existing agencies, by the dissemination of the Scriptures, by greater diligence and earnestness on the part of Christian people generally, and by a larger outpouring of the Holy Spirit of God granted to the churches in answer to their prayer. There are others who would look to different causes for the accomplishment of this great result—to what the world would call "an exceptional interference in human affairs"—even the personal coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, ushering in a new dispensation with all its wondrous privileges and all the mysterious power with which the people of God will then be invested.

There are, then, these two views before us. If the former be adopted, we shall naturally look for a general advancement in religion, so that when our blessed Master comes to take account of his servants he shall find in a very true sense, faith on the earth. If the latter opinion be accepted, it seems to follow that we should expect almost the reverse of this—not advancement, but to a very great extent retrogression in spiritual things—at all events the growth of antagonism to the Lord Jesus Christ, assuming at last such a portentous form that his personal interposition becomes absolutely necessary.

Now, it is my object to endeavor to put reasons before you to show that the second view is that which has the warrant of Holy Scripture. In Matt. xxiv. we have a long series of statements, all of which most manifestly apply to the coming of our Lord, and in verse 29 we read, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven.'

And if we put Matt. xxiv., and Luke xxi., together, we find it is tribulation up to the time when the days of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled and the Lord shall come. And if it be tribulation, or a period that is expressed only by such a striking epithet, how can it be that blessed and prosperous time, that time of increase and of advancement and bright experience, which some are led to expect? It has always seemed to me that there is intended to be in our Lord's mind and purpose a correspondence between the circumstances that preceded his first coming to Jerusalem and the circumstances which we anticipate, and the anticipation of which has brought us together now. And from his wonderful discourse in Matthew xxiv., you have no reason to expect a happy state of things at the second coming, but rather the reverse: the love of many waxing cold; parents and children rising against each other, and the gospel not generally accepted, but simply preached for a witness amongst all nations.

Now please look at Luke xviii. 8. Our Lord says, "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" That seems to imply that he will not; and yet, if the world's blessed millennium is to precede the second coming of Christ, would it be a natural thing for the Lord to say, "When he cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" Of course he would, on that supposition, find faith prevalent. The unbelieving, at least, would be in the minority, and the knowledge of the Lord would cover the earth. Could he then have used such an expression?

I pass to another point. If you refer to Acts iii: 19 Peter is there preaching his second sermon to the Jews. He says, "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and He shall send Jesus Christ." Many here must be aware that that is a mistaken translation, which causes the force of the passage to be lost. It should read thus: "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out in order that (a very different thing) the times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord," etc.

Peter, like his fellow apostles on the Mount of Ascension, connected these times of refreshing and the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ with the conversion of His people, and he prayed then and there, with all the intensity of his passionate nature, those who had rejected Him, to accept Him, to repent and be converted, that their sin of crucifying his Lord and Master might be blotted out, so that at once the great day to which he was looking forward might come. We are agreed that even the Apostles did not see every thing in its full meaning, and that that meaning was gradually unfolding itself to them; but I believe Peter really expected that if the effect of his sermon were such as he desired, and they were brought to the knowledge of God by the power of the Holy Spirit, that the great times of refreshing would come.

You see then that Peter distinctly connected the times of refreshing and the coming of Jesus Christ with the conversion of the Jewish people, and that seems to have been what the apostles expected on the mount of ascension: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?"

Now turn to Rom. xi. 15: "For if the casting away of them is the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?" The apostle was expecting a glorious time when the state of the world shall not be what it is now. Now it is a valley of dead and dry bones. He is expecting a better and more glorious time, when the dead, dry bones shall have flesh and sinews put upon them, and the breath breathed into them by the Spirit of God. And they shall stand up an exceeding great army to the praise and glory of God. But he connects that with the restoration and conversion of the Jews.

Now connect that with what is said in Zechariah, and I suppose we must (as has been said here by one veteran student of prophecy, whose praise is in all the churches) take the literal interpretation if possible, and so, if not driven from that, you must adopt it. Doing this, then, some of us conceive that the conversion of the Jewish people is not to be accomplished by ordinary agencies, but by the appearance in person of the Lord Jesus Christ upon the Mount of Olives, when He shall come and they shall look on him whom they have pierced, and the nation arranged according to its tribes shall gather together, and mourn, and accept him as their long rejected Messiah.

Putting all these things together, it is only by the return of the Lord Jesus Christ that we expect these great things for the world at large spoken of in the ancient prophecy.

Still further, turn to 2 Thess. ii. 8, 9, 10. I venture to think that the apostle is speaking here of the appearance in the world at some future period of a man who shall be an embodiment of power—the Infidel King or the Wilful One. I venture to think that the state of things in which we find ourselves in the present day has been well called "perilous days." It indicates that in that Man of Sin, the incarnation of sin—a man of vast intellectual power and inspired by the prince of the power of the air—we shall have the culmination of the tendencies of the times in which we live.

One does not want to be an alarmist. We are not going to raise a howl over it. We are perfectly satisfied. We know what is to be expected, and are agreed that whatever influence the sceptical and unbelieving tendencies of the day may produce upon unstable minds of those who do not belong to the Lord Jesus Christ, they will not have the power to touch one hair of a single true child of God. We are all agreed upon that. We can look at it with perfect calmness, but at the same time you will agree with me, I know, that the last twenty-five years have witnessed a most marvelous intellectual development in antagonism to the Christ of God.

Following out the principle of development, which is perfectly true in spiritual as well as in temporal things, it is conceivable that perhaps at no great distance of time all this may gather up and culminate in one great personal antagonist to the Lord Jesus Christ, so that when He comes again He will find a human antagonist whom He will destroy with the brightness of His coming and with the spirit of His mouth.

This antagonist will be a man of such power that he will be able to work lying wonders, and to exercise no common influence over the world. He will be a man of such gigantic intellect and such influence over his fellow-creatures, that, gathering, no doubt, an enormous following, he is to make worse and worse the times before the appearing of Christ. I cannot help concluding that they must be worse: "Evil men and seducers will wax worse and worse."

One of the most marvelous features of the present day is the calmness with which you and I are obliged to contemplate atheism. A few years ago, when I was a young man, the atheist used to be a man under the ban of society; but atheistic writers now profess their opinion in the face of day as boldly and plainly as they speak of their stature or the color of their hair, and without the least degree of shame, but rather the reverse. Their writings appear in popular periodicals, preaching distinct, uncompromising infidelity—denying flatly, fully and plainly, the existence of a personal God; and these are men holding high positions in society, and generally respected.

I say that one of the most strange features of the present day is that we Christians are obliged to take this as an accepted fact, that there are men in leading positions, men who are regarded with respect, who simply deny the existence of a Divine Being.

And all this seems to indicate that the stream is tending in the direction which Paul pointed out, and at a certain time it will all culminate in a person who will stand before men as the avowed intellectual antagonist of the Christ of God, but who will be destroyed by the spirit of His mouth and the brightness of His coming.

It seems to me that the view I have endeavored to recommend does not paralyze Christian effort, but has the contrary effect—for this reason: We look as the greatest agency of all to the coming of our Lord and Master, but we also believe that it is in the power of the Christian Church to hasten the time of His coming.

A coincidence of opinion on Biblical revision has occurred. It is generally known that the revision of the English Bible now going on is conducted by committees in Britain and America, who exchange their results in one case both the New Testament companies were at the same time on the same book. When notes were compared, it was found that of 913 changes made by one party, 470 had been made by the other, acting independently. A similar coincidence was made in the case of the Old Testament companies when they were at work independently.

The Frankfurter Zeitung mentions the "Iron Wedding," or 70th anniversary, of the marriage of an ex-rabbi at Vietz, near Berlin, named Silberstein, who is in his 93d year. He has 146 descendants, 60 of whom attended the celebration.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began. It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the fore-existence of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Paul in Chains.

The wickedness and perversity of the human heart, finds no better illustration in the history of the world than that afforded by the treatment which good men and women receive at the hands of those to whom they are sent with a message of love. The value of the benefits to be conferred is no security against ill treatment; nor is the great need which the benefits are designed to meet and satisfy, a guaranty that the message will be gratefully received. The highest gift of God's goodness, a gift outweighing all worldly considerations—eternal life, has been spurned as if it had been of the most trifling value, and the bearers of the gracious tidings subjected to contempt, bonds, imprisonment, confiscation of property, deprivation of rights and loss of life, in numberless cases after extreme torture more or less protracted. Some wild beasts snap and snarl at the hand which gives them food, but man created in the image of God exhibits a disposition much worse than that of wild animals of forest and jungle. One of the darkest pages of human history has been written in the blood of martyrs to the truth of righteousness by faith. Passing over the dark records of the older dispensations I come to the last or Christian dispensation, and single out the man "more abundant in labors," as a subject of a few thoughts. Paul was in prison more than once. In briefly sketching his ministerial life he says, "In prison more frequent" (2 Cor. xi. 23) than other Apostles. What Christian has not read over and over again the narrative of Paul's and Silas' imprisonment at Philippi. First scourged in the market-place, then cast into prison, and by the jailor thrust into the inner prison and their feet made fast in the stocks, where they could neither sit nor stand, but only lie flat on their backs. Not a very comfortable position! Stocks are not a very easy kind of anklets. Add to the torture of their position the pain and smart of the scourge-cuts and we have a picture that touches the heart. In this dreary prison, away off in Macedonia, far from the land of their nativity, how did these preachers while away the tedium of the painful hours of confinement? Did they exchange regrets that they had enlisted in a cause so unpopular, so full of pain and peril? Did they purpose to abandon a calling which was likely to involve them in trouble almost continually? Did they talk of engaging in some secular business as soon as they should be liberated, if so fortunate—any thing to make an honest living and avoid reproaches and persecutions connected with the preaching of the cross of Christ? Nothing of that kind. They had counted the cost. They knew that bonds and afflictions awaited them in every city.

What should we expect from two foot-sore travellers far away from their own homes, strangers in the chief city of Macedonia, in prison, the inner prison, their backs still smarting from the lash, and their feet fast in the stocks. Complaints and murmurs of course accord well with the weakness of human nature. Self-pity is a mood of mind that comes up in most all cases of bad treatment. But here is an exception under the worst circumstances. Hear the words of the inspired historian: "At midnight Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises (a hymn) unto God, and the prisoners heard them," Acts xvi. 25. This was worshipping God under difficulties; but it shows the power of a living faith to exalt the mind above physical conditions and surroundings; to change the gloom of the prison into the vestibule of heaven, and to make hearts, which otherwise, would have been sad and bitter, burst out in songs of praise to God. Like the Apostles, under similar circumstances, earlier in the history of preaching, they "rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for the name of Jesus," Acts v. 41. This was the martyr spirit with which the new dispensation opened. They suffered in the present, but lived and rejoiced in the future by the power of a vital faith. The thunder-clouds which hung in wrath over them were outlined with that glory which is to follow. They saw over against the martyr's death the martyr's crown gleaming in the hand of the Lord. They regarded their sufferings as light compared with the eternal weight of glory. Here is faith worthy of our emulation, who live this side of violent persecution but still under the cross.

Although so little of shrinking and reproach falls to the lot of the Christian of to-day, yet, many seek to avoid even this small part of the bitter cup, and are willing to serve God, only in the sunshine, when everything is favorable, the way strewn with flowers and the church popular, otherwise they will not serve him at all. There is a sad lack of the self-sacrificing spirit which belonged to the primitive Christians. They regarded themselves as not their own, but bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ; therefore, belonging to him in all the powers of their being; serving him with full purpose of heart, and entering upon the performance of whatever duty or rugged task was assigned them, without shrinking from pain or peril, and even death in the many shapes it confronted them; not stopping to consult their own ease, pleasure and self-interest they enrolled their names in the book of life along with the names of faith's heroes and overcomers of the old dispensation.

Paul, with his companion in labor and suffering, having been released from confinement in the Philippian jail, started on a preaching tour through Amphipolis and Apollonia, taking in Thessalonica as a point. Here Paul preached the same message, the same unpopular truth that got him in trouble at Philippi; thus rousing the indignation of the Jews as he had that of the superstitious heathen of the latter city. The charge of turning the world upside down was brought against him. I merely note this to show that Paul was no time-server, nor compromiser of the truth, nor preacher of smooth things. Manacles had no power to deter him. I pass over the subsequent history of the Apostle until I find him a prisoner in the hands of the Jews, as predicted by Agabus, Acts xxi. 11. He had said that he was going to Jerusalem, after which he must see Rome, Acts xix. 21. Perhaps not thinking that he should be carried there in chains. Paul as a prisoner was no coward but was bold, truthful and magnanimous.

I have said nothing about what he preached, except under the most general terms; I mean what he preached while bound. Let us follow his history from this point, for we will find in it the very pith and marrow of the gospel. Before Ananias and his council he cried out: "Men and brethren, * * * of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question," Acts xxiii. 6. He affirmed the resurrection of him whom Jewish hate and wickedness had put to death. This fact neither Pharisee nor Sadducee believed. But he does not stop with this, he declares the future resurrection of the dead, for he connects hope with it. This second fact was in direct opposition to the main tenet of the Sadducees, while the resurrection of Jesus Christ as the pledge and ground of the hope was contrary to the prejudices of the Pharisees, for they believed that Jesus was an impostor. By forging this he put himself in direct antagonism to both parties, pr claiming in bonds, in the face of his prosecuting enemies the great truths he preached in his freedom. See 17th ch., 1 of Acts. Before Felix he confesses, "I have hope toward God, which they themselves (the Jews) also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and unjust. The resurrection here is vastly more important than that of the body as a mere tenement, as commonly held, can possibly be made to appear. The subjects are responsible personalities or characters, the just and unjust. At the bar of Agrippa he says: "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers; unto which promise our twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead. "In the promise of the inheritance, to which the Apostle alludes, life is implied, and resurrection and everlasting life both involved in the fulfillment of the promise. If there is no resurrection then no eternal life, and as a consequence, no eternal inheritance. Paul in chains, said not a word about the soul's immortality, nor going to heaven at death. How strange if these were the sentiments of the Apostle.

JOHN L. WISE.

The Beginning of the Seventy Weeks of Daniel.

The following article is the last from the pen of our beloved brother, Pruden Ailing. It was written the evening previous to his last illness. I have copied it from his notes, which were only written roughly, he having intended to copy them, and I think I have given the thoughts as was intended by him. I have left the italics as he gave them.

I am glad to see the late interest manifested by various writers, including the editorial of THE RESTITUTION, upon this subject, which augurs favorably for the ultimate attainment of a correct knowledge of their beginning, and consequently for the beginning and of the ending of the 2300 days of Dan. viii. 14. When the visions of this wonderful book were given to Daniel, the Jews were in captivity in Babylon. And when the ninth chapter was written, in the first year of Darius the Mede, the prophet learned from books that the seventy years were up.

From Daniel's prayer as recorded in this chapter, it is evident that he understood that the previous predictions given him were all in some way connected with the restoration, and the rebellion of Jerusalem, and the temple which had befors been promised. This conclusion is sustained by the literal reading of the first part of that verse, thus: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city." Note the language, and this fact, "seventy weeks" was God's determined allotment to Daniel's people to possess that city after it was restored by the Persian kingdom. No more, no less.

Now, if we can find out from sacred history when that city and temple was rebuilt, and when the Jewish rites and ceremonies were restored according to the law of Moses, are we not justified in assuming that we have found the right event for the beginning of this period?

Before proceeding further, I will say that from all the testimony that can be obtained upon this point, it is quite evident that Darius, (the uncle of Cyrus,) was placed on the throne to act in Cyrus's absence, and that the first year of Cyrus is to be dated from the fall of Babylon at the end of the seventy years' captivity; and his reign concludes that of Darius.

In verse 23 is this language: "In the beginning of thy supplication the commandment came forth." What commandment was this? The answer is found in verse 25, thus; "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build up Jerusalem, the same that had gone forth, named in verse 23,) unto the Messiah, the Prince, shall be seven weeks and three-score and two weeks." This period unquestionably spanned all the time between the first year of Cyrus and the birth of Christ, being 483 years. Somewhere in that period, the Jews—Daniel's people—were to be restored, and the city rebuilt. Now, there are two rebuildings of the city, and two restorings of the law of Moses noted in the two books of Ezra and of Nehemiah. The accomplishment of the last is recorded in Ezra vii., and the other decree was issued by Artaxerxes Longimanus in the twentieth year of his reign, and completed in his thirty-second year. The all-important question is as to which of these two commandments and restorings are we to date the beginning of the seventy weeks.

There is nearly one hundred years between the first year of Cyrus and the twentieth of Artaxerxes, and over eighty years difference between the rebuilding and restoration that occurred in the sixth year of Cyrus, as recorded in Ezra vi., and the restoration that occurred in the thirty second year of Artaxerxes' reign, as recorded in the last chapter of Ezra.

Please mark the language of verse 24 again: "Seventy weeks are determined (or cut off) upon thy people and upon thy holy city." No more, no less. This was God's appointed time for Daniel's people to have possession of that city, after their restoration from Babylon, under the commandment that went forth whilst Daniel was praying and mourning over its desolation as recorded in verse 23, quoted above.

The prophecy of Isaiah is explicit, and calls Cyrus by name as the one that was to do that work. And Ezra vi. 14, 15, reads thus: "And the elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet, and of Zechariah the son of Iddo; and they builded and finished it according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the commandment of Cyrus and Darius, and Artaxerxes, kings of Persia, and this house was finished in the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius, the king." Ezra vi. 13: And they set the priests in their divisions, and the Levites in their courses, for the service of God, which is at Jerusalem; as it is written in the book of Moses.

From that time onward to its final destruction, in about A. D. 70, Daniel's people held possession of that city. The burning of the gates, and the breaking down of the walls, and the afflictions brought upon them by their enemies, the surrounding nations, mentioned in the book of Nehemiah, did not dispossess them, any more than did the wars of Antiochus Epiphanes at a later period.

From this and much other confirmatory testimony that might be adduced I am compelled to the belief that the seventy weeks should be dated from the sixth year of Darius' reign as noted above. All the restoration that occurred in the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes by Nehemiah was the bringing back of the order of things as established previously by Ezra.

If we date the beginning of the 490 years at the last restoration, it would be giving the Jews possession of the city eighty years more than the time allotted them in the prophecy, which will never do.

Now, if instead of dating the beginning of the seventy weeks with the rebuilding and restoration under the commandment of this Artaxerxes, we begin the sixty-two weeks of verse 27 there, and end them at the cross, at the cutting off of the Messiah, the Prince, we fix upon the right event, in the right place, and all is plain. Darius reigned after his sixth year, thirty years; Xerxes, 21; Artaxerxes, 32; total 83 years.

The three events marked by these three classes of weeks may be understood thus: The sixty-nine begin in the first year of Cyrus, and end at the birth of Christ; the seventy began in the sixth year of Darius, with the restoration that then occurred, and ended at the destruction of Jerusalem, about A. D. 70; the sixty-two weeks began in the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes, and ended at the cross.

The question now arises, Can we harmonize this application and prove it correct by accredited chronology? I answer, emphatically, No. It is just as impossible to harmonize the sacred and profane history of the early Persian kings as it is to harmonize the Bible chronology of the world with the Chinese history of their nation. The discrepancies begin with the immediate successors of Cyrus. For instance, in Ezra iv. 5, 6, we have the names of the successors of Cyrus, thus:

1. Ahasuerus, who reigned, according to the book of Esther, at least thirteen years.

2. Artaxerxes, time not specified

3. Darius, five and one-half years.

Prideaux, Rollin, and other profane writers, make the successors of Cyrus to be:

1. Cambysis, who reigned seven years and five months.

2. Smerdis, seven months.

Next, Darius. Then, to cap the climax of inconsistency, Ahasuerus' reign is taken out of its allotted place and carried forward at least one hundred years, and then his name is changed to Artaxerxes Longimanus who reigned,

Thus somewhat abruptly ends the last article written by the hand of him who is now sweetly sleeping in Jesus. And the name so long familiar to the readers of THE RESTITUTION will be seen no more in its columns as an advocate of our precious faith. I have sent this because it was to the point in regard to a certain idea which was tenaciously held to by Brother Ailing, viz.: that where there was an apparent difference between the sacred historian and the profane, to adhere to the sacred record even though by so doing we should be unable to harmonize the prophetic periods, or demonstrate by chronology and history the truth of the prophecy itself, holding that God would take care of his own word, and would yet demonstrate to the world its unshaken truth, even though it might differ in some respects from the history as written by man.

"In the last days perilous times shall come." 2 Tim. iii. 1. "An age of antagonisms." How strikingly this and kindred prophetic utterances of the Word of God are verified by the subjoined extracts from a very recent issue of the Baltimore Sun, a secular newspaper which records thus unconsciously the fulfillment of Bible prophecies delivered long ago! These "antagonisms" are but new developments in these last days of that enmity between the two seeds, of which we read in Gen. iii. 15. While such testimony may well alarm the fearful and unbelieving, it brings hope and consolation to the watching and waiting servants of God. The following paragraph is from the regular London correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, of April 10.

A. B. M.

In Europe, at this moment, there is a spirit of antagonism rushing abroad, which may be seen as fully and freely developed in princes as in peasants, and which manifests itself on all occasions when men are met together ostensibly with the object of "progress," prosperity or profit. This spirit pervades every European country and city, and is spreading through Asia and Africa to an extent that is alarming as well as amazing. The disciples of antagonisms are numerous and the professors are bold. Their chief creed is "revolution," and their first prayer is "progress," while their main chance is profit. Russia, with her "Nihilists," is agitated with this antagonism; Prussia, with his "free thinkers," is worried with this antagonism; France, with her peculiar "republicans," is trembling at antagonism; England, with her "strikers" and "internationalists" is angered by this antagonism, and Turkey and Egypt, South Africa and Central India are in all the wrath and ruin of antagonism. Political, financial, commercial, sectarian, and social antagonism are the burdens of this age. Of all, no one is so completely bereft of Christian charitableness as is the sectarian antagonism.

"THE JEWS TURNING THEIR EYES TOWARD THEIR OWN LAND."

The late London papers are full of accounts and speculations as to the already steady current of Jewish return and occupation of Jerusalem as the permanent home of the scattered exiles. Jerusalem, with 15,000 Jewish inhabitants, and Beyrout, its seaport, with a population of eighty thousand! What ominous signs of the times, in preparation for the coming of the Holy and the Just One!" Let the skeptic and the trustful servant of God both read the following. A. B. M.

The London Standard calls attention to the way in which the Jews, scattered throughout the world, "are beginning to turn their eyes toward their own land." The shrewdest financiers of that money-making people are reported to be buying up Palestine. The Jewish Chronicle reckons that there are some eighteen thousand Jews in Jerusalem alone, and that they annually receive about £30,000 from their brethren abroad. Whether dependent upon others or able to support themselves they cannot be persuaded to expatriate themselves from the old mother country of Judea when they have once returned there. It is probable that Lord Beaconsfield's oriental ambitions and his known sympathies for the regeneration of Syria have given a new impetus to this movement. The Standard further says: "The possession of Palestine and a part of Syria by a people who have retained an indestructible nationality, while they have learned a complete cosmopolitanism during some eighteen centuries—a nation at once European and Asiatic—Asiatic in origin and European in education, would not be by any means a bad arrangement. It might not be impolitic on the part of European powers to assist in placing so influential a people in so important a position, so soon as the inevitable decay of the Turkish power renders a change of government necessary. All the difficulties and jealousies incident to any project of joint occupation would be avoided; for the Jew is, at once, of no nation, and of all. No people could better solve what, before many years, must become the 'Syrian difficulty.'"

What Ulyssus Means.

The Emperor and Empress of Russia went south to their summer place at Livadia on the 24th instant. Before going the Emperor issued his ukase, putting the six chief districts of the Empire under martial law. At present the universities of Russia are the chief foci of nihilism. Of these there are seven leading ones—St. Petersburg, Kieff, Charkoff, Odessa, Kazan, Warsaw and Dorpat. The ukase provides for the provisional adoption of exceptional measures of an extraordinarily despotic character. Military Governors are provided for the several districts, and all the civil authority is subordinated to them. They are given absolute control of all educational establishments, of the courts and of the press, and are to have discretionary power to arrest, try by court-martial or imprison, exile or banish all suspected persons. Thus these subordinates of the Czar are invested with the power of life and death, with the control of the bastile and the lettre de cachet, and can use their powers toward every subject of the Empire, high or low. This is done under the pretext of suppressing a revolutionary tendency which has chiefly grown out of the impatience of the educated classes of Russia at the despotism already existing in the Empire. It has only been a few years since the Czar followed up the emancipation of the serfs by establishing the rudiments of a constitutional government, which he promised to extend and strengthen, and now already he is found emulating the system of the King of Birmah or the Khan of Bokhara.

PROTESTANTS IN FRANCE.

The evangelical Protestants of France continue to express in the strongest terms their belief that the French people are riper for the reception of Protestantism than they have been at any time since the earliest period of the Reformation. Since the victory at Versailles over Conservatism, the French peasant puts on more independence. He pays less heed to the warnings of the priests, and welcomes the Protestant colporteur and missionary. The Evangeliste, the organ of the French Wesleyans, says: "Could the flag of evangelical Protestantism be unfurled wherever the spirits of men are set loose from Rome, not knowing whither to betake themselves, large crowds would be seen running to it." Appeals are made to the various French Protestant societies to organize a comprehensive plan of action."

BROTHER H. V. REED preached for the little church in Plymouth, Sunday, May 4.

TO HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD, M. C., we tender our thanks for public documents sent to this office.

DO NOT forget the financial wants of THE RESTITUTION. But few, comparatively, love millenarian doctrines, and the few who do must keep the truth before the world at more or less sacrifice.

BROTHER H. HEYES sends us a late number of the London Times, and a pamphlet on Africa, in which the writer endeavors to show that this country has become "a paramount necessity for the future prosperity of the leading industries of England." The questions regarding England's relations to Egypt, Zululand, Afghanistan, and Burmah, are treated of quite fully in the Times, but our limits permit no extracts this week.

The Kirwan Letters to the Right Rev. John Hughes, Bishop of New York.

LETTER II.

Causes of Early Misgivings—Priestly Miracles — Purgatory — Praying to Saints.

My Dear Sir:—In my last letter I stated to you that I was born of Roman Catholic parents; that I was baptized and confirmed in your communion, and that for many years I have been in connection with a Protestant church. I stated that, whatever were my occasional mental misgivings, I remained a true son of the church until I had nearly attained the years of manhood; and that then, on as full an examination of the subject as I could give it, I came to the conclusion that I could not remain a Roman Catholic. Permit me, in the present letter, to state to you the causes of my early misgivings as to yours being a true church, and as to its holding the true faith.

You know very well the common belief among the Irish peasantry that papal priests can work miracles. Whatever may be the teaching of the priests themselves upon the point, such is the universal belief of the people, [illegible] of their spiritual leaders. Hence, in diseases, the people resort, not so much to the physician, as to the priest; they depend less upon the power of medicine than upon that of priestly charms. Although the son of intelligent parents, and educated from my youth for the mercantile profession, the miraculous power of the priest is yet associated with my earliest recollections of him; and, as you know full well, the belief that this power is possessed by their priests is one of the leading causes why the papal Irish bow with such entire and unmanly submission to them. Nor are any efforts left untried to cherish and propagate this superstitious idea.

In my youth there were two things which greatly shook my faith in the possession of this power. There resided not far from my parental residence a priest whose fame as a miracle-worker was known all over the county in which he resided. The road to his house (called in that country a bridle road) went by our door. I frequently saw, in the morning, individuals riding by, with a little keg resting before them on the saddle, or a jug hanging by the horse's side. I often asked who they were, and where they were going. I was told that they were going to Father C——'s to get some of their sick cured. I asked what was in the keg or jug. I was told that it was Irish whisky to pay the priest for his cures. I asked why they went so early in the morning. I was answered that unless they went early they would not find him sober. The tabernacle of poor Father C—— was made of dry clay, and needed a daily wetting.

In one of the large interior towns of Ireland where I resided, the bishop of the diocese met his priests, or a part of them, once a year. Their meeting was always held in the house where I resided, and over the store in which I was then a clerk. Among the priests that always met the bishop was the rollicking Father B——, whose fame as a miracle-worker was extensive. He had also a reputation for learning and eloquence, and, because of his connection with an old and wealthy family, exerted a wide social influence. He always staid with us when he came to town. About 10 o'clock one night, after one of these meetings of bishop and priests, I went out to shut up the store windows, and, hearing a singular noise in the gutter, I went forward and assisted a man out of the mire. I soon recognized him to be Father B——, the miracle-worker. Running in, I announced with some excitement to the lady of the house, that Father B—— was drunk in the street. I received for my pains a stunning slap on the side of the face, with this admonition," Never say again that a priest is drunk." This was a very impressive argument, and one which for some time, rung in my ears. I staggered under the blow. I gave him his brandy next morning; and, young as I was, my faith in miracle-working priests was effectually shaken. Although fearing to draw the conclusion, I felt it, that God would not bestow miraculous power upon those who lived a life, not of occasional, but of habitual intemperance. And I would ask you, sir, whether all this pretension to miraculous power by your priests is not a gross imposition upon the people, for the double purpose of keeping them in awe and getting their money? Do not deny the fact, in the face of many witnesses, and of what you know, do not evade the question. Let the bishop be silent, and the man of sense speak, and I have no fear as to the answer.

The doctrine of Purgatory, you know, sir, is one of the peculiar and most cherished doctrines of your church. Indeed, I do not know how your church could get along without it, as by it you build your cathedrals and churches, and are enabled to fare sumptuously every day. My object now is not to reason with you about it, nor to controvert it, but to state to you a few facts in reference to it, that made, in early life, a strong impression on my mind. You know that in Ireland the custom of the priest is, at a certain point in the service of the mass, to turn his back to the altar, and his face to the people, and read a long list of the names of deceased persons whose souls are in Purgatory, and to offer up a prayer for their deliverance from it. This is done, or used to be done in our chapel, on every Sabbath. To obtain the name of a deceased relative on that magic list, the priest must be paid so much a year, varying I believe, with the ability of the friends to pay. If the yearly payment is not made when due, the name of the person is erased from the list. A circumstance arising out of this custom of your church, occurring in my boyhood, is distinctly before me. A respectable man in our parish died in mid-life, [illegible] and a large family of children to mourn his loss. True to her religious principles and to her generous instincts the widow had her husband's name placed on that list, and heard, with pious gratitude, his name read over from Sabbath to Sabbath, with a prayer offered for the deliverance of his soul from Purgatory. After the lapse of two or three years, on a certain Sabbath the name of her husband was omitted from the list. The fact filled her with mingled joy and fear; joy, thinking that her husband had escaped from Purgatory; and fear, lest she had done something to offend the priest; and you know they are very easily offended when money is in question. On timid inquiry, she learned that his soul was yet in Purgatory, but that she had forgotten to send in the yearly tax at the time it was due. The tax was promptly paid, and the name was restored on the next Sabbath. With this fact, sir, I am entirely conversant; for that widow was my own mother, who sought the release of the soul of my father from Purgatory. Can you wonder, sir, that this incident made a deep impression upon my youthful mind, or that it shook my faith in your whole system? And, as far as memory serves me, Father M—— was an amiable man and above the ordinary level of the men of his calling.

Another fact which early impressed me in reference to purgatory was this. Your church makes a distinction between mortal and venial sinners. The former go to hell forever; the latter go to Purgatory," whence they are taken by the prayers and alms offered for them, and principally by the sacrifice of the mass." Now I always saw that the most mortal sinners, that everybody would say went to hell, could always have masses said for them as if they went to Purgatory, provided their friends could pay; and that less mortal sinners, that people would say went to Purgatory, were sent to hell if their friends could not pay for masses for them; and their souls were kept in Purgatory for a long while when their friends paid promptly every year, but their souls were soon prayed out whose friends could not pay long for them. Facts like these, sir, very early impressed my mind, and shook my faith in the religion of my parents and priests; and when, in maturer years, I could more fully consider them, they led me to reject religion as a fable cunningly devised by priests. You will not blame me for this, when even Leo X., of blessed memory, boasted of the profitable account to which they had turned the "fable about Jesus Christ."

Again: to pray to angels and saints is a doctrine of your church. I am quite familiar with your explanations of it—with the distinctions which your writers make to free it from idolatry. It is precisely the distinction which the heathen makes to get rid of the same charge. Perhaps, ere these letters are concluded, I may return to this subject; I have only to do now with some of my early impressions in reference to it. In our parish chapel there were a great many pictures of saints, with very little pretension to art, and which reflected but little credit on painter or engraver. Who the pictures they were I do not remember, but on Sabbath morning, an hour before mass, I have often seen the poor people, and even some more wealthy and refined, going on their knees from the one picture to the other, and counting their beads, and bowing before them with external acts of the most profound and sincere worship. Although then I thought differently, I have not now a doubt but that it was idolatry. But the idea that struck me was this: Here are some praying to Peter, or Paul, or John, or Mary; the same pictures are hung up in ten thousand chapels all over the world, and in all these chapels persons are praying to them. Can these good saints hear but in one place, or can they hear all everywhere praying to them? If they can hear all, then they are omnipresent; if omnipresent, they are gods. Thus we have as many gods as saints. But if they hear but in one place, then nine thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine out of the ten thousand are praying to absent saints! This one thought, reverend sir, very early in life impressed my mind, and was not the least powerful among the causes which led me, eventually, to reject the authority of your church. How does this strike your own mind? More of these causes in my next.

With respect, yours,

KIRWAN.

The Plague in Russia.

There is no doubt, says the London Lancet, that the medical profession in Russia are at the present moment in a state of profound unrest as to the near future of plague there. From the beginning of the outbreak in the provinces of Astrakhan, there has been a [illegible] course which the plague pursued during its recent prevalence in the province of Ghilan, Northwestern Persia—that this outbreak was probably but the forerunner of a wider and more serious manifestation in Russia which might be looked for in the course of spring. The cessation of the outbreak in the province of Astrakhan has not in any degree modified this view of the subject, and as the spring draws on expectation is on the alert to distinguish the first indications of that which is dreaded. The occurrence of another and happily not fatal case of plague within the infected area on the Volga, in the course of last week, give rise to a momentary fear that the period of intermission between the forerunning outbreak and the greater invasion apprehension had come to an end. It is not, however, the indication in this direction which exercises at the present moment the minds of our professional brethren in Russia. Their attention is fixed upon seeming forerunners of the dreaded malady, which would appear to be scattered almost over the whole area of Russia in Europe. Our readers will remember the case of bubonic malady, unattended with much general disturbance of the system, which Professor Botkine observed a few weeks ago in St. Petersburg, and which he pronounces to be the slight form of plague which often precedes the deadlier manifestations of the disease. The weight of medical opinion in St. Petersburg declared itself against Professor Botkine's view of this case.

It is now known that the case in question is not the only one of the sort which has occurred in St. Petersburg, and that the later cases have been free from the complications which led to doubt in the earlier case. It is now known, too, that similar cases of this dubious bubonic affection have been observed also in Vitebsk, Tsaritsyn, Odessa, and in Warsaw; and it may be inferred that there is at present widely scattered in Russia a form of bubonic disease, of seemingly trival character, unfamiliar to the medical profession there, and which it is feared may be of a sort which preceded the several recent appearances of plague in Mesopotamia, which occurred also prior to the late outbreak of plague in the province of Astrakhan, and which is, in fact, a form of plague.

Under these circumstances, it can be understood with what anxiety the near future as to plague is regarded in Russia by those who are most competent to judge of the possibilities of the case, and how anxiously obscure forms of diseases are now being scanned over a large part of that empire. It is well that this state of things should be fully apprehended here. We shall not now have long to wait before the fate of Russia and our own prospect as to plague for the present year may be determined. But with the events of the Mesopotamian and Persian outbreaks before us, if Europe should be so fortunate as to escape from any further appearance of plague this year, it will be premature to think we have escaped with only the circumscribed explosion on the Volga until another winter and spring has passed.

The Egyptian Imbroglio.

The London press is not content with the situation in Egypt, yet cannot agree upon a remedy. The Examiner thinks the Khedive should be rid of, because a chronic mischief-maker. It says: "If we cannot afford to,' any alien power should command the Suez canal, neither can we afford that it should be commanded by a ruler who is powerless to do anything but mischief." It favors the impeachment of Ismail and the substitution of Hafita Pasha, Ismail's uncle, or Ismail's son, Tewfik Pasha, as Khedive. The Saturday Review thinks that the Sultan should depose Ismail, or coerce him by the threat of deposition, the dread of which, it says, "has made the Khedive bow so far as he has bowed to the dictation of France and England, and his successor would be aware that he only held his office during good behavior." The Spectator, on the other hand, thinks that the proper remedy for the Egyptian imbroglio is to turn Lord Beaconsfield out of office. "A strong government, like that of Lord Palmerston," it says, "would inform France that the situation was unendurable, offer the best terms it could devise, but act, even if the terms were refused, and reduce Egypt in three months to a quiet and orderly viceroyalty, acknowledging so much of the debt as Egypt had actually received, that is, about fifty millions, at three per cent. The British empire would then be in possession of its own door; the Fellaheen would be protected; civilization would have another magnificent province, and the bondholders would receive much more than they are entitled to." But [illegible] has been checked by a Zulu chief and an Afghan sheik, has lost power and influence everywhere, and "has not courage even to fill its own treasury, but renews its bills like a feeble spendthrift." After a caustic and bitter but unjust review of the various shortcomings of the "Jingoes," the Spectator adds: "We have always thought that this government, like the Second Empire, which it so strongly resembles, would die of some great disaster, but we are probably quite wrong. It may perish of the humbler and less painful disease—universal contempt.

COMMUNICATIONS.

"The Whole Counsel of God."

Editor Restitution:—Again I send a very short article to THE RESTITUTION on a subject that seems to me very important indeed. If you do not think it contains "the counsel of God" on the subject it treats of, please do not publish it. Be assured I will never feel hurt or offended at any production of mine being thrown in the waste basket. I can hardly express the deep sorrow I feel at the great lack of brotherly love that exists among us. Why cannot brethren differ and still exercise patience and manifest love one to the other? Is it not because we are yet carnal? I am very glad indeed to see the patience you ever show to all opposers in your more than trying position. May the dear Lord ever be with you and keep you blameless in love to his coming and kingdom is the prayer of your sister in hope of eternal life.

Under the above caption an article appeared in THE RESTITUTION of March 20. The writer M. H. wishes to know what the counsel of God is regarding the training of children, and on who the responsibility of training the child rests. To the law, and to the testimony we will appeal, and in our investigations will be as brief as possible.

I believe the first example on record in the Word of a parent commanding and a child obeying is in Gen. xxvii. 8, 14, 43. "Now, therefore, my son, obey my voice according to that which I commanded thee. And his mother said unto him, upon me be thy curse my son; only obey my voice. Now therefore my son obey my voice, and arise, flee thou to Laban my brother to Haran." Here the mother commands with authority, proving that she had a perfect right to do so, and the child to obey though in the full strength and vigor of manhood.

Again, Jehovah commands, "Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." Exodus xx. 12.

Again, "If a man have a stubborn and rebellious son, which will not obey the voice of his father or the voice of his mother, and when they have chastened him, will not hearken unto them, then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him and bring him out unto the elders of his city, and unto the gate of his place." Deut. xxi. 18, 19. Read also verses 20, 21. "The eye that mocketh at his father and disspiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young ravens shall eat it." Prov. xxx. 17.

From the foregoing Scriptures we learn that both parents were placed over the children and held responsible for the culture given. (Many more texts could be given but we must be brief.) This was under the law, but how is it now? The first instance of obedience rendered to parents in the New Testament is in Luke ii. 48, 51. "And when they saw him, they were amazed; and his mother said unto him, son why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing. And he went down with them and came to Nazareth and was subject unto them." Here let us observe that the reproof was given by the mother, obedience rendered to both parents.

Again we read, "Children obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. Honor thy father and mother, which is the first commandment with promise." Eph. vi. 1, 2. We see then that it is right to obey the mother as well as the father. And if it is right to obey it is surely right to command; and if the right to command be mutual the responsibility is equally mutual. "Children obey your parents in all things, for this is well pleasing unto the Lord." These proofs are quite sufficient to establish the fact that the responsibility of training the children rests upon both parents. Indeed it could not be otherwise. The children belong to both, and the mother would be laboring under a very great disadvantage if she were not responsible, placed as she is continually with the child. And for a child thus placed, to be taught that the mother who cares for its wants has no right to command, and no responsibility to form its character, or to control its waywardness would simply be to render her contemptible in its eyes. Not our Heavenly Father knows what is right and best under the circumstances, and his counsel is, that both parents command, and that the children obey both.

And right here is where too many professing to be guided by the teachings of the Bible, err. Parents do not realize the great responsibility that rests upon them, nor how easy it is to make lasting impressions upon the minds of the young, for either good or evil. They do not mutually form plans for the government of their children, nor do they mutually agree to bring them "up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." This should be done. They should be taught not only God's claims upon them, but also their duties to those with whom they come in contact. The father leaves the training to the mother, and the mother serves it to the children and thus we see every day the wild unrestraint that the children of this age indulge in, and before they are out of their teens the advice and counsel of parents is set aside as no account. Would that every parent in the land, especially every parent professing the truth, would teach their children the Word of life when they walk by the way, when they sit down, and when they rise up. The husband is the head of the wife. The husband and wife the head of the children. "For they twain shall be one flesh." Amen.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

The truest end of life is to know the life that never ends.

We realize the worth of a fortune when we have gained it; of a friend when we have lost him.

Why should we boast of present strength?
Why yield the worldly away?
Why joyous feel o'er what is ours?
O'er what we own to-day?
To-morrow's sun may find us wrath
The damp and mouldering clay.

Rev. W. Arnot: Young people make a great mistake when they allow their heart's hope and portion to grow into this world and this life—a life that some sudden frost may nip. Rather let your portion be a branch of the True Vine—Jesus, the same yesterday, and to-day and forever. He will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.

The truths of the Bible are like gold in the soil. Whole generations walk over it, and know not what treasures are hidden beneath. So centuries of men pass over the Scriptures, and know not what riches lie under the feet of their interpretation. Sometimes when they discover them, they call them new truths. One might as well call gold newly dug new gold.

Kant, the philosopher, used to say that there were two things which he could never think of without being overwhelmed with awe. One was the star-sown deep of space, limitless and endless; the other was Right and Wrong. Right, the sacrifice of self to good; wrong, the sacrifice of good to self, each as wide asunder as pole to pole—as light and darkness; one the object of infinite love—the other of infinite detestation and scorn.

One step to-day and that in faith,
Keeping the prize in view,
I'll walk in calmness toward my home,
And to my trust be true.

A straw will make an impression on the virgin snow, but let the snow remain but a short time and a horse's hoof can hardly penetrate it. So it is with the youthful mind. A trifling word may make an impression on it, but after a few years the most powerful appeals may cease to influence it. Think of this, ye who have the training of the infant mind, and leave such impressions thereon as will be safe for it to carry amid the follies and temptations of this world.

THE YEARS.

Ah! solemn years, that never wait
For strong, nor skilled, nor wise, nor great;
But swing for all the graveyard gate.

In the humblest dwellings and in the obscurest corners the noblest, the most honorable lives are lived as truly as on the wide avenues and beneath the gaze of myriads of admiring eyes. Every life which Christ guides by his light, and cheers by his smile, and crowns with his forgiveness and his reward, is thoroughly worth living for its experience and for its abundant rewards.

Thick on the hills of light shall stand
The gathered sheaves from every land,
While they that sow, and they that reap,
The "Harvest Home" in glory keep.

THE DANGER OF EVIL COMPANIONS.

Robert Hall: Society is the atmosphere of souls, and we necessarily imbibe something which is either infectious or salubrious. The society of virtuous persons is enjoyed beyond their company, while vice carries a sting into solitude. The society, or the company you keep, is both the indication of your character and the former of it. In company, when the pores of the mind are opened, there requires more guard than usual, because the mind is then passive. Either vicious company will please you, or it will not; if it does not please you, the end of going will be defeated. You will feel your reverence for the dictates of conscience wear off, and that name at which angels bow and devils tremble you will hear contemned and abused. The Bible will supply materials for unmeaning jests or impious buffoonery; the consequence of this will be, a practical deviation into vice; the principles will become sapped, and the fences of conscience broken down; and, when debauchery has corrupted the character, a total inversion will take place, as the Apostle speaks, they glory in their shame.

Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times: The serious state of affairs in Russia grows daily more ominous. The conduct of the Nihilist societies, the character of which we gave in a detailed account last week, and which culminated in an attack on the Czar's life, has led to the adoption of measures unprecedented for their severity in the annals of civilized nations. The Russian government evidently considers its only choice lies between such action and wholesale assassination.

Martial law has been proclaimed in six of the great centers of population, including the cities of Moscow, Kieff, Warsaw, St. Petersburg, Charkoff, and Odessa. The effect of this proclamation to place every man's life and fortune in those great cities, and their dependencies at the caprice of the military officials, who may imprison, banish, or execute any suspected person without the form of anything that can be called a trial.

The press of Europe and America seems unanimous in regarding this imposition of Asiatic despotism upon a presumably civilized people as perhaps the gravest event of modern times. The revolutionists will be certain to resist it with a determination never evinced by any barbarian people, while no extremity of danger will draw to the Russian government the hearty support of the other European powers in measures of repression so repugnant to their instincts. Of all the significant events of recent times, this stands first as an indication that the reign of lawlessness which, according to the apostle and prophets, is to characterize the last days of the world, is hastening on.

POETRY.

[Church Music.]

Watch and Pray.

So hath Christ left us, with the sacred charge,
"Watch, watch, and pray!"
In life's great garden we can roam at large,
But still we may
Not lie at ease, but work while it is day.

Yes! we must watch, and while we watch, we must pray,
Lest we, too, fall;
Temptations hover strangely o'er our way;
God knows them all,
And saves from danger those that on him call.

When next Christ comes, in all His glorious power,
Let Him not say,
"What! could ye not watch with Me one hour?"
Perchance this day
May witness that return! Then "watch and pray!"

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—It is not often that the undersigned writes for publication. Such a paper as THE RESTITUTION is desirable in many respects; one is as a medium of acquaintanceship; another is as a means of improvement by way of bringing mind into contact with mind, upon richly varied subjects.

In reading the Bible as containing the Holy Scriptures, we become acquainted with the divinely inspired penmen, the prophets and the apostles, and with others about whom they have written. We obtain the saving knowledge of the one only true God, and of his only beg tten and well beloved Son. We learn that Abraham believed God, and had his belief counted for righteousness. We learn (Rom. iv.) that this was not written for his sake alone, but for us also, if we believe on him who raised up Jesus our Lord from amongst the dead. See the whole context, Romans iv. and v.

We also learn (Heb. xi.) that Abraham by faith looked for a city which hath foundations, whose maker and builder is God. In Isa. ii. we see that Abraham is introduced as one to be looked to, and that he is closely associated with Zion. Please turn to it, and see the close connection.

In Matt. viii. and Luke xiii. we read that Abraham is to be in the kingdom, with many others, even all the true believers—the blood-washed throng. In Psa. xlviii. we learn that "beautiful for situation is Mount Zion, on the sides of the North, the city of the Great King." In Isa. lx., and other kindred passages, we learn the riches, and the beauty, and the glory of this city. Let the disciples of the Lord Jesus get by heart these kindred passages, especially Isa. lx., and they will delight in looking for such a city. In the last chapter of Hebrews we read: "We have no continuing city here; we seek one to come." In Isa. xxxv. and ii. is this testimony: "The redeemed shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy." In Isa. lix. 20, "The Redeemer is to come to Zion." Then, of course, they will be together, as Jesus teaches in John xiv. Some one says:

> Will thou to Mount Zion go?
> Will thou have the Christ or no?

Jerusalem is another name for the same city. See Matthew v.

The studious disciple will add to faith all that the apostle Peter tells him in the first chapter of his second epistle.

My wife and myself are expecting to visit Richmond in a short time. I expect to speak for the brethren.

ALBERT ANDERSON.

Editor Restitution:—As some time has elapsed since my name appeared in THE RESTITUTION, some of my many friends who are readers of your valuable paper may think that A. F. Dugger has made shipwreck of the faith. My faith is as strong as ever in the promise of God to the fathers relating to the earth and the glorious reign of Christ, over the literal seed of Abraham in the ages to come; and notwithstanding my long silence, I have been constantly engaged in the proclamation of these great themes, which are my delight, both by day and by night, only when sickness in my family has demanded my attention at home. Although the hand of affliction, since last fall, has rested heavily upon us, yet our experience is, "the Lord is good." All is well. "Thy will be done."

The first of October we had designed going to San Francisco, Cal., but were taken down with the chills and fever about the first of September, and continued sick until in November, when we apparently recovered and commenced preparation for our contemplated trip, when my wife, boy, and orphan boy were all taken sick again, and remained sick about two months. We laid our own dear, darling boy away to sleep in the quiet stillness of the tomb, until the dawn of the glorious resurrection morn. He was the pride and joy of our life, and not anything did we prize above him, except the blessed hope. When death claimed him as his victim it was indeed hard for us to give him up; and still harder to see, as many think and say, that it was all right. I differ from most people on this subject. I think human society responsible for many of the ills of this present life, and I know from sad experience that friends may speak words of comfort and consolation, but death inflicts a wound and leaves an aching void which time alone can heal, and that, too, only partially. We may console ourselves with the blessed thought of the resurrection connected with the thought that far down the aisles of time, when the rough voyage of this mortal life is over, and we, standing upon the sunny banks of deliverance may look back over the dreary path of ages, and then see that it was all for the best. Though we have been sorely afflicted and sadly disappointed in many respects. Yet we have the necessaries of life, and are in the enjoyment of that sweet peace of mind which the grace of God alone can impart.

Though our family circle is broken—yet in believing and obeying the truth, the remaining fragments constitute a happy band. And we do rejoice, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh, and then our precious one shall be restored to us again.

I love THE RESTITUTION, and regard it as an able defender of Israel's coming kingdom. And may its noble editor, who has for so many years so ably defended the truths of the Bible, be blessed in all things. May he live long to be a blessing to the church and to the world.

In the last copy I saw a letter from Chas. W. W. Cooper, correcting Brother G. M. Myers, as he says, in reference to J. W. McGarvey. I am surprised at this correction. I have McGarvey's commentary on the Acts of the Apostles in my library; have used it in discussions, and he has always been admitted as a Christian, or what, by way of derision, is termed a Campbellite author. But Brother Cooper says that he does not belong to the Christian or Disciple church. Whether he does or not, I am satisfied he is what is termed a Campbellite. I read their religious periodicals, and I see they endorse him. I am also a regular subscriber to the Baptist Battle Flag, published in St. Louis, Mo., in which I see D. B. Ray, the editor, has just closed a debate with Dr. Lucas, of the Christian or Disciple church, and he says that he is ready to meet Prof. McGarvey, or any other Campbellite minister. So if Brother Myers is mistaken he is not alone. A word to Brother J. C. M. Cauuland, and then I close. Dear brother, you say in your article on the thief on the cross, that the Bible Union has made a change in the original text. I once had a copy of the Union translation, but it has got away from my library, some way. Will you please give the change, and also the foot note? Why is not the comma in the Emphatic Diaglott placed after "to-day," instead of before it, as in the A. V.? Will Brother B. Wilson please answer this last question, for the satisfaction, not only of myself but many others.

A. F. DUGGER.

Grant City, Mo.

Editor Restitution:—Such is the portentous character of events, I feel constrained to say a little now and then, though my health is still too feeble for much writing. No sooner has one perplexity passed then another comes up. The county of Durham presents a spectacle truly appalling. Of course, before this reaches you the American papers will have told the story. In other parts business continues down, and at length the question is put before the public: What must be done? This you will find proof of in the pamphlet I mail you. I might quote and quote from it; but this I prefer to leave to your judgment, only the significant words on page six, "Our Hour of Extremity," these I extract; you can present to your readers as much more as you think best.

Uneasiness, unrest, yea, despair, are now apparent in commercial England. Recently I saw a Christadelphian brother upon whom adversity had fallen. He agreed with me in thinking that the pressure would bring the members of the body of Christ nearer together, i. e., if the translation be come while yet in the future. It is, of course, palpably at variance with the spirit of genuine Christianity that some brethren and sisters be left to struggle in affliction unaided, while others have abundance, yea, super-abundance. Rather ought the rich to seek out the groaning ones, than wait to be asked to relieve them. I asked the brother what would Manchester's next winter be if business did not revive? Something terrible, he said; and so the very necessity appears! If the "distress and perplexity" of Luke xxi. have not begun, I am mistaken. France, whose prosperity has been exceptional, is now suffering, like other nations, in manufacturing districts. But the latest news from Egypt is most interesting to those who discern the signs of the times. The land is smitten, the Khedive is desperate, and should he be deposed before this is far on its way, I should not be surprised. Agriculturally, as well as commercially, is England suffering, and this being so, causes more sadness in some quarters than the mere depression of trade. For generations past, notwithstanding fluctuations in commerce and manufacturing interests, land in England has been rising in value. Winter before last, the Times, remarking on the decay of Britain's commerce, spoke as though the back-bone of the nation was yet sound; but recently calculation has been made of the agricultural loss during the last three years, and the amount is such that we need not wonder at the words "England on the road to ruin," appearing in the advertisement of a London infidel paper. How our brethren who are so taken up with "our Israelitish origin" idea will view this matter-of-fact is for themselves to say. Were it practicable, I should attend the discussion in London between Mr. Hine and R. Roberts, on this subject, but I must be content without the gratification. With me it is a foregone conclusion that Mr. Hine will be confounded.

In the Christian Lamp, a Nottingham periodical, an article appears on "The Dwelling-Place of the King of the North," by W. H. Hacking. I think it is not the first time I have seen the view presented that the Turk is really this power. I give no opinion of my own about it now. Concerning Russia, however, there is proof enough of intestine weakness there; I have only to mention the Nihilists; these are a great trouble to the Russian authorities; the Czar must be stronger at home ere he can do much more abroad. The Christian Lamp differs with the Christadelphian concerning the nature of Christ. Both are Christadelphian magazines; the latter named having the larger circulation. I think you, with myself, would rather accord with the Lamp. The Messenger, more especially our paper, has a small circulation—a mere fraction compared with that of the Christadelphian. What divisions and sub-divisions! But a gathering time is coming, and it is our wisdom to take heed that none deceive us or lead us astray. A disappointed Advent woman on the failure of a time movement, exclaimed once at a meeting: "I sometimes ask, what is truth?" The trouble was, that leaders of that movement would not hear some Bible truth, so they and those whom they led were confounded. How could it be otherwise when plain prophecies concerning Judah and Israel were ignored? And what think you of a speaker at a meeting of ours near New York declaring to us that the promise to Abraham that in him and his seed all nations should be blessed was fulfilled in these Gentile times? This dismal statement was actually presented by one of the teachers! Thank God a brighter era than the dark ages of Gentile rule is approaching, the "restitution of all things," etc. Acts iii. 21. Then, indeed, will the promise to Abraham be fulfilled. God speed the day!

I will offer a word of counsel to those who honestly desire to know and do the will of God. Be not perplexed because so much difference exists among those who profess to be looking for the speedy coming of the Lord. God's promises to the true seeker are the same now as ever. Search the word diligently, and pray without ceasing. God will reward the diligent seeker. Hebrews xi. 6.

TIRNOVA, April 29.—The Bulgarian Assembly of Notables to-day unanimously elected Prince Alexander of Battenberg, Germany, to the throne of Bulgaria, with the title of Alexander the First.

[Prince Alexander is the second son of Prince Alexander of Hesse, and a nephew of the Empress of Russia. He joined the staff of the Grand Duke Nicholas at the outbreak of the Turco-Russian war, and was one of the first to cross the Danube. On the conclusion of the treaty of San Stefano, the Prince returned home, and, after a short stay at Darmstadt with his regiment, was transferred to the Prussian Gardes du Corps, the Emperor William's body guard.]

LONDON, April 29.—The official report of the earthquake at Mlareb, Persia, on the 2nd of March, says twenty-one villages were totally destroyed, and 923 persons, 2,000 sheep, 1,126 oxen, 124 horses and fifty-five camels killed.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 30.—A great fire in the city of Orenburg, on the Ural River, on Monday and Tuesday, destroyed the principal part of the town. The loss is enormous. More than half of the population are destitute of food and shelter. A number of persons were injured.

PARIS, April 30.—The most remarkable precautions were taken during the Czar's recent journey to Livadia. Sentinels were placed the whole length of the line. Traffic was stopped, and all access to the line prohibited for twenty-four hours before the departure of the royal train.

LONDON, May 2.—A dispatch from Mandalay states that, despite the peaceful desires of the Ministers of the King of Burmah, the mass of the people favor war. Troops are being dispatched to the frontier in detachments of 1,000 at a time.

LONDON, May 3.—Yakoob Khan will leave Cabul immediately with several Sirdars and Ministers, and a large retinue, to confer personally with the Indian authorities.

LONDON, May 2.—A dispatch from Berlin says Solovieff, who attempted to assassinate the Czar, declares that, though he was compelled, under threat of death, to fire at the Czar, he purposely missed him. Among those arrested on suspicion of Nihilism is Stasov, who was counsel for the defense in a recent trial of a Nihilist. The Governor of Kieff has received letters threatening incendiarism and slaughter by means of dynamite and bombs.

LONDON, May 2.—A dispatch to the Daily Telegraph, from Cape Town, April 16, says: "Dubulunanzi, who led the attack on Gingletova on the 3d inst., and other chiefs with a large armed force following, have proffered submission. Lord Chelmsford promised them personal safety and possession of their cattle, but said, pending the termination of the war, that they should be settled on British territory. John Dunn, formally Cetywayo's adviser, having pledged his word for their safety, the chiefs are expected in at once. Everything portends an early peace. Meanwhile war operations are actively proceeding, and an advance on the King's kraal seems certain from Col. Wood's direction, whether peace is offered or not. John Dunn assures me that Cetywayo's pride is broken. Before the war he regarded the British as useful neighbors, but contemptible in strength, and, partly from good feeling and partly from incredulity of their ability to molest him, Cetywayo refused to molest us. Now he sees his mistake, and, provided he gets good terms personally, he will come in. A universal hope is entertained that the resignation of Sir Bartle Frere will not be accepted."

"Born of Water."

WILEY JONES.

A late writer in THE RESTITUTION insists that a merely natural birth is meant by the phrase, "born of water." But what would have been the need or use of telling Nicodemus that one must have a natural birth before entering the kingdom of God? Had Nicodemus or anybody else ever dreamed that one can enter that or any other kingdom before and without a natural birth? The context proves that the Savior was speaking, not of a first or natural birth, but of being "born again." The Savior himself had lately emerged from the baptismal waves at Jordan, and there was urgent necessity for requiring Nicodemus to submit to the same ordinance, for he belonged to a sect who had "rejected the counsel of God against themselves" in "being not baptized." Compare Luke vii. 30, with John iii. 1.

The denial that "born of water" refers to baptism was so pleasing to an advocate of three dippings that he wrote me a note, calling my special attention to it, as if it had been, in some measure, a triumph of his theory. He appears to have been glad to see baptism torn out of that text in some way; for, of course that text, as relating to baptism, is death to his three-dipping theory. If birth be a symbol of baptism, common sense tells us that the latter is but one emergence from the water. And this is not the only text which compares baptism to being born of water, for the same symbol is used in calling it "the washing of regeneration," that is, "the washing of a new birth," as the word regeneration, παλιγγενεσια, signifies. Justin Martyr, and Irenaeus, of the second century both apply John iii. 5 to the ordinance of baptism. A. Campbell, 1839, says, "That John iii. 5, and Titus iii. 5, refer to immersion, is the judgment of all the learned Catholics and Protestants of every name under heaven." Page 210, of a work styled "Christianity Restored."

And as John iii. 5, is destructive to the three-dipping theory, so also is Titus iii. 5, for it does not say "washing," in the plural, but "washing," in the singular number. Now, we know, with mathematical precision, that the "washing" is performed by dipping once, for the "seven" dippings of Naaman answer precisely to the "seven" washings that the prophet required. 2 Kings v. 10, 14. And as seven washings are seven dippings, of course, one washing is but one dipping, and this is that "one immersion," or one "washing of regeneration." Eph. iv. 5. For a more complete refutation of the three-dipping theory, see the discourse on baptism, in my book entitled "The Gospel of the Kingdom, advocated in a series of Ten Discourses."

The Melbourne Argus of the 21st of February says: "The weather we have had during the past month has been something terrific. Persons who have some little knowledge of temperature declare that with a few more degrees of heat we should all have been roasted alive. This appears very feasible when we find the thermometer at the observatory on the 20th of January showing 106 degrees in the shade and 140 degrees in the sun. This is comparatively cool to what it is said to have been at Yarrawonga, a small township on the River Murray, where it is said to have been 120 degrees in the shade on the hottest day we have had."

DIED.

DUTCHESS—in the sixty-fifth year of his age, Bro. Joel Burgess, of consumption of lungs and liver.

Brother B. was born in the state of New York in 1813, removed to Louis Co. Mo., 1837, married to Miss Sarah M. Fleener in 1841, joined the Baptists 1846. He then removed to Johnson Co., Kan., 1856, and there he united with the Campbellites and in last he embraced the truth under the teachings of brethren Henderson and Fisher, of Olathe, and was immersed by brother Henderson. Removed to Lacotte Co. in 1860, where he has lived till within two weeks of his death, having traded his farm in Labette for one in Leavenworth Co. Kan., where he arrived on Thursday the 3d, and was taken sick on the 5th. His sickness was very severe, but he bore it with Christian patience. Never was there a murmur or complaint passed his lips, and although among strangers, the neighbors treated them like Christians. Words of consolation were spoken by Mr. Hobble from Job xiv. 14, "If a man die shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come." Brother B. had a great desire to live till the coming of our dear Redeemer, but also how necessary is this mortal life, but how certain and how near is the eternal life to those who walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called.

Yours looking for the soon-coming King.

DECK—Fell asleep in Jesus, at her home, Carroll county, Mo., Feb. 16, 1879, Nettie Beck, aged twenty years, eleven months and eleven days.

Sister Nettie was a consistent Christian, loving the truth with all her heart and punctual in her attendance at the church of God, where her presence will be sadly missed. She leaves a father and mother, brothers and sisters to mourn her untimely death. We feel a deep sympathy for them in their affliction. God grant that they may be led into the same faith that Nettie so beautifully exemplified, in order to meet her in that land where the inhabitants shall never say I am sick. Amid tears and grief we quietly laid her away to await the sounding of the archangel's trumpet—

> "Then again we hope to meet thee
> In the resurrection morn;
> Then, like Jesus Christ our Savior,
> From the dead we shall be born.
>
> Then we'll reign with him forever!
> Then the tree of life will grow,
> And its leaves will heal the nations—
> No more pain, or death, or woe."

Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1 Cor. xv, 26.

WM. A PRUNER

SAYLOR—At the residence of his parents near Morrill, Brown county, Kan., April 5, 1879, Samuel Walker, son of brother Elias Saylor, aged seven years, three months and five days.

His disease was called diphtheria. Words of comfort were spoken to these bereaved parents from the language of Matthew ii. 18, by the writer. We deeply sympathize with dear brother and sister, knowing how irreparable is their loss this side of the resurrection, and how they will miss their precious boy. May the promise of the gospel be their consolation in the dark hour of their bereavement.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I shall spend the month of May in Frederick county, Md., and will preach at the following places: Mount Zion, Woltz's, Highland, and Catoctin Furnaces. One of the above mentioned meetings to take the place of our quarterly assembly as may be agreed upon by the brethren and friends of that locality. Bro. John D. Good will be with me.

S. J. MORGAN.

The Lord willing the semi-annual meeting of the Christian Association will be held at New Hartford, Butler county, Iowa, in connection with the tent meeting to be held there, commencing June 19, and holding over the second Sunday. We are informed brother H. V. Reed has appointed to be there. A general invitation is extended to all who love the appearing of our Lord to be present, and it is hoped by the order of the church that all will come prepared to provide for themselves so that the new brethren in the immediate neighborhood of the meeting may not be overburdened.

POETRY.

Signs of Christ's Coming.

Why drag thy chariot wheels, O Time?
How slow the moving hours!
When will thy buds, O "blessed hope,"
Expand to perfect flowers?

When will the black and weary night,
So full of sins and sighs,
End, and the dawn of righteousness
Upon the world arise?

Crowns tremble 'neath His "iron rod,"
Thrones sway in every blast;
Dark shadows of events to come
Upon the world are cast!

The stately pillars of our pride,
On which we placed our trust,
Like Jonah's gourd, in one brief hour
Are leveled with the dust.

The pestilence, with fetid breath,
Comes up from plain and peak,
And sinks through hall and pauper hut
To take the lives of men.

Are these His signal-fires unfurled—
His watchfires in the night—
To tell us of His near approach
Who brings the promised light?

Then lift your heads, ye weeping ones!
Look upward through your tears!
Your night of sorrow soon shall end
In Heaven's eternal years.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Bride of the Great King.

When the twelve tribes of Israel went out of the land of Egypt, the Lord says he was an husband unto them. Jer. xxxi. 32.

From this it would appear that the twelve tribes composed the wife of the husband—the Lord. But is there a plain "thus saith the Lord," that the nation of Israel was the wife of the Lord? There is: the Prophet Isaiah, in speaking of the restoration of Israel, says: "For the Lord hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God." Isa. liv. 6. But, if any should be in doubt that the nation of Israel, represented by Jerusalem, was the wife of the Lord, please read the 16th chapter of Ezekiel's prophecy, which gives indisputable testimony to this truth. Notice the second verse: "Now, when I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold, thy time was the time of love; and I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness; yea, I swear unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine." Also, verse 38: "And I will judge thee as a woman that break wedlock and shed blood are judged." It seems to me there is no room for a doubt on this point, that Jerusalem was the wife of the Lord. But if Jerusalem was the wife of the Lord when in her past earthly grandeur, will she also be the wife of the Lord when she is established in her heavenly and eternal grandeur? We think so, and wish to present our evidence from the Scriptures of the prophets. Isaiah speaks thus: "Fear not; for thou shalt not be ashamed; neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth, and shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more. For thy Maker is thine husband; the Lord of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel; the God of the whole earth shall he be called." Isa. liv. 4, 5. The reproach of her widowhood shall no more be remembered. Why? "And I will betroth thee unto me forever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving kindness." Hosea ii, 19. These Scriptures clearly show that, when Israel is restored to their own land and glorified they will constitute the Bride—the wife of the Lord.

We have said Jerusalem was the wife of the Lord, is now in a state represented by widowhood, but said by the Lord about to be betrothed unto him forever. The same Jerusalem that is trodden down by the Gentiles, is to be made "an eternal excellency, the praise and joy of many generations." "For, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Isa. lxv. 18, 19. "For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee. I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night; ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence, and give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." Isa. lxii. 5, 6, 7. This restored and redeemed Jerusalem will be the New Jerusalem that John the revelator saw among the things that shall be hereafter. "Behold I make all things new," and old Jerusalem, now in bondage with her children, is one of the all things to be made new. If the coming New Jerusalem is to be transported to this earth from some etherial region, then it will not be a redeemed city. And, furthermore, if the territory or groundwork which contains the street is not earthly territory made heavenly, then Abraham never sojourned in the place which he should afterward receive for an inheritance. Heb. xi. 8.

There were not two places promised to Abraham and his seed for an inheritance, only one place, and that he saw. "All the land which thou seest," etc. But, if the New Jerusalem is to descend from heavenly regions, then Abraham never saw his inheritance. We read of an "heavenly country," Heb. xi. 16, but who, that are of faith, will say that it is not on this earth, when the purchased possession is redeemed? And, if Old Jerusalem is to be made an eternal excellency, will it be other than an heavenly city? There will then be a heavenly kingdom, a heavenly city on this earth. Out of the soil of New Jerusalem the tree of life is said to grow. Rev. xxii. 2. Did the tree of life not grow on this earth before it was cursed? So reads the word. Will redemption fail to reproduce that heavenly soil? By no means. It must grow again.

The expressions "cometh down out of heaven," and "descending from heaven," etc., used in the Apocalypse, are symbolic of the heavenly character and state of Jerusalem when it becomes the metropolis of the heavenly country or heavenly kingdom. If Palestine is to become the kingdom of heaven, which it certainly is, why should it be considered unscriptural to say that Jerusalem, now sharing its desolations, should become its metropolis? The apostle, in writing to the Galatians, says: "Jerusalem, which is above, is free, and is the mother of us all." But, let me ask the question if Jerusalem, now in bondage with her children, is not to be made free? Most certainly she is; for it is written: "All thy (Jerusalem's) children shall be taught of the Lord," Isa. liv. 13, and the truth shall make them free. All who are taught of God in this present evil age, are children of the free woman or New Jerusalem, hence, they are looking for "a city that hath foundations whose builder and Master is God." They are not satisfied with earthly Jerusalem, but desire the heavenly, for the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are unseen are eternal."

The free Jerusalem which is above, then, we understand, is the Jerusalem of prophecy whose children shall all be taught of the Lord, which is proved to be true of the Jerusalem now in bondage with her children, when she is freed from her bondage and transformed from her earthly to her heavenly state. And this New Jerusalem is exhibited to the Revelator as the Bride, the Lamb's wife. I know that it is almost invariably held by all the sects that the church is the bride, but this is no proof. What we want is a Scriptural demonstration of the truth. And if I have advanced anything that appears to be unscriptural, will some of the brethren please correct me. Truth is our object.

Now, a word or two concerning the church. We claim that the position assigned to the church in the future ages, is higher than a brideship, higher than the angels. Christ is the "head," the church is the "body;" the two united make one, and are said to be equal in glory and position when united. The church are joint heirs with Christ, so that whatever he is heir to, the church is heir to. "Christ being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And, again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me as a son. And, again, when he bringeth in the first begotten into the world, he saith, and let all the angels of God worship him. And of the angels he saith, who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire. But unto the Son he saith, thy throne, O Lord, is forever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." Heb. i. 4-8. Now, what is true of the Son, is also true of his body—the church—as can abundantly be proved by the word of God. Christ is the representative of each member of his body. "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee." Heb. ii. 11, 12. These Scriptures are only a few of the many that reveal the equality of the church with Christ in the ages to come.

We understand, then, from what we have written, that Christ and his brethren will be uniform in character and office in the future, which will be kings and priests after the order of Melchisedec, and will constitute the Bridegroom, the Husband of the Queen, the Great King of all the earth. But, "on his right hand will stand the Queen in gold of Ophir." Psa. xlv. 9. And who is the Queen but the Bride, Jerusalem washed from her filth and abominations, and arrayed in fine linen clean and white? "Put on thy beautified garments, O Jerusalem." "The fine linen is the righteousness of saints." Thus, we have the Adam and Eve of the new creation, the King and Queen of the heavenly kingdom. Thus the church is exalted to the highest possible position; Israel is exalted to the position of Queen.

The Simplicity of Truth—The Dispensations Divinely Ordered in Every Instance.

Deeply do I regret that the occasion has been made for writing a word further on this great subject. However, my regret is not for myself, but for others most concerned. The truth of the successive ages or dispensations is easy of apprehension to one who approaches the subject intelligently. But, where there is no proper primary instruction as to the first principles relating thereto, the whole theme is theoretic, problematic, or something to be argued out through the masses of unsettled opinions. Thus it is with all the profoundest themes of revealed truth. To save space in our precious paper and time to the reader, let us notice that the landmarks of the ages are not left to man, especially of a speculative turn of mind. The three grand dispensations—the Patriarchal, Mosaic and Christian—are determined, and settled beyond the reach of argument. Please observe the facts:

1. That God called Abraham, preached the gospel to him, entered into covenant relations with him and confirmed his promise by an oath! Gen. xii. to xxii. 17, 18; Psa. cv. 8-25; Gal. iii.

2. God appeared unto Moses in the burning bush, and through Moses he showed his power on Pharoah and his hosts, and brought forth his people Israel with great signs and wonders. It was a unique and demonstrated national miracle! It fills the brightest page of ancient history.

3. Simeon and Anna and Mary led the faith of believers on earth, while Gabriel and the multitude of the heavenly hosts came down from heaven to open the incipient scenes of the gospel age by John the baptist and the Lord Jesus! Thence, the land of promise was luminous with "signs and wonders and gifts of the Holy Ghost," as this age was still unfolded by apostles and Timothy and Titus and other "faithful men" who preached the glorious gospel of "the blessed God." Thus, "God most graciously did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name." Acts xv. The Lord prayed for, and sent forth his apostles. These and their successors in the faith and hope and love and labor of Christ, are also embraced and taken into this dispensational intercession. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also who shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one!" One body, of which he is the head! One bride, of whom he is the bridegroom! John xvii.; Rom. xii. 4; 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13; Eph. v. 32; Rev. xix. 7-9. Thus comprehensive is the divine calling, the Messianic intercession, and the range of "the gospel of the grace of God" to the Gentiles.

An argument to ignore all such truth and prove a switch off "the end," is proof positive that dispensational truth is, so far, yet to be learned.

Does it need argument to show that a man's head belongs to his body? or need we argue that the body must needs depend on its living union with its head? No, no.

As Abraham was to the patriarchal age, as Moses and Aaron, with Joshua and the elders, were to the Jewish age, so Jesus and his apostles and their co-workers are to the whole gospel age. The Abrahamic pilgrimage was the beginning, not the end of that age. The mission and meditation of Moses was the opening, but not the close of the divine dispensation by him; so the personal ministry of John, Jesus and his apostles was the fountain head of the stream of gospel grace that still flows and "reigns through righteousness with eternal life," to us poor Gentiles.

Why is this so? Answer: Because God's call and promise to Abraham inaugurated that age! His mission to Moses inaugurated the Mosaic age! Thus, "Jesus, the apostle and high priest of our profession," with his apostles, inaugurated the still prolonged calling of the Gentiles. Surely this is as clear as day. On these God-given foundations we build. "Other foundations can no man lay." 1 Cor. iii. 11. Hence, "the end" of Abrahamic faith, of Moses veiled, foreshadows, and of the apostolic "unveiled gospel of Christ is not yet," but future at the second "appearing and kingdom." "The man of God," though a St. Paul, has been but "an earthen vessel," frail and short-lived, while "the excellency of the power was (and is yet) of God." Nay, it reaches on to what he terms "the end of this present evil world," at the judgment on its Gentile rulers. Dan. vii. 26; viii. 14-19; Matt. xxiv. 14; xxviii. 20; Rev. xvii. to xx.

The entire articles of Brother S., (however, elaborate and latent to himself) centre the whole in the personal authority of those "earthen vessels." But, no; the authority was that of the ever-living God! of the glorified Messiah and the assured inspiration of the Holy Ghost which dwells in and attends "the gospel." Amen.

How strangely bewildering must be the labor through "the long articles" that mistake the texts and all "the first principles" of this fundamental theme of revelation! But, as this secret misconception existed among us, it may be best that it comes out. "We are called unto liberty," but never to such liberty as that which tends to subvert the authority and power of God in his own gospel. It is "the gospel of God," though "preached before to Abraham," or by St. Paul (or us) to the Gentiles! Hence, the long effort to locate "the end" at or near "the beginning," and loose divine authority in "the earthen vessel" is, so far, a lost labor. It is like quoting and mis-appropriating the editorial allusion to a fact, (that we all understood in advance) in plain contradiction to the entire intention of the article. It is on that principle that Elder Thurman seems to have lost himself, and the multitude loose "the form of doctrine" in baptism, and also the resurrection at the second coming of our blessed Lord. It avails nothing to feel all around for the truth among erring men, and yet not lay hold of the handle. "Knowledge is easy to him that understandeth," but not to all. Prov. xiv. 6. Therefore, the farther one goes in such directions the greater the distance from truth, duty or blessing.

Please be assured that my heart was sad to see the article, "Apostolic Age and Apostolic Authority Inseparable," so mis-apprehended. The authority is divine! It remains, as it originated, with all the authority for faith, and the obedience of faith, that it had at Cornelius' conversion. Acts x. 34-48. I had hoped that the error had been given up, and this brief response is still in hope. It is our highest honor to yield to God, and our most heavenly blessing to "confess him and his words before men." The opposite leads in the other direction.

In Christian love,

A Brief Journal of Travels and Labors.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

My travels and labors in the vineyard of Christ have been chiefly confined to Kansas during the past winter, and until within a few weeks. I have visited Severance twice since their conference, and preached six times in a school house south of Severance to quite large and attentive congregations. Good interest was manifested, and, I hope my labors may result in good. I purpose visiting these dear brethren and sisters as often as possible. I delivered six discourses at Hamlin, Brown county, Kansas. The congregations were small on account of the prejudice of the so-called Orthodox preachers and the members of their churches. I delivered three lectures at Sabetha, Nehmaha county, on "The Authenticity of the Scriptures and the Eastern Question." The congregations were quite large and attentive. I delivered nine discourses in Osborn's school house, near Frankfort, Marshall county, to good and very attentive congregations. They are anxious to have me visit them again. The remainder of the time I preached at Scotts school house, near Morrill, Brown county. My labors there were not in vain. The congregations were large and the interest intense. By request, at my last lecture, I spoke on "Trine Immersion." During this lecture I referred to an incident which occurred at Lanark, Illinois, after I had lectured on the same subject there. Mr. Moore, the editor of the Brethren at Work, invited me to call at his office the next morning. I went, accompanied by Brother Garns. Mr. Moore affirmed "that the word baptizo, was a plural verb denoting repeated action." I replied that the verbs "go" and "teach" are plural also, because they have a plural subject. The eleven apostles, or a pronoun agreeing with them in number are plural, and the verb must be plural according to the simplest rule of grammar, that a verb must agree with its subject in number. As well may we argue that the apostles must go into all the world and return to Jerusalem three times, and teach every man three times, as to immerse every man three times. There is a wide difference between each of these eleven apostles immersing one man once, thus making a plurality in the aggregate of persons immersed, and each apostle immersing each man three times. The three participles in Greek, going, teaching and immersing, are plural, because they have plural subjects.

Mr. Moore had so much to say about the verb baptizo being plural and the noun baptisma being singular, that I asked him which governs and must agree in number with the other, the verb with the noun or the noun with the verb? He replied that he was rusty in grammar, or did n't understand grammar, or words to that effect, and called his foreman to answer my question. He said that the noun governs the verb, and that the verb must agree with the noun in number, person and case. I expressed in my lecture, at Morrill, my belief that Mr. Moore does not understand the rules of grammar. To forget the simplest rules of grammar will justly subject him to the charge I made. I then asked his foreman if the Greek noun is not always singular when referring to the ordinance of baptism? He responded in the affirmative. I then asked him if the Greek verb baptizo must not be singular to agree in number with the noun baptisma? If there was any attempt to answer this question it has entirely passed from my memory. I also referred them to several texts of Scripture in which the singular noun and the verb, both in Greek and English, are used interchangeably and convertibly. These examples may be found in Matt. xx. 22; Acts xix. 3, 4; Rom. vi. 3, 4. But I have not time or space to reproduce more of the conversation in Mr. Moore's office.

At the close of my lecture, referred to in the foregoing, I proposed to discuss the issue between us as a people, and the Dunkard's, with any man they might select, naming Mr. Quinter, because he is regarded as one of the ablest debaters in the Dundard church. During my absence from Kansas one Mr. Fahrney and Mr. Lichty, delivered about a half dozen lectures on "Trine Immersion," "The Lord's Supper" and "Feet Washing." Much of their time was spent in criticisms and caricatures of my lectures. On my return, the first of January, I delivered three lectures on the above named subjects. Having no man with whom they seemed willing to risk their cause they resorted to misrepresentation and slander. After a long time an article appeared in a Dunkard paper, called The Brethren at Work, signed by Daniel Lichty. This article contains a tissue of untruths which I have exposed, and which expose, quite a number, who heard my lectures, have signed. This paper was sent to the editor of The Brethren at Work for publication, with a request that, if not published, it shall be sent to the editor of THE RESTITUTION for publication.

Our meetings are always well attended when published, and the best of interest prevails. Three have put on Christ by baptism and several others are expected to follow their example. The Dunkards and infidels united in sending for a man whom neither could endorse, to meet me. They also united in sustaining Wm. P. Shockey. All these efforts to oppose the truth have signally failed.

The Jews in Palestine.

WILEY JONES.

I send for THE RESTITUTION the following article that lately appeared in a Norfolk daily paper:

"The London Standard calls attention to the way in which the Jews, scattered throughout the world, 'are beginning to turn their eyes towards their own land.' The shrewdest financiers of that money-making people are reported to be buying up Palestine. The Jewish Chronicle reckons that there are some eighteen thousand Jews in Jerusalem alone, and that they annually receive about £60,000 from their brethren abroad. Whether dependent upon others or able to support themselves, they cannot be persuaded to expatriate themselves from the old mother country of Judea when they have once returned there. It is probable that Lord Beaconsfield's oriental ambitions and his known sympathies for the regeneration of Syria have given a new impetus to this movement. The Standard further says:

"The possession of Palestine and a part of Syria by a people who have retained an indestructible nationality, while they have learnt a complete cosmopolitanism during some eighteen centuries—a nation at once European and Asiatic—Asiatic in origin and European in education, would not be by any means a bad arrangement. It might not be impolitic on the part of European powers to assist in placing so influential a people in so important a position, so soon as the inevitable decay of the Turkish power renders a change of government necessary. All the difficulties and jealousies incident to any project of 'joint occupation' would be avoided; for the Jew is, at once of no nation and of all. No people could better solve what before many years must become the 'Syrian difficulty.'"

Surely, "the kingdom of God is nigh at hand," (Luke xxi. 31), for the silvery streaks of dawn begin already to illumine the eastern sky. Let us trim our lamps and be found watching—"the morning cometh!"

BREVITIES.

The monument to be erected near Trajan's Wall, in Bulgaria, by the Russian Government, to commemorate the deeds of the Russian soldiers who fell in the late war upon Turkey, is already prepared in St. Petersburg, and consists of several huge granite blocks. One weighs 24,000 pounds, and others nearly as much.

A LAWSUIT ABOUT A HAIR.

There is a tremendous dispute raging in India over a hair from the Prophet Mahomed's beard. This holy relic is enclosed in a case, guarded by an official, who has a Government pension of 100 rupees per annum, and six fanatical Mussulmans are disputing for its possession. The dispute has been taken before the High Court.

The Koh-i-noor Diamond, which is the largest in the world, and which Queen Victoria wore in a brooch at the wedding of the Duke of Connaught, was, we are told, first discovered in the mines of Golconda in India, about A. D. 1550, and has cursed the world for 225 years. Of the seventeen Indian rulers who successively possessed it, all suffered defeat, and the majority died violent deaths. On the annexation of the Punjaub in 1849 the diamond passed into the hands of the British, and was presented to Her Majesty in July, 1850.

The Shanghai Sin Pao publishes an account of the cruel treatment to which the coolies are subjected who are employed in the Dutch islands in the Straits to clear land and plant tobacco. Every man on his arrival is tattooed on the cheek. Once arrived, they are never released. No letters are allowed to be transmitted. If any one tenders his ransom, it is not accepted. When sick they have no medical attendance. For dress they have only cocoanut bark, for food one pound of rice in the husk and three cash to buy salt fish daily. When a man dies his body is cut in four, and is buried under a banana tree to manure it. On account of the heat and unhealthiness of the climate, nearly half die the first year. Many are killed by the cruelty of the overseers, and some are driven to suicide. The total number of cases of death since the trade was begun is more than 10,000. No one has ever been known to escape.

THE FAMINE IN MOROCCO.

LONDON, April 23.—A correspondent writing from Mizpah, Morocco, states that more than 15,000 persons had perished in that town from hunger. There were dead or dying lying in every street in and out of town. The dead were buried not more than one span deep, and dogs soon uncovered the earth and fed on the bodies. Small-pox, measles, cholera and typhoid fever (the latter now raging) have succeeded each other. In Mullahor, the Jewish quarter, every house has been turned into a hospital. Starvation was not confined to men. Cattle, camels, horses, asses, sheep and poultry have all, or nearly all, perished, but the dogs have survived, and in their insatiable hunger, finding no food in towns and abandoned by their masters, who have either died or left them in search of food, fed on human flesh. Roaming over the country, in bands of twenty, thirty and fifty, they sometimes even attacked any human being they met, and devoured him. Some twenty men, women and children were eaten up within one mile of town.

New York Sun: Mr. Stewart's remains can hardly have a more checkered career than those of a very different celebrity—Voltaire. When he died at Paris in May, 1778, the Church there refused sepulture to its arch enemy, and his body was interred at Scellieres, in Champagne. During the revolution the National Assembly decreed, that Voltaire's remains should be brought to Paris, and they were accordingly deposited in the Pantheon with great pomp, in 1791. Thither, too, presently came the body of Rousseau. One dark night in May, 1814, when the Bourbons were enjoying their own again, some of the faithful, indignant that the bones of such enemies to religion should rest in consecrated ground, threw them pell mell into a sack, and carried them to a point in the suburbs near Bercy, where there was a large vacant lot belonging to the city. Here a hole had been already dug, and the contents of the sack were shaken into it and covered with quick lime. The hole was then filled in, and the conspirators trampled down the earth. Voltaire's heart had been saved by a friend, in whose family it remained until 1864. On its then being offered to the Government, Napoleon III. decided that it should be placed with the body. On consulting the Archbishop of Paris, that functionary suggested the expediency of verifying the actual presence of Voltaire's remains. An investigation followed, and the truth came out. The heart was then placed in the National Library, and a portion of the brain appropriated by the surgeons at the autopsy was publicly sold. Its present whereabouts is unknown.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Waiting for Christ.

B. WILSON.

And to wait for HIS Son from the heavens, Whom he raised from the dead,—Jesus, our Deliverer from the coming wrath. 1 Thess. i. 10.

Ever since the Son of God passed into the heavens, the attitude of the true church has been that of waiting and watching for his return. The promise he left behind him that he would come again, is the ground of [illegible] saw him go away, and heard at the same time what the angels said to them—"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven,"—could never forget this important declaration. The apostolic letters to the congregations are replete with instruction, exhortation and comfort drawn from this precious and important truth. The Corinthians were addressed as persons who were "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," 1 Cor. i. 7; the Philippians as those "whose citizenship is in the heavens, from whence we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ," Phil. iii. 20; the Thessalonians were exhorted "to wait for his Son from heaven;" and the Hebrews were told that "to those who look for him shall Christ appear the second time without sin unto salvation, Heb. xx. 28, and that "favor was to be brought to them at the revelation of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. i. 13. Thus, this glorious event became the hope of the church in its darkest hour, and has been looked for and waited for in every age as the end of sorrow, and the dawning of eternal joy.

The popular professing church of to-day does not look for Christ's coming. She does not desire it, and can see no special need for it, except to judge the wicked, and burn up the world. Besides, she believes that she will go to her Savior at death, in spirit form, and dwell with him in heaven to all eternity. She does not wait for Christ, but, according to her belief, he is waiting for her. Oh, what a departure from the ancient faith! She bears the name of Christ, but she profanes it. She has broken her vows, by seeking other lovers. She has committed adultery with the world, forgetting that it is written, that "whosoever will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." The world has converted the church, and filled it with worldly things. Its desires are for worldly honors and aggrandizement. "The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," fill the cup of its enjoyment. It has no room for Christ—no desire for his coming. It is not so, however, with "the remnant of the woman's seed"—"the little flock, to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom." They watch for Christ's coming, as storm-tossed mariners watch for the morning. They watch and wait, for it is only "a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." "Their loins are girded about, and their lights burning, and they are like unto men that wait for their master, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open to him immediately." Luke xii. 35, 36. Let us inquire for what reason the church should be found waiting for Christ.

1. Because his coming again is the hope of the church. This hope embraces, not merely the fact of his second advent, but it includes what he will do for his people. "Christ is the head of the church, and he is the Savior of the body." The church is placed in such close relationship to him, that it is compared to the complete human form—the head and the body. An union of both is necessary for a perfect, living man. The head, Christ Jesus, has been invested with the power of an endless life, and it is necessary that the body, the church, should be so too, in order that the union may be perfect. The Father has given the Son power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father has given him. John xvii. 2. Christ has promised this life to all his disciples—"I give unto my sheep eternal life;" and the Apostle John says: "And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life." 1 John ii. 25. This life is hid with Christ in God. The church, in its trial state, only has it in promise. Consequently it is a matter of hope, and is called "the hope of eternal life." And as this life is in the Son of God, and he has promised it to all his faithful followers, he is called "our life," and "our hope." The believer is on probation in the present state—making a character. He lives by faith; he walks by faith. He looks beyond the present into the future. The unseen things with him are the lasting, the eternal. The exceeding great and precious promises are the basis of his hope, and as these all center in his [illegible] He does not seek death, or "to be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality may be swallowed up of life." 2 Cor. v. 4.

The Bible Christian views death as an enemy, and not as "the gate to endless joy;" and the cold grave has no special attractions that he wishes to enter its portals. Still he rejoices to know that if he should be called to encounter the foe, that his Savior has vanquished death, and burst open the gates of the grave, and made a pathway through them to endless life. Jesus has brought life and incorruptibility to light through the gospel. His own resurrection has proved its possibility; and "if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring (or lead forth) with him." 1 Thess. iv. 14. Rejoice, then, ye sorrowing ones, who have lost near and dear relatives and friends! if they sleep in Jesus they do well. You ought not to sorrow as the others who have no hope. Not one will be forgotten. Besides, "the dead in Christ shall rise first"—they will take the precedence over the living in putting on resurrection life. The resurrection of the sleepers first, then the change of the living, is Paul's revelation to the Thessalonian brethren. 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. So also to the church at Corinth. "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (the living) shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52, 53. This is the ordained time and means by which the body, the church, will become like its living head. A physical change is necessary for a proper union with the Lord, and in order to inherit his kingdom, for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Continued existence is incompatible with, and undesirable in the present sinful state. We are waiting for Christ to deliver us from this state of sin and death. He has promised to do it, and we believe his word. We wait and watch. We are beginning to be anxious. The indications are that he may come in our day—nay, soon, very soon. The church has been looking for him in every age since his departure. The apostles wrote as though he would come in their day. They knew neither the day nor the hour. This uncertainty was imposed to cause watchfulness. "In such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." How important to be on the lookout, and in a state of readiness. To cut loose from all worldly alliances and attachments, and have our loins girded, and lights burning. Then we shall not be taken unawares, but rejoice that our deliverance is near. Christ will bring us salvation not only from sin, death, and the grave, but gives us eternal glory. He will share his throne and kingdom with his church. The promises are rich and many on this point, and very precious to the believer. The apostle Paul calls this glory which is to be given to and manifested in the saints,—"a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," —language failed him to describe it. Shall we not wait and watch for Christ? Yes, with patience wait for him.

2. Because he is coming to Zion for the redemption of Israel. Isa. lix. 20; Rom. xi. 26. He came to Israel once and was rejected; when he comes again they will acknowledge him, saying, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." His name was called Jesus, because he should save his people from their sins, Matt. i. 21. This will be done nationally when the Lord appears in his glory. Peter told the Jews that God would send Jesus Christ which before was preached unto them, when the times of restitution should arrive. Acts iii. 20. Christ is coming to them as the root and offspring of David, to raise up the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, and to sit upon his throne. He comes to establish the throne and kingdom in righteousness, and to save the nation from all their enemies. "In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely." "He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root; Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." Isa. xxvii. 6. No more desolation of their land—no more oppression by [illegible] as the mire of the streets, but Jerusalem shall become a praise in the earth. Hear the proclamation with respect to the saved remnant of Israel: "Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people; behold the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world. Say ye to the daughters of Zion, behold, thy salvation (or Savior) cometh; his reward is with him, and his work before him." Isa. lxii. 10, 11.

The Lord Jesus says to the church: "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." He comes to reward his saints first—then the righteous remnant of Israel. The Prophet Isaiah says, in another place: "Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Isa. xl. 10. His work, in the first place, will be like that of David, to conquer a peace, for the nation by subduing their enemies. He will break "the staff of the wicked, and the sceptre of the rulers," and the enemies of Israel shall acknowledge them as the Lord's people. Yea, the Lord says of them: "Kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers; they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord; for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me." Isa. xlix. 23. The nation of Israel is waiting for their Messiah and redemption, and Jesus will bring it when he comes to those of the nation who receive him as the Christ of God.

3. We wait for Christ because he is the Savior of the world. He is the world's Redeemer, not only in the sense of an individual and personal Savior, but also nationally and universally. Jehovah has said of, and to his Anointed, "It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribe of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel; I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth." Isa. xlix. 6. The nations are waiting for the golden age, though they do not know by what means it will be introduced. The Shiloh, or the giver of peace, is the desire of all nations, though they may not know who he may be. "The whole creation (of mankind) are groaning and travailing in pain together," "waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God." The world has been in the crushing service of sin for the past six thousand years, and needs a rest. What a history the past reveals! What havoc sin has made! Socially, who can number the evils that afflict society at large, or, which bring disaster and ruin upon individuals and families? Vice of every kind prevails; evil and pernicious principles abound; bad habits which are destructive to health, happiness and life, are universally practiced. Hence, we have the state of things described by the Apostle Paul in Rom. i. 26-32,—a dark catalogue of evil, but, nevertheless, true. And, nationally, what does the world present for our view? Jealousy, rivalry, unrest, commercial and financial troubles, distress of nations, perplexity, fear of coming disaster, famines, fires, floods, pestilence, earthquakes, cyclones, besides internal national broils and discord, caused by oppressive taxation, unjust laws, and bad legislation. The world needs a Savior—a just, wise and powerful Ruler. One is provided, and he is coming to give peace and rest to the nations. The promise is that all nations shall be blessed in him. He will bless them through righteous laws, rulers, and government. Evil will be restrained,—good encouraged—the poor protected—the oppressor cut off—wars cease—peace abound—knowledge increase—idolatry and superstition come to an end, and true religion flourish. "Peace shall flow as a river, and righteousness as the waves of the sea;" "Mercy and truth meet together; righteousness and peace kiss each other."

We are waiting for Christ to gather together his church unto himself, whether they be sleeping or waking, that we may be one with him in glory, honor, and incorruptibility. We know that his coming will end all our troubles, and give eternal peace. We [illegible] the salvation of Israel, for then Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad. As "the sun of righteousness" he will arise upon them with healing in his wings, and bless them with peace and prosperity. We wait for Christ, because, as the seed of Abraham, he will come to bless all nations with deliverance from every evil which has afflicted and oppressed them. He will give them rest—a Sabbath—for one thousand years. Then let us patiently wait for the Lord; for those that "wait on the Lord, and keep his way, he will exalt to inherit the land." Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come. Amen.

The Wheat and Tares.

My attention was called to this parable by some remarks I saw in a recent number of The Age to Come Herald, handed me by a friend. And as some of the readers of our paper may fall under some or all of the deceptive veils therein contained, perhaps it would not be out of place to furnish such with the means of meeting such wiles of the devil.

Let us notice the Savior's explanation of the parable:

"He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man." This needs no explanation here.

The word of the kingdom is the seed sown. Verse 19. It may be said that this refers to another parable, which is true; but he does not sow two kinds of seed—mankind and the word of the kingdom. The seed sown was not a portion of mankind, because God "made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth," Acts xvii. 26. It is true, also, because Paul said to the Romans: "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for all have sinned. Therefore, as by the offense of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Rom. v. 12, 18.

Now, just as extensive as the condemnation, just so far the justification in Christ must extend before everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power can be executed.

At some time every individual will be justified to life, and they will all be taught of the Lord. Isa. liv. 13; Jer. xxxi. 34. "Who will have all men to be saved and come to a knowledge of the truth,"—the salvation comes first—and then by a willful disobedience they will "die for their own iniquity." Some are now taught of the Lord, and such have been justified to life. If they have been obedient, they will be raised in immortal glory when Jesus comes; but if they have been willfully disobedient by refusing eternal life, they will die for their own iniquity, and from that there is no appeal. Paul says: "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." Heb. vi. 4-6.

Thus it would seem evident from the testimony given, that man in this state is not a tare—except as God speaks from our ignorant standpoint, speaking of all who practice sin as tares—except those who have tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, and have willfully disobeyed. Heb. x. 26.

"The field is the world." Verse 38. The word here rendered world is kosmos, which means, primarily, order, etc. The order here referred to is, unquestionably, the order of humanity; and we can find this use of the word. In John i. 10, this use of the word is quite clearly shown. He was in the world, and the world was" through him, and the world knew him not. Here, let the interpretation be what it may, if fair, it cannot alter this meaning of the world, for it was susceptible of being taught. This would not be said of the earth. "We are made a spectacle unto the world." 1 Cor. iv. 9. "Ye are the light of the world." Matt. v. 14. "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." John iii. 17. We do [illegible] texts on this point.

"The good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one." Here it might seem as though I had cut myself off by my previous argument, but such is not the case. By metonymy he puts the thing producing something for the thing produced. He uses a figure. The seed he sows is the word of the kingdom; that produces fruit. That fruit is called wheat because it is good. If a farmer wants wheat he must sow wheat. Then the case in hand would stand thus: The seed sown is good—is wheat, if you please; and the fruit produced is good—is wheat. Now, I claim that it is not out of usage to call the field, or any part of it, by the name of that which is produced. For example, a man says to his visitor, Come, look at my farm. They pass along, and the farmer begins to describe things: That field is all wheat; that is all oats, etc. For myself I have been used to just such language. And, more than all, and how it rings in my ears now, I have heard this: That piece of ground is all weeds! Tares, is it not? It was not necessary that he should say the field is men, or is the world of mankind; for the world naturally means that; and besides, it is a common use of the word to call the race the world. Then in using the word in this, a most natural way, it would not only be natural and a common way of speaking, but a most reasonable way, to call those who produced bad fruit by the name of the fruit produced.

"The enemy that sowed them is the devil,"—adversary, Diaglott. I suppose the greatest adversary man has, at least for his eternal welfare, is self. "Let him deny himself," says Jesus. Man "is drawn away of his own lusts, and enticed."

"The harvest is the end of the world." This is not the same original word rendered world in the previous verse, but is aion, and means age. The following verses narrate the closing scenes of the age. It will be measurably fulfilled in the close of the present age when Jesus shall take to himself his bride (Rev. iii. [illegible]), and shall purge out the rebels (Ezek. xx. 38); but its completeness will be when Jesus "shall have put down all rule and all authority and power." "This world" (age) in the fortieth verse does not necessarily refer to the present one, but to the one referred to in the previous verse, and which must be determined by circumstances and the teachings of the other Scriptures. It is not necessary here to try to prove that this parable extends beyond the present dispensation; for I should only have to prove that all things that offend will not be gathered out, but only commences when Jesus comes in the clouds of heaven. That is too plain to be necessary to deal with here.

I assumed the duty of presenting this parable before the readers of our paper, not because I thought I could do better than any one else, or even as well, but because I am so situated as to have some such necessities forced upon my mind sometimes. All others have different expositions. I hope we shall see them. S. H. REEVE.

* "Made" is a supplied word according to the Diaglott. Wilson has inserted the word "enlightened" in brackets, as his exposition, I suppose. To me, however, the word "taught" would seem to agree better with that which immediately follows. He will enlighten every man; he did not then; but he taught the then world, and yet the world knew him not. The same is true to-day.

Carlyle: It is a high, solemn, almost awful thought for every individual man, that his earthly influence, which has a commencement, will never, through all ages, have an end! The life of every man is as the well-spring of a stream, whose small beginnings are indeed plain to all, but whose course and destination, as it winds through the expanses of infinite years, only the Omniscient can discern.

Christian cease thy look of sadness,
Let not sorrow dim thine eyes;
Let thy every heart joy and gladness—
Let songs of praise arise;
Then we'll look towards around the lower,
Then shall have thy triumph hour.

THE LONG PROMISED DAY.—We can learn this lesson, at least,—that that man has no humanity, no philanthropy, and certainly no christianity, who does not long for that long promised day when earth shall be restored from its thraldom, when the groans of creation shall cease, when all things shall be made new, when Paradise shall return; and Christ shall reign over a happy, a holy, a peaceful world; and God shall have glory, and we shall praise him day and night, as the monuments of his love, and the purchase of a Savior's blood, and without ceasing. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 14, 1879.

A NUMBER of manuscripts that we hoped to give room for this week are necessarily deferred.

THANKS to Brother Heyes for late London papers. We clip an item for this number for our news column in relation to a massacre of the Jews in the government of Caucasus.

A NOTICE of our annual June meeting at Antioch, Ind., will be found in another part of the paper. We hope our brethren and sisters will arrange to attend at this time and place, to converse together on our blessed hope and consult about the best means of promoting the interests of our Savior's cause in these last times.

BROTHER BENJAMIN GARDINER'S letter in regard to a tragedy at Gifford, Iowa, in which J. W. H. was a prominent actor, if accounts be true, came to hand with a newspaper slip containing details. We had seen accounts of this miserable affair in several papers, but thought best to await more definite information from some of our brethren conversant with all the circumstances before saying anything through THE RESTITUTION. If accounts be true, our brethren should utterly discountenance the offender by entirely disfellowshipping him.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

A copy of this work has just come to hand, and we have had only time for some cursory glances at the manner of treating the different subjects of the discourses that make up the volume. We have no hesitancy, however, in most warmly commending it to the brotherhood as an instructive and interesting production that will richly repay for cost and perusal in the important information that it will not fail to impart to every reader. For price and address see notice in this number.

God is Faithful.

"Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it. 1 Thess. v. 24. What God promises he will fulfill. His word is truth. Faithfulness is the stability of his throne. The operations of the law of nature can not interfere with his plans and purposes; for he ordained and [illegible] the unrestrained play of his passions, are powerless to counteract God's plan to miscarry. Paul was impressed with the thought of God's faithfulness when he exclaimed: "Let God be true, but every man a liar." Romans iii. 4. And again: "For all the promises of God in him are yea and in him amen." 2 Cor. i. 20.

Balaam, the Moabite prophet testified to the veracity of Jehovah in these words: "God is not a man that he should lie; neither the son of man that he should repent; hath he said and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken and shall he not make it good? Num. xxiii. 19.

The Psalmist says: "With my mouth I will make known thy faithfulness to all generations." Psalm lxxxix. 1.

This is said with reference to the royal covenant with David: "My covenant will I not break; nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever and his throne as the sun before me. The infidel says that the God of Revelation is fickle and vacillating; that he changes his purposes, and that he is foiled and defeated by the craftiness and wickedness of men. The charge has been refuted by the events of history responding amen to the predictions of God's prophets. Nineveh and Babylon, Tyre and Zidon, Moab and Ammon, Arabia and Idumea, Philistia and Egypt, out of the dust of their ruins echo to the voice of Hebrew prophets. So the Jews and Jerusalem, the latter in its desolation, the former in their dispersions among the nations, are abiding witnesses to the truth of God's word. The argument drawn by Volney from "The Ruins of Empires," is completely overthrown by the facts which he states himself; and thus an infidel has, unwittingly, done good service for the cause of Christianity.

Virtue.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. Yes, show me a virtuous woman, and I will show you a woman whose estimated value is far above all the precious diamonds of the world. Wherever she may go her moral character will invariably show forth to the world, that she is a pattern of purity. Virtue is one of the Christian graces that if carried out to perfection, will most assuredly lead a life that will redound to the glory and honor of the cause of truth. No individual it matters not how high his position may be in this world, can ever obtain a record of purity and uprightness without the silver cords of virtue link together each and every act that pertains to true loyalty to God. If the principles of virtue are carried out to the letter they will make the individual prove, to an absolute certainty, that he or she is true and loyal to the honored positions in this world which they occupy. Virtue is based upon the eternal truths of the Deity. Fidelity and equity go hand in hand, each occupying its high position to virtue and they are as inseparable as knowledge and wisdom, which throw forth their fulgent light of purity on this maculated world of sin, and they may well be compared to apples of gold in pictures of silver. We, as a people, are living in one of those grand epochs of time that were foretold by the ancient seers of old, where virtue almost ceases to find a place amongst the corruption of the world. Let us always be found striving to attain that degree of perfection, that the smiles of heaven and earth may beam upon our true manhood, with uncommon refulgence. May our integrity so spread its radiant light of purity over this world of sin and sorrow, that those who behold our daily walk and conversation may be profited thereby. Will this mundane sphere of ours ever be wholly inhabited by a race that are strictly virtuous? God only can answer this momentous question, and according to the word of truth the time will never come until death is swallowed up in victory, then and not until, will that state of happiness be realized.

The Testimony of Jesus.

Inasmuch as this is one leading characteristic of God's people, by which they are known, it becomes us all to examine the subject with care, and determine definitely what the testimony of Jesus is. And first, we wish to pay our respects to that theory claimed by Adventists and others, viz: that the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy, or the wisdom and power to foretell future events. Now, if we could persuade ourselves that this was a true exposition, we certainly could not object. At the same time for us to accept as the truth of God any [illegible] sanctioned by zealous men and women, is neither [illegible] safe. And that their theory is weak, silly and false, we offer the following:

If Mrs. White's pretended visions are the testimony of Jesus, the spirit of prophecy, then Mrs. White alone, has this peculiar quality, as this is an individual qualification—as much so as the keeping of God's commandments, and her brethren had as well claim the favor of God on account of her loyalty, as on account of her pretensions to prophecy. One is as broad as the other. "Here are they," all of God's people, an individual qualification.

How is it that men and women become so infatuated as to claim special favor and future blessings by proxy? Very many of her brethren know but very little about her visions. To test this, let her visions be assailed, their hideous deformities exposed, and many of them that ought to know better, will deny this, that and many others, as being visions at all. Like many blind honest persons, when their creeds are exposed, know but little more than that they have given the assent of their minds to the various human productions.

Once more: If the position of Adventists on this subject is anywhere near the truth, that God's people, all believers, are entitled to some supernatural manifestations, is it not unaccountably strange that among their thousands of believers for the last thirty years, not one is found worthy of this Christian and God-given prerogative, except Mrs. White? and what is stranger still, if possible, her manifestations began while she was a Sunday keeper, before she was sealed by keeping the Sabbath, before the law was sealed with the Sabbath, a part of the law! It does seem that any ordinary mind could see from these stubborn facts, that Sabbath observance is no test whatever; also, that if their faith is correct, they lack the essential quality, works, it does seem that an honest heart must be completely enveloped in sectarian fog that will not pause and call for a readjustment of faith and works. It is not enough to simply excommunicate and cry out, Heresy! Rebellion! and the like, to those free born, and not creed-bound.

One word more before we dismiss this part of the subject, we would say to all, Read Mrs. White's visions for yourself; do not fear to read them; like one of their ministers said, a short time ago, having committed himself to them, he hesitated and feared to read an expose of them.

"The testimony of Jesus"—what is it? Having found what it is not, we enquire, What is it? Having also found that not only one out of ten thousand have the testimony of Jesus, but all Christians, even those martyred under the fifth seal, all those who live again having part in the first resurrection and reign with Christ a thousand years. See Rev. vi. 9; xx. 4; xii. 17; xiv. 12. The testimony of Jesus is what Jesus testifies to, like the testimony of any one else. The testimony of Jesus, and faith of Jesus, are terms certainly used interchangeably. See Rev. xii. 17 and xiv. 12. The revelation of Jesus Christ, and testimony of Jesus Christ, as found in the first two verses of this book, certainly are closely allied to each other. The testimony, or witness of God, i. the record he gave of his Son. Men can lay hold on and believe this testimony or record, or they can reject it. And to simplify it down to our comprehension, he contrasts it with the witness or testimony of men. See 1 John v. 9-11. The Apostle Paul certainly uses the terms testimony of our Lord; and the gospel as equals in meaning and force. See 2 Tim. i. 8.

In closing up the book of Revelation, Jesus Christ, the true witness, says: "He which testifieth these things, (these things being the testimony) saith, surely, I come quickly." Amen. Even so, come Lord Jesus.

A Card.

The word and doctrine of the spirit is noted several hundred times in our New Testament. It occurs in the most vital association with God and Christ, and the entire work of grace in human redemption. But as all reasonable ground of objection lies in the abuse of the doctrine, I remind the reader that the scriptural use of it is the "only corrective," 2 Tim. iii. 16.

Thence we may follow St. Paul's example, "which things we speak, not in words taught by human wisdom, but in spiritual words." Macknight, 1 Cor. ii. 13. This gives the spirit its own proper place, as really as the Son; and this seems enforced by the prominent reason, as really as by the highest reverence, because it involves the integrity of God in his revelation. Fanatism, like formalism, attach to those "who separate themselves . . . having not the spirit." Jude . . . by adherence to the word of God. Amen.

My presumption is that the aim of each engaged in the consideration of this doctrine has been to please God—like his servant Job. If so, the diversity lies mainly in our antecedents and diverse approaches to our present position in regard to it. Our peculiarity, as a Bible people, if any, should be in avoiding all new adjustments of divine revelation, for as we read Rev. xxii. 18-19, there seems much more than the cherubim and flaming sword set to keep the way of truth unobstructed from accretions or alterations. See Heb. vi. 12-13; Psa. cxix. 128.

Respectfully submitted to prevent all needless misunderstandings, and secure the "unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." Eph. iv. 3-13.

Destruction of the Inquisition.

The following account of the destruction of the Inquisition at Madrid is related by Col. Lehmanowsky, a Colonel in the French army, who was entrusted with the duty of demolishing the Inquisitorial buildings in 1809:

It had been decreed by the Emperor Napoleon, that the Inquisition should be suppressed, but the decree was not executed. Months passed away, and the prisons of the Inquisition had not yet been opened. One night, about 10 o'clock, as Col. L. was was walking one of the streets of Madrid, two armed men sprang from an alley, and made a furious attack. He instantly drew his sword, put himself in a posture of defence, and while struggling with them, he saw, at a distance, the lights of the patrols—French soldiers mounted, who carried lanterns, and who rode through the streets of the city at all hours of the night, to preserve order. He called to them in French, and as they hastened to his assistance, the assailants took to their heels and escaped, not, however, before he saw by their dress that they belonged to the Guards of the Inquisition.

He went immediately to Marshal Soult, then Governor of Madrid, told him what had taken place, and reminded him of the decree to suppress this institution. Marshal Soult replied that he might go and destroy it. Col. L. told him that his regiment was not sufficient for such a service, but if he would give him two additional regiments, he would undertake the work. The troops required were granted, and I proceeded, (said Col. L.,) to the Inquisition, which was situated about five miles from the city. It was surrounded with a wall of great strength, and defended with a company of soldiers. When we arrived at the walls, I addressed one of the sentinels, and summoned the "Holy Fathers" to surrender to the Imperial army, and open the gates of the Inquisition. The sentinel, who was standing on the wall, appeared to enter into conversation for a moment with some one within, at the door of which he presented his musket and shot one of my men. This was a signal of attack, and I ordered my troops to fire upon those who appeared on the walls.

It was soon obvious that it was an unequal warfare. The walls of the Inquisition were covered with the soldiers of the holy office; there was also a breastwork upon the wall, behind which they kept continually, only as they partially exposed themselves as they discharged their muskets. Our troops were in an open plain, and exposed to a destructive fire. We had no cannon, nor could we scale the walls, and the gates successfully resisted all attempts at forcing them. I could not retire and send for cannon to break through the walls, without giving them time to lay a train for blowing us up. I saw that it was necessary to change the mode of attack, and directed some trees to be cut down and trimmed, to be used as battering-rams. Two of these were taken up by detachments of men, as numerous as could work to advantage, and brought to bear upon the walls with all the power they could exert, while the troops kept up a fire, to protect them from the fire poured upon them from the walls. Presently the walls began to tremble, a breach was made, and the Imperial troops rushed into the Inquisition. I caused the "Holy Fathers" to be placed under guard, and all the soldiers of the Inquisition to be secured as prisoners. We then proceeded to examine all the rooms of the stately edifice. We passed through room after room, and found everything to please the eye, and gratify a cultivated taste; but where were those horrid instruments of torture of which we had been told; and where those dungeons in which human beings were said to be buried alive? We searched in vain. The "Holy Fathers" assured us that they had been belied—that we have up the search, convinced that this Inquisition was different from others of which I had heard.

But Col. De Lile was not so ready as myself to give up the search. He advised that water should be poured over the floor of the Inquisition, which was composed of large and beautifully polished slabs of marble, and a careful examination made of every seam in the floor, to see if the water passed through. By the side of one of these marble slabs the water passed through fast, as though there was an opening beneath. All hands were now at work for further discovery. The officers with their swords, and the soldiers with their bayonets, seeking to clear out the seam, and pry up the slab. Others, with the butts of their muskets, striking the slab with all their might, to break it, while the priests remonstrated against our desecrating their holy and beautiful house. While thus engaged, a soldier who was striking with the butt of his musket, struck a spring, and the marble slab flew up. Then the faces of the Inquisitors grew pale as Belshazzar's, when the hand-writing appeared on the wall; they trembled all over. Beneath the marble slab, now partly up, there was a stair-case. I stepped to the altar, and took from the candlestick one of the candles, four feet in length, which was burning, that I might explore the room below. As we reached the foot of the stairs, we entered a large square room, which was called the Hall of Judgment. In the centre of it was a large block, and a chain fastened to it. On this they had been accustomed to place the accused, chained to his seat. On one side of the room was an elevated seat, called the Throne of Judgment. This the Inquisitor General occupied, and on either side were seats, less elevated, for the Holy Fathers, when engaged in the solemn business of the Holy Inquisition.

From this room we proceeded to the right, and obtained access to small cells, extending the entire length of the edifice; and here such sights were presented as we hope never to see again!

These cells were places of solitary confinement, where the wretched objects of Inquisitorial hate were confined year after year, till death released them from their sufferings, and there their bodies were suffered to remain until they were entirely decayed, and the rooms had become fit for others to occupy. To prevent this being offensive to those who occupied the Inquisition, there were flues or tubes extending to the open air, sufficiently capacious to carry off the odor. In these cells we found the remains of some who had paid the debt of nature; some of them had been dead apparently but a short time, while of others nothing remained but their bones, still chained to the floor of their dungeons.

In other cells, we found living sufferers of both sexes, and of every age, from three-score years and ten, down to fourteen or fifteen years,—all naked as when born into the world! and all in chains! Here were old men and aged women, who had been shut up for many years! Here, too, were the middle aged, and the young man and maiden of fourteen years of I. The soldiers immediately went to work to release these captives from their chains, and took from their knapsacks their overcoats and other clothing, which they gave to cover their nakedness. They were exceedingly anxious to bring them out to the light of day, but Col. L., aware of the danger, had food given them, and then brought them out gradually to the light as they were able to bear it.

We then proceeded to explore another room on the left. Here we found the instruments of torture, of every kind which the ingenuity of men or devils could invent. Col. L. here described four of these horrid instruments. The first was a machine by which the victim was confined, and then, beginning with the fingers, every joint in the hands, arms and body were broken or drawn, one after another, until the victim died. The second was a box, in which the head and neck of the victim were so closely confined by a screw, that he could not move in any way. Over the box was a vessel from which one drop of water a second fell upon the head of the victim—every successive drop falling upon precisely the same place on the head, suspended the circulation in a few moments, and put the sufferer in the most excruciating agony. The third was an infernal machine, laid horizontally, to which the victim was bound, the machine then being placed between two beams, in which scores of knives, so fixed, that, by turning the machine with a crank, the flesh of the sufferer was torn from his limbs, all in small pieces. The fourth surpassed the others in fiendish ingenuity. Its exterior was a beautiful [illegible] image of woman, [illegible] dressed, with arms extended, ready to embrace its victim. Around her feet a semi-circle was drawn. The victim who passed over this fatal mark, touched a spring, which caused the diabolical engine to open, its arms clasped him, and a thousand knives cut him into as many pieces, in the deadly embrace.

Col. L. said that the sight of these engines of infernal cruelty kindled the rage of the soldiers to fury. They declared that every Inquisitor and soldier of the Inquisition should be put to the torture. Their rage was ungovernable. Col. L. did not oppose them; they might have turned their arms against him, if he had attempted to arrest their work. They began with the Holy Fathers. The first they put to death in the machine for breaking joints. The torture of the Inquisitor, put to death by the dropping of water on his head, was most excruciating. The poor man cried out in agony to be taken from the fatal machine. The Inquisitor General was brought before the infernal engine, called "the Virgin." The soldiers commanded him to kiss the Virgin. He begged to be excused. "No," said they, "you have caused others to kiss her, and you must do it." They interlocked their bayonets so as to form large forks, and with these they pushed him over the deadly circle. The beautiful image instantly prepared for the embrace, clasped him in its arms, and he was cut into innumerable pieces. Col. L. said he witnessed the torture of four of them—his heart was sickened at the awful scene—and he left the soldiers to wreak their vengeance on the last guilty inmate of that prison-house of hell.

In the meantime, it was reported through Madrid, that the prisons of the Inquisition were broken open! and multitudes hastened to the fatal spot. And O, what a meeting was there! It was like a resurrection! About a hundred who had been buried for many years, were now restored to life. There were fathers who found their long-lost daughters; wives were restored to their husbands, sisters to their brothers, and parents to their children; and there were some who could recognize no friend among the multitude. The scene was such as no tongue can describe.

When the multitude had retired, Col. L. caused the library, paintings, furniture, etc., to be removed, and having sent to the city for a wagon load of powder, he deposited a large quantity in the vaults beneath the building, and placed a slow match in connection with it. All had withdrawn at a distance and in a few moments there was a most fearful sight to thousands! The walls and turrets of the massive structure rose majestically towards the heavens, impelled by the tremendous explosion—and fell back to the earth, an immense heap of ruins. The Inquisition was no more!

The Fearful Bride.

"At the marriage of King Alfonso of Spain the music was a mable feature, Lucca, Tamberlik, Fanto, and Gayarre singing in the choir. The crown which the new queen was to wear was composed of nearly five thousand diamonds, besides other precious stones. The bridegroom wore a bright and joyful look, while the bride was pale, and her fine dark eyes were burdened with tears."

Whether they were tears of joy or of sorrow we are not told; but in this world of ours, where the causes of grief are so numerous, it would not be surprising if they were the latter. A costly crown cannot cure every heartache, nor music always drown the throbbings of a sorrowful soul. Queen Mercedes is probably not the first bride that felt fearful by the side of a kingly bridegroom.

But there is one bride who shall know no sorrow on the day of her nuptials—the bride of Christ. Her marriage will take place "in the morning;" and with the passing night and fleeing shadows her tears shall forever disappear (Psa. 30: 5). Raised from the bed of death, robed in righteousness and immortality, amidst the music of the heavenly hosts, she will take her place by the side of Him who loved her and gave himself for her. No star-gemmed crown of earth can compare with hers in that day.

NEWS ITEMS.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 9.—The Golos states that the first party of 300 out of 2,000 persons arrested in Moscow during the winter have started for Siberia. Nine thousand persons in other towns will pass through Moscow during the summer.

LONDON, May 9.—Advices were received to-day from Calcutta giving further particulars of the fearful condition of affairs in Burmah. The cabal surrounding the king have again caused [illegible] feelings of animosity the surviving members of the royal family, and the king has ordered a number of these princes to be executed. The bloody work was still going on when the last advices from Mandalay were received. A reign of terror prevails throughout the kingdom, and the invasion and capture of the territory of British force would be hailed as a blessing by a large portion of the population.

LONDON, May 8.—The Times correspondent at Bucharest says that private accounts reaching there from Russia represent the situation all over that country as being beyond description, and that the tendency of the so-called repressive measures is toward revolution rather than peace, as the present annoyances and outrageous oppression of all classes of population are rapidly spreading a feeling that anything is preferable to the existing state of affairs. It is asserted that the government is really playing the game of the Nihilists, instead of crushing out the spirit of discontent in the empire.

GENEVA, April 22.—A correspondent of the Neue Zuricher Zeitung, writing from Zigdidi, in the government of the Caucasus, on the 4th of April, describes a shocking massacre of Jews which occurred in the village of Satschcheri, in that neighborhood. At the beginning of the month it appears that the body of a child was found in a wood, and seven Jews of the place were accused by the Christian villagers of having killed and secreted it for their Easter sacrifice. They were arrested and taken before the district Judge, but immediately dismissed, as it was testified by a medical witness that the child had died from natural causes and that the wounds found on the body were the work of wild animals. Rejoiced at the issue of their trial, the Israelites of the village assembled at the house of one of their number to celebrate the event by a dinner; but in the midst of their feasting they were surprised by a party of Christian villagers, who burst into the house ax in hand, killed six of the inmates on the spot, and grievously wounded many more. The narrator of the incident alleges that the priest of of the Greek Church of Satschcheri was the instigator of this act of ferocious fanaticism.

The Weekly Review (London) says that since 1800 nearly one Jew have confessed faith in Christ in the Episcopal Jews' Chapel, Palestine Place, London.

What Constitutes a Church?

What constitutes a Church?
Not Roman basilic or Gothic pile,
With tented roof, tall spire, and long-drawn aisle,
These only mock thy search;
Fantastic edifices which all is said,—
Seek not the living Church among the dead.

What is a Church, indeed?
Not tripled hierarchy, or throned priest,
The stolen trappings of the Romish feast,
Altar, or will-ing creed,
Rites invoked to save, to sanctify,
Nor aught that finds the ear, or lures the eye.

A band of faithful men
Met for God's worship in an upper room,
Or caught by midnight's starry dome,
On hillside, or low glen,
To hear the counsels of his Holy Word,
Pledged to each other and their common Lord.

These few as they may be,
Compose a Church, such as, in pristine age,
Defied the tyrant's zeal, the pagan's rage,—
For where but two or three,
Whatever place in Faith's communion meet,
There, with Christ's presence, is a Church complete.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Inclosed you will find one dollar for continuance of my paper for I can't do without it, as we only have preaching once a month by brother Geo. C. Ward. We have an organized church here of fifteen members, and we are earnestly contending for the faith; and I am glad to see the brethren taking a decided stand for a definite gospel and that all mankind must hear, believe and obey the one gospel or they cannot be saved in the kingdom. This gospel is concerning a kingdom that God has promised to his son; the territory of this kingdom in its commencement is the land that God promised to Abraham and his seed for an everlasting possession, but in the end will include all under the whole heavens. All things concerning this kingdom is good news because the assurance of its fulfillment is based upon the promises of God to Abraham. Abraham believed God's gospel preached to him, and his faith was accounted to for righteousness. All who do not believe it are not of Abraham's seed, neither are they heirs of the promises made to the seed. The one definite gospel cannot be preached and leave the kingdom out, for the gospel is the things concerning the kingdom. The commission is go ye into all the world and preach the gospel. He that believeth the gospel and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not the gospel shall be damned. Yet some will say so I am sincere it makes no difference what I believe. This I deny, for the Apostle Paul was sincere when he was persecuting God's people, and are not the heathen acting according to their understanding of worship? Who will dare to say they are not? But you say you do not believe they will be saved in this age, but will have a chance in the next to form characters according to God's plan. If the above theory be correct, why not save them in this age? They have acted up to their faith, why take them over to the next?

Down here in the nineteenth century it will not do to present a definite gospel and a definite faith lest we shall be esteemed as bigots and uncharitable by others. But I ask who shows the greatest amount of charity to a sinner and is the most acceptable in the sight of God, he who tells him to repent and be good, and if you can't go with us, it makes no particular difference what one, only help to support some theory, and all will be well, or, he who presents to him the truth of God, showing him that there is but one gospel, but one plan of salvation, but one Bible faith and but one hope, but one way of becoming a child of God, and that way by believing the one gospel.

Editor Restitution: To my mind THE RESTITUTION surpasses any and all papers with which I am acquainted. Treating, as it does, on the all things, pertaining to the near coming kingdom.

I have been out of health for nearly six months not being able to perform any labor or to sound out the word. But I find my health returning with returning warm weather. Oh how I long for the glad day to come when the Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings. When the ransomed of the Lord shall come to Zion with songs of everlasting joy upon their heads. Then sorrow and sighing will forever flee away. So then cheer up desponding pilgrim, buckle on the armor and battle for the right. I commenced my labors for the season last Sunday at Augusta, Wis. Held services at 10:20, a. m. Performed the ordinance of baptism at 2 p. m. The candidate was an intelligent Frenchman, brought out from Catholicism by the Gospel of Christ as presented him by brother and sister Stiles. They found him wallowing in the mire of superstition and unbelief and they, good samaritan like, took him to their sanctified and quiet home and taught him the way of God, more perfectly and he gladly received the word and was united to Christ and to the brotherhood by baptism and is now rejoicing in hope We commend him to God in whom he trusts. There are others at Augusta, whose minds are becoming enlightened by the untiring zeal of brother and sister Stiles, may God bless them. Our young brother's name is Charles Taggart, he had to face a storm of entreaties from two religious denominations at Augusta in order to get into the full liberty of the gospel. Also entreaties and threats from a Roman Catholic priest. But out of them all the good Lord has delivered him. The priest was at his house not long since and wanted to sprinkle his little one, but he refused to comply with the request knowing as he did that baptism (not sprinkling) follows faith and as his little one whom he holds dear is not old enough to exercise faith he refused to comply with the request of his highness, whereupon the priest told him that God would shut the little one out of his kingdom as a result of such wicked neglect, which led our brother to believe that the Roman Catholic God was not much better than the orthodox devil. And so he concluded to come out from all of their idols and serve the living and true God and wait for his Son from heaven—even Jesus when He hath raised from the dead and delivered us from the wrath to come. May the good Lord preserve us unto his heavenly kingdom is my prayer.

Editor Restitution: A word to the brethren of the one faith. It seems to me that the thing we most need is a better financial system. Much of our best talent is idle or engaged in other business in order to procure a living. Now this state of things is not right. We have capital if it could be reached. Now what we want is a system that will adjust itself to all classes, and in order to make a success we want a well developed system, as no business enterprise can prosper without it. Now brethren let us try and adopt some means in our several churches by which our treasuries will be replenished. The question may be asked How can this be done? Answer, on every first day of the week let each lay by him as God had prospered. In this way each one can do something and no one be burdened. Brethren let us think of these things and go to work, the time for work is short.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—It may be interesting to the readers of our paper, and especially to the members of the household of the one Lord, the one faith, and the one baptism, to know what is being done in the mountains of North Carolina, in the Lord's vineyard.

It is eight years since we began in our weak way to herald forth the good news of the soon-coming kingdom of God. We have done what we could with the limited means at our command, and the many hindrances and stumbling blocks in our way. We have felt deeply the need of the assistance of some who have an abundance of means who have done little to help forward the good work. I am glad it is written that when the Master comes he will reward every one as his work shall be.

I cannot in this short article speak in detail of the good work that has been accomplished. How well the work has been done the future will make known. The day is at hand when the secrets of all hearts will be known, and the motives that have prompted us to act will be revealed. Shall it be said, "Well done, good and faithful servant," or shall it be, "Thou wicked and slothful servant"? While we write we put up a fervent prayer, "Save us from the doom of the latter."

The truth has been permanently established and has taken a wide range, and is still spreading. "The common people heard him gladly." So with this people; they hear the truth, compare it with the fables of the sects, and seize it with avidity. Several preachers have embraced the truth in the love of it, and are doing good service in the Lord's vineyard. Brother Anderson, especially, who travels as an evangelist; several churches have been organized, are in good working order. Our prayer is that they may bring forth much fruit to the glory of God.

And now, as we stand on the margin of the river, we ask, Who will lead this people safely through the perilous tight, and plant them safely in the everlasting kingdom? None but the man with his sword drawn in his hand, the Captain of the Lord's hosts, he alone is able to lead them safely through the fearful conflict. Josh. iii. 10, 11. There are influences at work, speciously and stealthily, to divide and distract the fold of Christ. Christadelphianism acts a prominent part. No open, honorable, logical Bible articles that could be met, but scores of private letters have been sent telling the newly initiated they are in error as to the resurrection of the dead. It is a repetition of what happened in Paul's time. The churches will do well to take Paul's advice and give no heed to such; no, not for a moment. If such really believe we are in error, there is a proper way to convince us. Let them do as we have done—plant their feet firmly on the immutable word of God, and come before the people with an open Bible. We challenge our enemies to show any part of the inspired word of God that we do not believe and teach in its most literal common-sense meaning. Let them remember one thing more—that we most fully believe, and have so preached to this people, that we are living in the very last moments of Gentile time. The very next event in God's arrangement is the coming of Christ in power and glory to judge the quick and dead, to establish his kingdom, and rule the world in righteousness. Are our hands clean from fraud? Are our hearts pure? Have we dealt honestly with men and with the word of God? Happy, indeed, is such a people.

Calyoug, or Year of Misfortune.

And they shall fall by the edge of the sword and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear and looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. Luke xxi. 24-28.

"Epoch or era, is a fixed point of time, made famous by some remarkable event, from whence as from a root the ensuing years are numbered or computed. As there is no astronomical consideration to render one epoch preferable to another their constitution is purely arbitrary, and therefore various epochs have been used at different times, and among different nations." Encyc. A.

Among the various epochs or eras, this Hindoo epoch of Calyoug, seems to be an exception; having for its root or beginning, a year of unexampled misfortune for an historical event, and a conjunction of planets for its astronomical event.

It matters not if the astronomical tables of India be questioned as to their correctness or antiquity, the one prominent historical fact on which the era is founded, stands forth isolated and impregnable, showing that men in the past as in the present time, associated the conjunction with influences of direful portent to the human race.

The principal evidence of this association we find in a controversy at the beginning of the present century in regard to the antiquity and correctness of the Indian astronomical tables.

Before proceeding we will give another extract from the authority previously quoted: "This (Calyoug) era, is the most ancient of India and dates from a period 3101 years before Christ. It begins with the entrance of the sun into the Hindoo sign Aswin, which is now on the 17th of April N.S.—"

Prof. Playfair's commentary on the Indian astronomy was published in the Philosophical Transactions for 1790. He there says that "it is through the medium of astronomy alone, that a few rays from those distant objects, (the primitive inhabitants of the earth,) can be conveyed in safety to the eyes of a modern observer, so as to afford him a light, which, though scanty, is pure and unbroken, and free from false coloring of vanity and superstition.

With respect to the Indian tables, the professor further said that on grounds which have now been explained, the following general conclusions appear to be established:

The observations on which the astronomy of India is founded, were made more than 3,000 years before the Christian era, and in particular, the places of the sun and moon, in the beginning of the Calyoug or age of misfortune, were determined by actual observations. Two other elements of this astronomy, the equation of the sun's centre, and the obliquity of the ecliptic, when compared with those of the present time, seem to point to a period of this astronomy 1,000 or 1,200 years earlier; and the time necessary to have brought the arts of calculating and observing, to such perfection as they must have been, at the period spoken of, comes in support of the same conclusions.

One learned professor's devotion to science, led him to overlook revelation, and he soon found himself a target for the shafts of the theologists of the day.

Dumb founded at first, the theologians were silent until they found some difference in opinion among the astronomers, on the antiquity of the tables. As may be supposed in the controversy that followed, that neither the professor nor the tables, escaped injustice and vituperation.

To discredit either was a divine duty with the theologians, not considering that any astronomical event that occurs in modern times, might have happened with a mathematical certainty at the beginning of a cycle, that possibly might reach beyond the present cosmos.

One authority quoted by the opposition was the French astronomer Laplace.

Everything says Laplace leads us to conclude that they (the Hindoo tables) are not of high antiquity. They have two epochs, which go back, one to the year 3,102, and the other 1,491 years before the Christian era. These are linked together by the mean movements of the sun, moon and planets, so that one of the epochs is necessarily fictitious. In fact if we assume for our point of departure, the epoch 1491, and go back, by means of the Indian tables, to the year 3,102 before the Christian era, we obtain a general conjunction of the sun, moon and planets, as these tables suppose; but this conjunction differs too much, from the result of our best tables, to have taken place, demonstrating that the epoch to which it refers is not founded on observation.

The writer does not think the above evidence is of sufficient weight to overthrow Play fair and the Indian system of astronomy for the following reasons:

Laplace admits that from the epoch beginning 1,491 B. C., to the year 3,102 B.C., a cycle is embraced, that contains a general conjunction of the planets at the latter date. This acknowledges the correctness of the tables, but he questions the period at which this cycle occurred in the world's chronology. He arbitrarily selects a point in an era, whose chronology is uncertain, and adds elapsed part of the present era of still doubtfull chronology, and argues that our tables, do not give this general conjunction. Besides what does he mean by general conjunction? Is it a conjunction of all the important planets, at one moment of time or is it like the coming perihelion conjunction, covering a period of five years?

We willl quote one more authority against the correctness and antiquity of the Indian tables. Delambre in his history of astronomy says: When we enquire why the Indians chose the remote and fictitious epoch of Calyoug, or misfortune, we perceive in the first place, that they might make all the planets start from one point, a conjunction which their method of calculation required. If we further ask, why they adopted a complicated method which employs divisions and multiplications of enormous numbers, with many additions, subtractions, reductions and different precepts, the answer is, that they did not wish for written tables; they wanted numbers which could be put into technical verses, even into songs, so that the calculations might be performed without writing a book.

It appears then, that these tables, have been handed down by tradition, that the numbers were arranged rhythmetrically, and in form of songs transmitted to posterity. Is it any wonder that errors might be found in tables and formed and preserved in such a manner? Would it not be wonderful if there were not errors? Would national vanity associate the conjunction of the planets with a period of their national affliction, calamity, Calyoug or misfortune? But it is foreign to the purpose of the present article, to defend the chronological truth of the Indian tables, or the chronology of any era, but simply to show that in the past as in the present, times great tribulation was associated with the conjunction of the planets.

Another Hindoo epoch is of interest at the present time; it is the epoch of Salivahana.

This era is identical with Calyoug in months, divisions and commencement, differing only in the date of the year, which is 3179 years more recent than the other, commencing A. D. 77.

Whether it was founded upon astronomical facts, or upon some important point of public calamity, is not stated by any authority that the writer has had access to, but we note the condition of the Jews and the destruction of Jerusalem A. D. 70 and the advent of the plague in that city two years after, and its destructive reign in Rome A. D. 77, we find a season of calamity, worthy to be called Calyoug, and a point in history worthy to begin an epoch. Where in the history of man since the flood (Calyoug?) is there a time recorded more calamitous, or in which men seemed to have less control of themselves? If the planets in conjunction, have an influence for evil, we should look for a conjunction at that period. To trace the plague through history, and find a connection between these visitations and conjunctions of planets, is a task of great difficulty, because conjunctions are only partial, and the influence if any, would vary greatly in intensity and time of conjunction.

Now in conclusion, brethren let us carefully consider the calamities and condition of the world at the present time. Is there any signs in the heavens? Are the nations of the earth distressed with perplexity? Are mens hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after these things which are coming on the earth? If so, then let us comfort one and another with this precious promise: Luke xxi. 28. "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. Yours in hope,

One hundred and sixty-two authentic cases of living burial are put on record by the eminent French physician, Dr. Josat. The period of unconsciousness before burial, in these cases, lasted from two hours to forty-two. The causes of apparent death were these: Syncope, hysteria, apoplexy, narcotism, concussion of brain, anaesthesia, lightning, and drunkenness.

Book Notices.

"The Infidel Silenced by the Most Irrefutable Evidence Relating to the Authenticity and Credibility of the Holy Scriptures," by William H. Wilson, Chicago. This is the title of a very neatly gotten up pamphlet containing evidences relating to the authenticity and credibility of the Scriptures of a size and price adapting it to general circulation. Its arguments, though concise, are logical, and it is well adapted for general circulation. Price 25 cents.

From P. B. Good, General Passenger Agent Kansas Pacific Railway, we have received a copy of "Colorado Tourist and Illustrated Guide to the Rocky Mountains." It is a large quarto pamphlet of seventy-two closely printed pages and contains a well executed map of Kansas and Colorado, showing the direct railroad route to the mining regions. The natural wonders of the world are depicted in its illustrations while the descriptions of the marvelous scenery in the Great West must be read to be duly appreciated. We tender our thanks to the sender, Mr. Good, for this valuable pamphlet as well as for minor papers sent with it.

DIED.

FARNEY.—At Ottumwa, Iowa, May 4, 1873, Elizabeth, wife of Samuel D. Farney, in the twenty-eighth year of her life.

Her disease was quick consumption. She leaves two children without a mother's care and a mother's love. We all mourn her loss, yet not without hope. Those who knew her best, loved and appreciated her most. She was a firm believer of the gospel and an earnest, noble true woman. We laid her down to rest, gently, amid silence, sorrow and tears, but with an unwavering confidence in the promises of God, that He would raise her up to life again and clothe her with the mantle of immortality. Discourse on the occasion by the writer from 2 Sam. xiv. 14. He endeavored to set forth the means God has provided that those who are subject to death may escape therefrom. A. J. EVERHART.

POETRY.

The Watcher on the Tower.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

"What do'st thou, lone watcher on the tower?
Is the day breaking?—come the wished for hour?
Tell us the news, and stretch abroad thy hand,
If the bright morning dawns upon the land."

"The stars are clear above me, save only one
That shines with its rays in myriad hues to the sun;
But yet I see on the horizon's verge,
Some faint, faint streaks, as if the light would surge."

"Look forth again, oh! watcher on the tower—
The people wake, and hunger for the hour;
Long have they dwelt in darkness, and they joy
For the full daylight that they know must shine."

"I see not well—the morn is cloudy still;
There is a radiance on the distant hill—
Even as I watch the misty scene grows clear;
But the stars blink, and the light breezes blow."

"And is that all, oh! watcher on the tower?
Look forth again, at least before the hour.
Dost thou not see the snowy mountain ridge,
And the green woods beneath them on the slope?"

"A mist envelopes them; I cannot trace
Their outline; but the sky comes on apace.
The clouds roll up in gold and amber folds,
And all the stars grow dim. The morning breaks."

"We thank thee, lonely watcher on the tower!
But look again, and tell us hour by hour,
All that is hidden; many of us die
Ere thy day comes; oh, give them a reply!"

"I see the hill tops now; and chanticleer
Crows his prophetic carol on my ear;
I see the distant woods and fields of corn,
And ocean gleaming in the light of morn."

"Again, again—oh, watcher on the tower—
We thirst for daylight, and we bide the hour,
Patient, but longing. Tell us, shall it be
A bright, calm, glorious daylight for the free?"

"I hope, but cannot tell. I hear a song,
Yet it is day itself; and clear and strong;
As of a lark—young prophet of the noon—
Pouring in sunlight his seraphic tune."

"What doth he say, oh! watcher on the tower?
Is he a prophet? Doth the dawning hour
In-pire his music? Is his chant sublime
With the full glories of the coming time?"

"He prophesies—his heart is full—his lay
Tells of the infamies of a perverted day!
A day not cloudless, nor yet void of storm,
But sunny for the most, and clear and warm."

"We thank thee, watcher on the lonely tower,
For all thou tellest. Since he sang his hour
When Error shall decay, and Truth grow strong—
When Right shall rule supreme, and vanquish Wrong?"

"He sings of brotherhood, and joy and peace;
Of days when fetters fall and hate shall cease;
When war shall die, and Man's progressive mind
Soar as unfettered as his God designed."

"Well done! thou watcher on the lonely tower!
Is the day breaking? dawns the happy hour?
We plead to see it. Tell us yet again,
If the broad daylight breaks upon the plain?"

"It flickers—it comes—the misty shadows fly—
A ray radiance gleams upon the sky;
The mountain tops reflect it calm and clear:
The plain is yet in shade; but Day is near."

SELECTIONS.

[The Christian Herald and Signs of our Times.]

The Nihilists in Russia.—Their Origin, Aimes, and Methods of Operation.

The recent attempted assassination of the Czar of Russia has attracted renewed attention to the society known as Nihilists, by whom it is supposed the attack on his life was directed.

The vast empire of Russia, said to comprise one seventh portion of the territorial surface of the globe, and containing a population of over ninety millions, is under the absolute rule of the Czar, and the people have no voice either by representation or otherwise, in the conduct of government. Under a system of despotism, abuses must inevitably flourish, for however wise and benevolent the personal ruler may be, he is liable to be misled by the opinions of interested persons who surround him, and he must intrust a considerable part of his power and authority into the hands of men unfitted to exercise it with benefit to either the ruler or the people. So it has been in Russia, and the Czar, who is said to be a man of a kindly, humane disposition is held responsible for acts of cruelty and oppression perpetrated by subordinate officials.

A feeling of bitter hostility to the government has for some time been prevalent throughout the country, and the vigorous measures adopted to repress it has only fanned the flame, until at the present time the Nihilist and kindred secret societies have spread through the nation like a cancer, and number among their adherents men and women of every rank in society.

The cruelties practiced in the fierce suppression of an insurrection in 1825 left in the minds of survivors and their friends an insatiable craving for vengeance, which issued early in the following year in the formation of a secret society, established with the design of overthrowing despotism and giving Russia a free constitution. The leader of the society was Hertzen, a man of conspicuous ability, whose writings exercised a powerful influence over the minds of Russian youth. He published a journal in London, which was secretly smuggled into Russia and eagerly read. It contained details of court intrigue and reports of affairs in the Czar's palaces, supplied to Hertzen by secret allies in high position at St. Petersburg, and revealed much of the workings of the machinery by which the people were oppressed.

The society was the object of a furious persecution by the authorities. Many of its members were executed, and others exiled or imprisoned, but notwithstanding the efforts made to extirpate it, it increased in number and in power. Journals, political treatises, and novels issued from its printing presses, and were widely circulated among all classes of society.

In 1870 this society took the name of Nihilists, from the Latin word Nihil, signifying nothing, indicating that those who took the name believed in none of the ideas and doctrines either in religion or politics considered orthodox in Russia. From this time they began to take decided and important action. The young men spread themselves through the different provinces, propagating the new ideas among the peasantry, presenting them with books and instigating them to revolution. Young ladies, even of the highest ranks of society, abased themselves as peasants and sought menial employments, that they might instruct others in their peculiar views. Tomboyskoie, a wealthy princess, moving in court circles, was discovered among peasant washerwomen, with a like object. In the schools the young girls nearly all became converts, and no restrictions, no persecutions, have been able to arrest the rapid growth of Nihilism.

It is necessarily a secret Order, for a traitor among its members might consign the whole fraternity to death. The following are some of the secrets of the Nihilist Order. The society is administered under the following rules: Six members can form a separate body, or circle, with full power to act and receive new members, but only with the greatest precautions. A candidate for admission must be recommended as a trustworthy man, upon whom reliance can be placed under any circumstances. After satisfactory investigation, the circle, in full meeting, votes on the new member. Two votes against him are sufficient cause of rejection. One may be if the opposing member can support his opposition by undoubted evidence of disqualification. A newly chosen member is invited to a meeting of the circle, where he must take a solemn obligation or oath, in which he pledges himself to sacrifice his life and all that is sacred to him in the struggle against the tyrants and oppressors of the Russian people; that he will obey and execute every unanimous decision of the circle without hesitation, regardless of any personal danger he may encounter in so doing. He avows himself a sworn enemy of the Russian government, and promises to immediately begin to act against it by every means he can command.

When circle reaches the number of sixty it is subdivided into ten circles of six each, so that if discovered by the police only six persons will suffer arrest. Into these circles which meet ostensibly only for social purposes, as in the enjoyment of friendly hospitality, it is sought to draw in members from every class of society—military officers of every rank, common soldiers, the middle classes and peasantry. It is the passion of the day, and the dreadful mystery which envelops the Order adds to the fascination. Every member according to his means makes weekly or monthly payments to the treasurer. Money is used for the purchase of arms, the propagation of free ideas among the peasantry—each circle sending an armed agent on this errand. Many women belong to these circles. In every town and large village of Russia there are so many circles, that had the government a true conception of the extent of their number it would be even more seriously alarmed than it is.

The audacity with which the Nihilists avow their principles and acts is an important feature of their society, and shows the dangerous character of the organization. This feature was brought into prominence after the recent murder of Prince Krapotkine by a Nihilist agent. A placard was posted through the capital by the society, avowing the deed and stating the causes that had led to its commission, and concluding with these remarkable words: Death for death, execution for execution, terror for terror. This is our answer to the threats, the persecutions and the oppression of the government.

So appalling is the struggle now in progress in Russian society. Injustice and oppression have evoked lawless retaliation, and the social problems of the future will, it is feared, be worked in blood. We can only pray that they may be solved by the doctrines of the Prince of Peace having a full and wide extension in Russia, teaching men that they are brothers, and moving governors and people alike to a mutual recognition of each other's rights, as inculcated by our blessed Lord in his sermon on the Mount.

[By Wm. Lucas, D. D., in The Watchman.]

A Comprehensive Petition.

Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost. Rom. xv. 13.

We have here one of those brief, comprehensive prayers so often met with in the letters of Paul, breathed out in behalf of those to whom he is writing. It is well worthy of study.

We mark first the title or descriptive phrase applied to God, the God of hope. It would be an interesting and profitable study to collect and examine all the titles thus applied to God. In this very chapter we have three of them, and they are very precious. In verse five he is called the God of patience and consolation. What could be more comforting to a tried and troubled believer than this aspect of God's character,—patience and consolation? And then he is called, in the verse we have selected, the God of hope. And in the concluding verse of the chapter he is styled the God of peace.

But what means the expression, the God of hope? It cannot mean that hope, like love or knowledge, is an attribute of God. He is the God of patience because he is patient, forbearing; but he is not the God of hope because he is hopeful. Neither hope nor fear can have place in the omniscient mind. Another meaning then to Paul's phrase must be found. Why call Jehovah the God of hope? Because, so we think, that all genuine hope is inspired by him. He is the author and sustainer of Christian hope, and it is, indeed, a mighty and blessed work, when a poor, guilty, despairing soul is brought to hope in the forgiving mercy of God. It is a divine mercy of God. It is a divine work. God has done it. And in view of this, the Apostle gives him this significant and very precious title, the God of hope. O desponding, doubting soul, not daring to hope, is it not cheering to remember that going to God in prayer you are going to the very God of hope—so styled by the pen of inspiration?

But the wish of the Apostle turned into a petition was that this God of hope would fill the saints in Rome with all joy and peace in believing. Joy and peace are the fruits of believing. They come as the immediate result, and they increase with the increase of faith, so that the soul may be filled with them. And these the Apostle desires in order that the hope may become not scanty and limited, but abounding,—that ye may abound in hope. And mark that this abounding hope is ascribed not to any natural or human cause, but to the power of the Holy Ghost.

It is His blessed work to give hope and to increase it. The believer is begotten again to a lively hope. And if, by prayer, he seeks the Spirit, his doubts may be all scattered, and the feeble trembling hope may become abounding, so that he shall be confident in the Lord.

Christian reader, is not this a most precious petition written by Paul in behalf of his brethren, the saints at Rome? And let us make the prayer our own, that the God of hope would fill us with all joy and peace in believing that we may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost.

Oh, there are heights and depths of Christian experience which ordinary believers have never reached, of which they know almost nothing. All joy and peace, a soul filled with them, abounding hope,—are these ours? They are certainly possible to us, and they are worth striving for. No treasures or honors of earth are to be compared in value with them.

I Made Him What He Was.

Some time ago, a saloon keeper in Dover, Delaware, who patronized his own bar very liberally, stepped into a back room where men were at work about a pump in a well. The covering had been removed, and he approached to look down but being very drunk, he pitched in head foremost. He had become so much of a bloat by the use of strong drink, that it was impossible to extricate him in time to save his life.

There was great excitement in the town. Men and women who had never been inside his saloon before were the first to rush to the rescue, and offer sympathy to the bereaved family. As he was being dragged from the well, and stretched out dead on the saloon floor, a wholesale liquor-dealer from Philadelphia stepped in. After the first shock at finding one of his good customers dead, he turned to a prominent lady and said, pointing to the wretched victim:

"I made that man what he was. I lent him his first dollar and set him up with his first stock of liquors, and he's now worth $10,000 or $15,000."

Looking him full in the face, she responded:

"You made that man what he was—a drunkard, a bloat, a stench in the nostrils of society, and you sent him headlong into eternity and a drunkard's hell! What is $15,000 weighed against a lost soul, a wasted life, a wife, a widow, and children orphans?"

He turned deadly pale, and without a word, left the house.

And so we ask:

"What is all the revenue to the millions whose homes despoiled, whose children are beggared, and whose loved ones are sent headlong to a drunkard's hell? Put yourself in the place of that mother whose son is pursued day and night by this demon, till the hairs of his head become serpents, and live coals burn into his flesh to the very bone, and, fighting devils, he leaps out into eternity; and then asks: "Are my hands clean? Am I doing all I can to stay the tide that is bearing so many down and may yet bear me down?"

The One Thousand Years.

It is sometimes said: Were it not for the 20th chapter of Revelation there would be no proof of an age to come, differing in the work to be accomplished from the everlasting age that introduces the boundless eternity. But, is this so? Are there not other Scriptures that reveal the fact, that prior to the measureless age there is to be an age of subjugation and restoration that shall have a beginning and an end? Let us inquire of the word of the Lord. The Apostle Peter declares the fact that the same Jesus that before was preached unto the Jews, should be sent from heaven, whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, etc. Acts iii. 21. A parallel text to this will be found in the following language: "Sit thou on my right hand until I make thy enemies thy footstool." Making his enemies his footstool, is a progressive work; for, in Psa. cx., it is said, "rule thou in the midst of thine enemies," shewing that his enemies are not put under his feet when he begins to reign.

When Jesus leaves heaven the time will have come for the subjugation of this evil world that now lieth in the arms of the wicked one. The enemies of the Lord are not being made his footstool in this age as many say; on the contrary they are flourishing, proud and scornful, and will continue so until "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ," and "when the law shall go forth from Zion." And that brings us to the age, called by the apostle, the dispensation of the fulness of times in which the Father will gather together in one, all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are in earth. Eph. i. 10. The dispensation of the fulness of times, is the last age that has a boundary; hence, it is called the fulness or completion of times. And when all things are gathered together in one, universal harmony will be restored between things in earth and things in heaven. All things will be of one character, and that will be heavenly. Then the times of restitution will be ended, and the result of the restitution will be the heavenly oneness that shall remain eternally before the everlasting Father.

The Apostle Paul, in connection with his defence of the resurrection, speaks very clearly of this subjugatory reign of Christ, and locates it unmistakably between the resurrection of the church and the resurrection of the rest of the dead. Hear him: "Then cometh the end." What end? Why, the end of the resurrection, most certainly. When does the end come? When he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For he hath put all things under his feet. But, when he saith all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted, which did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all. 1 Cor. xv. 24, 28. Thus, it is clear that God the Father is going to put all things under the feet of the Son. Amen. Then he must have an age to do it in; for it is not being done in the present age; for, when he does subdue all things, he will not be seated upon his Father's throne in the heavens, but upon the throne of his glory, the throne of his father David, in Mount Zion in Jerusalem. Thus it must be clear to careful Bible readers, that there is abundant proof aside from Revelation xx.; there is to be an age intervening between this and the everlasting age of perfection and glory.

The following expressions indicate the age of one thousand years: "The regeneration, the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, the times of restitution, the dispensation of the fulness of times, he will show in his times who is the blessed and only Potentate." The one thousand years is the length or duration of the coming age in which all who get the victory over the powers of this evil world, shall reign with Christ, having power over the nations, ruling them with a rod of iron, and dashing them in pieces like a potters vessel, which denotes the complete subjugation of the nations to Christ and his glorified brethren. All nations and languages must serve and obey him. All nations shall call him blessed. All peoples shall be blessed in him. Amen. Let the whole earth be filled with his glory.

Light Sowing.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

As we sow, so shall we reap. He that soweth to the Spirit, shall reap of the Spirit, reap everlasting life. Let your light shine, &c. Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness.

In the hope that one so earnest and entering as W. Moody might and would perhaps follow the light of Divine truth if he could only see it, the writer sent to one of the papers, the American, in Baltimore, where he is still preaching the subjoined article, seeking to reach the eye of the great Modern Evangelist of his own crude opinions in religion. It was promptly inserted in the American of the 21st, but as yet no fruit has appeared from it. Will you give place to the paper in THE RESTITUTION, at some convenient season, on the principle of being faithful and not weary in well-doing.

MR. MOODY ON THE RESURRECTION.—A FRIENDLY SUGGESTION.

Messrs. Editors of The American:

From the earnestness and persistence with which Mr. Moody insists on the truth and reality of Christ's resurrection from the dead, it would appear that he is convinced that many church members even do not credit the fact; indeed, he has so declared. Now, let me suggest, there is a cause for this incredulity. It is to be found in the constant inculcation by Mr. Moody and his clerical and lay colleagues, both Catholic and Protestant, of the doctrine of the present immortality of the soul, inherent in every man that lives. This pagan dogma that every human being is endowed with an immortal soul, and must therefore live forever and can never die—an old Egyptian superstition—the invention of heathen sophists, like Thales, Socrates and Plato, who had no Bible or divine revelation to teach them better, nullifies, and renders void, to those who receive it, the Bible doctrine of the resurrection or reconstruction from the dust of the dead, as the only hope and means of future life. It is in vain that we search in the Sacred Scriptures for the least trace of authority for such a doctrine. There is no such phrase as the "immortality of the soul," "never dying soul," etc., within the lids of the Bible. On the contrary, it is therein written of man, "Thou shalt surely die," "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," "The wages of sin is death," not eternal life in misery. "God only hath immortality." Christ says, "I am the resurrection and the life," and Paul, in the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, argues plainly and positively—"If there be no resurrection of the dead, there is no future life, and we are of all men most miserable." It may be asked of what use is the resurrection from the dead unto future life, if men have future life by reason of their "immortal souls," whether there be any resurrection or not. Thus it is plainly seen that the immortal soul theory necessarily overthrows the Bible doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, for both cannot be true. Let Mr. Moody recognize and preach the Bible doctrine that men have no immortality out of Christ, and will never get it except through Him by a resurrection from the dead; that death, far from being the gate to the future life is sleep, profound, unconscious sleep, It is so repeatedly declared in the Bible. [See the case of Stephen, Lazarus, the daughter of Jarus, etc.] The dead sleep until awakened by the angel's trump. If he would so teach, his hearers would discern the wisdom and necessity of the resurrection from the dead, which, on his false though orthodox theory, is vain and useless. It is deeply to be regretted that one so earnest and well-meaning as Mr. Moody should waste his time and energies in preaching theories which contradict each other and make void the word of God. No wonder he discovers confusion and incredulity of mind among his auditors. If he would search his Bible to discover the truth on this subject, as diligently as he has done to find out the number of times that Christ appeared to His disciples after his resurrection, and other questions, merely curious, he would learn that the one great peculiarity which distinguishes the Christian religion from all others, is that it teaches that future life is only to be had by the resurrection from the dead, and that the immortality of the soul is a pernicious heresy.

BREVITIES.

The late Dr. Petermann, of Germany, estimated the population of our planet at 1,420,145,000.

There are 18,000 Jews now in Jerusalem, and their brethren in various countries send them $300,000 annually.

The longest subterranean construction in the world is the mines of Freyburg, in Saxony. A series of galleries, which were commenced in the twelfth century, reached in 1845 a length of 123 miles, and had yielded an immense quantity of silver. In 1843 a new gallery was begun, which was finished a year ago, and is eight miles long.

Rev. Dr. Shedd, a missionary, writes from Hamadan, Persia, that there is a wonderful movement among the old and large colony of Jews at that place. Their leaders have been discussing the question whether Jesus was the Messiah, and four of them have decided that he was, and been baptized, while many are applicants for baptism.

Impressions of prehistoric fingers have been found on the bottom of a vase discovered in Lake Neuchatel, Switzerland, and belonging to the age of bronze. Professor Forel, who made the discovery, pronounces the maker of the vase to have been a woman. There are two impressions of the thumb, and three of the forefinger.

FARADAY'S LOST CUP.

This great chemist one day knocked into a jar of acid a little silver cup. It disappeared, was eaten up by the acid, and could not be found. The question came up whether it could ever be found. One said he could find it; another said it was held in solution, and there was no possibility of finding it. The great chemist came in and put some chemical into the jar, and in a moment every particle of the silver was precipitated to the bottom. He lifted it out a shapeless mass, sent it to the silversmith, and the cup was restored. If Faraday could separate that silver from amid the acid and recover his cup, we may surely believe God can restore our sleeping and scattered remains from amid the dust of the earth.

The progress of Japan for twenty-five years has been so great, according to a Springfield Republican letter from R. Henry Davis, who is now revisiting that country, that the inhabitants speak of the "new era" as an entirely distinct period. "I lately stood," he says, "on one of Japan's mountains, and looked over to the inland sea and down upon several cities, connected by newly-constructed railroads and telegraphs of the most approved methods, and saw the fine postoffice buildings, and the excellent and commodious schoolhouses, and witnessed other signs that this people have borrowed largely from those nations called civilized and Christian; but my eye searched in vain for that which occupies the central spot in every New England village—the church spire." The toleration of Christianity in Japan is a thing of recent date, and only within six years have missionaries been safe from personal attacks.

THE DESOLATION OF BABYLON.

A work entitled, "Through Asiatic Turkey," has the following: It is usual for travelers to dwell upon the utter desolation of Babylon, and to paint its site as a strip of desert, especially woe-begone and unfertile. But the eloquent gentlemen who dwell upon this aspect of the place could not have seen it in the middle of April. The date groves and gardens along the banks of the Euphrates are then things of beauty in their fresh spring verdure, and the plain itself is laid down with crops. Irrigation canals cross it here and there, and give trouble to the horseman. No grass grows upon the mounds, and there are patches of the level white with the nitre which is to be found here as in other parts of Mesopotamia; but the surface of the soil is, on the whole, green and pleasant to the eye. The glad waters of the river flow on in the bright morning sunshine, with palm and mulberry hanging over its banks, drinking in sap and life. The great city which counted its population by millions, and filled the world with renown not yet forgotten, has disappeared under the dust of twenty centuries, but nature is as fresh and fecund as when Babylon was still unbuilt. Birds sing overhead in the pleasant spring air; butterflies flutter about in search of flowers; balmy odors regale the sense. It is difficult under the circumstances to feel as one perhaps ought to feel for the great capital which once cumbered this ground. Nature does not mourn for it, and it is hard to be sad at the bidding of sentiment when the bright spring hides its grave.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the investantiation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a heroic belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Priceless Truth.

The state of the dead is another bone of contention in theological circles. The promulgators of fables, (2 Tim. iv. 3, 4,) tell us that man is conscious during the interim between death and the resurrection. Nay, more, we are told that man does not die at all! What a striking contrast is here presented between the tradition of men and the truth of God! Col. ii. 8. "Man dieth and wasteth away." "Man shall turn again unto dust." "They die, and return to their dust." "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death?" Job xiv. 10, 12; xxxiv. 14, 15; Psa. civ. 29; lxxx. 48. While under the dominion of death, the silent sleepers are wholly unconscious of passing events. "The dead know not anything." "Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished." "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest." Eccl. ix. 5, 6, 10. "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." Job xiv. 21; Isa. lxiii. 16. "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" Psa. vi. 5. "What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust praise thee? Shall it declare thy truth?" Psa. xxx. 9; lxxxviii. 10-12. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Psa. cxv. 17. "The grave cannot praise thee; death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth." Isa. xxxviii. 18, 19. "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4.

Language could not more forcibly express the utter unconsciousness of the dead. "Death is compared to the most profound sleep. Profound sleep is a state of utter unconsciousness. A dreamful state is a partially wakeful state. Weary with the toils and labors of the day, a man lies down upon his bed, and in a short time all consciousness ceases—eight hours pass, he wakes from his sleep, and commences thinking just where he left off the evening before—those eight hours were a perfect blank to him. Death is the most profound of all slumbers. It is a dreamless sleep. The thunders may roll and the earth may quake, and they disturb not their calm repose. Nations may rise and fall, and empires crumble to dust and they heed them not. There is no time to these silent sleepers. Time is the consciousness of passing events; but to the unconscious dead there is no succession of events. No weary months and years are slowly rolling their ponderous ear over them, crushing out their fondest hopes. The crack of the oppressor's lash and the horn of the sportsman are alike unheeded. The high, the low, the rich, the poor, the servant and master lie down on one common level. Death is the great equalizer of grades and conditions. All go to one place. Prince, [illegible] slave [illegible] age and the infant of a day—all go to one place—all lie down together. None have pre-eminence in the grave. There all extremes meet." Job iii. 13-19; Eccl. iii. 18-21, ("God's Plan of Salvation," p. 90). We are told that both the righteous and wicked enter upon their reward at death. The Bible teaches that they will be rewarded at the coming of Christ, (Matt. xvi. 27; xxv. 31-46; Rev. xxii. 12,) and the resurrection of the dead. Luke xiv. 14; John v. 28, 29; Rev. xi. 15, 18; Job xxi. 28-30; 2 Pet. ii. 9.

"Messiah's coming, and the tidings
Are rolling wide and far,
As light flows out in gladness
From yon fair morning star.
He is coming! and the tidings
Sweep through the swelling air.
With hope that ends forever
Time's ages of despair.

"This old earth from dreams and slumber
Wakes up and says, Amen!
Land and ocean bid him welcome;
Flood and forest join the strain.
He is coming! and the mountains
Of Judea flog again;
Jerusalem awakens,
And shouts her glad Amen!

"He is coming! wastes of Horeb
Awaken and rejoice;
Hills of Moab, cliffs of Edom,
Lift the long silent voice.
He is coming! sea of Solom,
To heal thy leprous brine,
To give back the palm and myrtle,
The olive and the vine.

"He is coming! blighted Carmel,
To restore thine olive bowers;
He is coming! faded Sharon,
To give thee back thy flowers!
Sons of Gentiles, trodden Judah,
Awake! behold, he comes;
Landless and kingless exiles,
Re-seek your long-lost homes;

"Back to your ancient valleys,
Which your fathers loved so well,
In their now crumbled cities,
Let their children's children dwell.
Drink the last drop of wormwood,
From your nation's bitter cup,—
The bitterest, but the last,—
Make haste and drink it up;

"For he, thy true Messiah,
Takes own anointed King.
He comes in love and glory,
Thee, endless joy to bring.
Ye Sin, thy King is coming,
To end thy woes and wrongs,
To give thee joy for mourning,
To turn thy sighs to songs!"

We are taught that the punishment of the wicked will consist in everlasting misery. That they will be—

"Ever dying, never dead,
Consuming, yet in form the same,
Still writhing, wailing, in the dread
Of horror, keener, burning flame.

"Oh, dreadful thought! Can this be true?
Does fancy paint the scene aright?
Or give the page a darker hue
Than known to Death's long, dreary night?"

There is not an error extant that is more flatly contradicted by the Bible than the monstrous doctrine of an eternity of woe! The Bible teaches that the punishment of the finally impenitent, will consist in destruction and not preservation; in death and not life. See Ezek. xviii. 4, 20; Rom. vi. 23; James i. 15; v. 20; Job xxi. 29, 30; John v. 28, 29; Acts xxiv. 14, 15; Psa. xxxvii. 35; lii. 5; lxxiii. 17-19; xcii. 7; cxiv. 20; Prov. xi. 7; x. 29; xiii. 13; xxi. 15; xxix. 1; Matt. vii. 13, 14; Acts iii. 23; Rom. ix. 22; 1 Cor. iii. 17; 1 Thess. v. 3; 2 Pet. ii. 1-12. Peter asks the question: "What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" 1 Pet. iv. 17. Paul answers, their "end is destruction." Phil. iii. 19. In 2 Thess. i. 4-10, the apostle gives both the nature and duration of future punishment. The wicked will be burned up, or entirely consumed. Psa. xxxvii. 20; xcvii. 3; civ. 35; Isa. i. 28; v. 24; Mal. iv. 1, 3; Matt. iii. 12; xiii. 38-40; Heb. xii. 29; x. 26, 27. They "shall be cut off from the earth" and cease to "be." Psa. xxxvii. 9, 22, 28, 34, 38; Prov. ii. 21, 22; x. 30; xi. 31; Psa. xxxvii. 10; Prov. x. 25; Isa. xli. 11, 12; Jer. x. 24. "They shall be as though they had not been." Obadiah 16 verse. I will close this article with the following extract taken from Mr. Malcom's "Letter to R. A. Fyfe, D. D.," containing strictures on an essay of his, entitled, "The Soul and the Kingdom." Malcom's letter was published several years ago:

"You, however, contend that the souls of both the good and the bad continue to live as distinct entities after their bodies are dead. The countless millions that have succumbed to the monster death, and who, for all that we can see, and according to the express testimony of the word of God, 'are as though they had not been,' you assume to be still alive somewhere, either enjoying or suffering; as that, in your view, Abel has already enjoyed nearly six thousand years of bliss, and Cain has suffered the same long period of woe. What a contrast! Was the moral difference between the two agents really such that a rational being could look on the contrast, and say, 'it is equal?' could he say, here it is manifest 'the Judge of all earth has done right?' And is Cain's [illegible] woe still untouched? Horrible doctrine! Can a reflecting intelligence be found to entertain it?

"On entering on the awful topic, 'the destiny of the wicked,' you deem it necessary again to caution your readers against being led away by the literal acceptation of the terms 'life' and 'death.' In these days, most of our best critics are cautioning against the danger of supposing that the Bible is a mere combination of tropes and figures; judicious men long ago thought it wise to give such caution. You have doubtless seen Hooker's testimony in reference to this; and I think you must be aware he is very respectably endorsed by living theologians. There can be shown no legitimate cause why the terms 'life' and 'death,' in this controversy, should not be interpreted literally; nay, there is most substantial cause for a strictly literal interpretation; as I have already observed, the terms of the sentence pronounced on Adam settle decisively the meaning of the term in the threatening. Because the terms in question, like most other terms, are often used figuratively, is that cause for understanding the death figuratively when used to express returning to dust? No, returning to dust is literal death; it has been, is, and will be understood to be so, in spite of the most inveterate prejudice.

"When I find you coolly avowing your belief that the destiny of the wicked is eternal torment, I can but exclaim, how can Dr. Fyfe, with his knowledge of the revealed character of God, have arrived at such a conclusion! You know, Dear Sir, the Bible declares 'God is full of compassion;' did you ever reflect on the import of the declaration? Is it a mere trope? Did you ever [illegible] reconcile it with the idea of a creature of God, writhing, by his will and deed, in eternal torment of the most exquisite kind? Impossible!

"When his creatures rebel, and persist in rebellion against him, God may, and will, punish them with an awful punishment, and it may appear to an infinitely wise God a necessity to take utterly from them the inestimable blessing of life, and destroy them as his incorrigible enemies, especially as their prolonged existence could not be a good, but a curse, to either themselves or the universe, but to consign such to endless torment would be a different thing. Is it not declared, God is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works? Let any rational intelligence look on countless millions of beings, consigned by God to some dungeon in his universe, there to writhe in exquisite torment eternally, and could he acquiesce in the declaration, 'the Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works?' Are we not taught by the great Teacher that the goodness of God is such that, comparatively, none else deserves to be called good? can the procedure of God which eternal torment supposes, consist with such goodness? Again, we have the very oath of Jehovah that he 'hath no pleasure in the death of the wicked,' far less, surely, could he have pleasure in tormenting them eternally.

"When we plead that God is good,—that he is love, you remind us that he is just, also. Most cordially do we admit it; but do you verily imagine that the fact is an argument for endless torment; nay, it is the strongest argument against it. It is a baseless assumption that divine justice requires that eternal torment be the portion of the wicked. You cannot prove the justice of God requires that sinners suffer a hundred years; no, nor ten years; for anything that you know, God could inflict on the sinner in one year, yea, in a month, or even in an hour, all the suffering that his justice demands.

"To make it appear that eternal torment is just, it has been urged that the lost will be sinning and blaspheming God eternally, and therefore, will justly suffer eternally; this is a shocking, as well as a baseless assumption; it is alleged their pain and anguish impel them to blaspheme,—then their blaspheming cannot be sin; for what a being is irresistibly impelled to do, cannot have the nature of sin.

"After referring to certain passages of Scripture, which, in your view, are descriptive of the punishment of the wicked, you tell us you do not mean that they are to be understood literally. [illegible] will be something inexpressibly awful. Well, it is granted that the Scriptures do express the awful nature of the punishment of incorrigibly wicked men; but could we not conceive of a punishment inexpressibly awful short of eternal torment? If your doctrine be true, Cain has been already in the place of woe nearly six thousand years; and if his hell has been anything comparable to that described by Baxter or Bunyan, etc., might it not be allowed to have been inexpressibly awful? Or if we might suppose Judas to have been in such a hell for eighteen centuries, might not even that be admitted to have been inexpressibly awful? Might we not conceive it possible that the Almighty could inflict a punishment on the ungodly that would be inexpressibly awful, though lasting only one day? Moreover, we might, I think, conceive of ten thousand inexpressibly awful punishments, which might altogether come inexpressibly short of the awfulness of endless torment.

"The misery of the wicked, you contend, will be unending, yet you will not venture to say the passages you quote as proof are to be understood literally; but if endless, you might as well go all the length with Pollok and Spurgeon, Benson and Finney, and the hundreds of preachers and poets who for centuries have racked their imaginations to the utmost to find language sufficiently horrible to depict the orthodox hell, for endlessness is incomparably the worst feature that it is possible to ascribe to misery; endless existence, indeed, without positive enjoyment, would be an inexpressibly awful punishment.

"Come, Dear Sir, let us go to Sinai, and hear Jehovah even there proclaiming his goodness, while he passes by before his servant Moses—hark! 'It is the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long suffering and abundant in goodness and truth.' True, 'he will by no means clear the guilty;' but does that give the slightest countenance to the assumption that he will torment his creatures eternally?

"If this will not satisfy, let us now go to the Mount of Olives; hark! how that multitude rejoice and praise as they descend; but here (as one says) is a compassionate lamentation in the midst of a solemn triumph. The compassionate Jesus, as he approaches the city, beholds it with the eye of pity, and weeps over it. Why! what is the matter? He soliloquizes the devoted city—'if thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! But now they are hid from thine eyes; for the days shall come upon thee that' (all thy wicked inhabitants shall be consigned to hell torment? no, but) 'thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee,' etc. Well, this was sad, and he who was full of compassion, reflecting on the woes that were impending on Jerusalem, could not restrain the tears from flowing in ample stream. The woes impending on Jerusalem, I say, were sad; the great tribulation that then was is characterized by the Savior as such as never had been, nor ever shall be; but what were the woes of Jerusalem compared with eternal torment? There is no comparison; if the miseries of Jerusalem constrained the tears of the compassionate Redeemer, the destiny of the wicked might well demand that millions of ages be set apart, wherein all holy intelligences in the universe should give vent to weeping and wailing on their account. But the Savior foresaw the woes coming on Jerusalem; perhaps he did not foresee that endless torment would be the destiny of the wicked; oh, no; certainly, had he foreseen it, as he foresaw the woes of Jerusalem,—had he known all about it, like many of our modern preachers and poets, his head would have been as waters, and his eyes as fountains of tears, and he would have wept day and night. Can you account for it, Dear Sir, that the compassionate Jesus, who could not refrain from tears when viewing Jerusalem, was never known to shed a tear at the woes of the wicked in a future state?

"It may be worth while to state, that I did know one preacher, who, when speaking of the destiny of the wicked, exclaimed, 'and shall any of my fellow creatures be doomed to [illegible] their progress was checked by a request that his audience would excuse his weakness! But, if it betrayed weakness to shed a tear at the consideration of the future destiny of the wicked, surely it betrayed incomparably greater weakness on the part of the Savior to allow his sensibilities to overcome him at the foresight of the comparatively transitory and trifling woes impending over Jerusalem; but though it be very common for preachers to descant on eternal hell torment, it is, alas! very rare that their own sensibilities are sufficiently awakened to cause the flowing tear. I appeal to you, Sir, have I not in this incident of the Savior's life an argument,—an invincible argument, against the doctrine in question? Did the blessed, the compassionate Jesus, weep when he beheld the devoted city, yet never shed a tear at the view of eternal torment, the destiny of the wicked? Excuse me, Dear Sir, when I say I feel constrained to the conclusion that the latter was perfectly unknown to him."

"Is there a Hell where spirits lost
Now writhe in agony and flame—
Where ruined souls on billows tossed
Recite Jehovah's holy name?

"Let Popes and Priests their altars rear,
And hold their dupes in dread of hell:
But I serve God from no such fear—
I know he doeth all things well.

"He sent his Son our race to save,
Justice in him to satisfy;
His robes shall ransom from the grave
All those who now in Adam die.

"But what awaits us after this?
What joy? what pain? ah; who can tell?
Of one thing I'm assured—'tis this:
There is no Intermediate Hell.

Where Was Paradise?—A Strange Opinion.

The following curious letter appeared in one of the city papers some time ago, and may be interesting to some of our readers:

The thought occurred to me many years ago, that the repeated failure of so many experienced Arctic explorers to reach the North Pole, was in consequence of something more subtle than common, natural causes. The result of my cogitations is, that possibly at this Pole lies the Garden of Eden, and that the original tree of life still exists there to fulfill the purpose of Jehovah, in His own appointed time. Moreover that the cherubim's flaming sword, turning every way to guard the tree of life, is the cutting, piercing cold of that latitude, which, when taken in connection with the aurora borealis, as it flashes and darts in the northern firmament, makes the figurative language of Scripture plain to our understanding. To sustain this theory, we learn from the meager history of our first parents that God made them "coats of skins," and as our Heavenly Father provides his creatures with what is best adapted for their protection and convenience, this would indicate that the temperature around Eden must have been materially changed to necessitate so warm a covering for human bodies. Although this barrier was sufficient to keep the antediluvians at a respectable distance from Eden, it does not discourage modern adventurers. I can imagine that while Noah was borne up by the waters of the deluge, anchored as it were to the heavens, the earth was removed from under him, and the east changed to the north. In the vast quantities of ivory in close proximity to the Pole is also strong evidence in support of this theory. In Siberia on one side and Alaska opposite, are found preserved portions of innumerable animals which, on the subsiding of the waters, were enveloped in the preserving element as at present found; for it is quite evident that they were not long subjected to the changes of winter and summer, night and day.

It would be perfectly in accord with other acts of the Creator that he should cast into oblivion for a long period of time the theater where was enacted the first human crime; the progenitor which brought forth so much woe, the enormity of which could not be atoned for by any or all created beings, but necessitated the sacrifice of the Son of God. If Jerusalem, with God's own temple, Babylon, Tyre, Nineveh, and many other places, were destroyed on account of the wickedness of their inhabitants, may it not appear reasonable that Eden was hurled as an unclean thing into the cold and desolate regions of the north, thus isolating from our race the first district polluted successfully prompted the first human crime, instigated the first murder of a brother, and corrupted the inhabitants so that in the end there was but one man found worthy to preserve a small remnant of all that breathed the breath of life?

The prevailing idea of scientific men that there is a warm space at the pole also favors the above theory. The late lamented Captain Hall enthusiastically declared, previous to his last voyage, that he expected to place the American flag on the Pole, and to find there a beautiful, salubrious climate, and a race of human beings unlike any at present known. If the theory herein advanced be correct, the signal failure of that voyage and the sad results connected with it, are proof positive that man, however innocently, cannot fight against God.—Alexander Skelton.

The Nature of the Millennium.

When the First Resurrection has taken place and the destruction of Antichrist has been completed, we may inquire in what form and character shall the Kingdom of Christ be revealed to the world during the Millennial period, or how will it differ from all that went before or that shall follow?

The nature of the Millennial Kingdom appears to be this: 1st—The Lord shall reign directly over the whole earth. 2ndly.—The saints shall reign with and under him. 3dly.—Jerusalem shall be rebuilt, and Israel restored. 4thly.—The whole world shall become converted. 5thly.—The earth shall become more fruitful, and the seasons shall be altered. 6thly.—The saints who share in the First Resurrection shall not live upon the earth, but in the Heavenly City.

The Heavenly City will be suspended over the earth during the Millennial reign, and probably over the earthly Jerusalem, and will be a visible object throughout all the land of Israel. This supposition solves a difficulty which must occur with regard to the Millennial climate. We all imagine that some great improvement must take place in the climate, productions, and fertility of the earth, during the reign of Christ, and all the prophecies seem to concur in foretelling this improvement. But the question is, by what miracle shall this change be produced?

We reply, that the Heavenly City will become a source of light, and heat, and fertility to all the world, being 1500 miles square measurement, being filled and lit up by the glory of God (Rev. 21), and being suspended not far from the surface of the earth, it will fulfill the office of an additional sun, especially throughout the land of Israel, and will thus produce that physical renovation of the earth which the prophets have foretold as the effect of the reign of Christ. (See Isaiah 35.)

But this City is described in such peculiar language that it seems impossible to understand by it any thing but a literal place of residence, a really existing structure, whether it be a City or otherwise, and a place whose materials will be the most magnificent and costly that imagination can conceive—a place filled with the glory of God, inhabited by resurrection saints, and containing within its walls the throne of the Lord Jesus Christ, as King of Israel and of the world.

Around the palace of the King of Kings will be seen the palaces of all His saints, each of whom will be himself a king and a priest unto God, having "washed his robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and He that sitteth upon the throne shall dwell among them: they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light upon them, nor any heat, for the Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of water; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

Nor is this the whole; for along with the presence of God, and the possession of more than royal magnificence, they shall possess irresistible power—they shall reign with Christ over the nations of the earth, and shall rule the ungodly with a rod of iron. The empire of Satan shall be broken—the reign of radicalism shall be swept away—the boasting of infidel science shall be silenced in darkness, and all power, knowledge, dignity, and wealth shall be transferred from the man of the world to the man of God.

The whole course of things shall be inverted: the worldly man shall serve where once he ruled, and the saint shall rule where once he was despised. And the nations upon earth, looking up every hour to the Heavenly City, and gazing with wonder upon its unfadable beauty shall exclaim, with a different tone than that of formal repetition—

"Thou art the king of glory, O Christ!

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 21, 1879.

OUR receipts have fallen off for a few weeks past. Remember the financial wants of THE RESTITUTION.

WE have delayed communications for weeks to give place to a discussion on the "Ages." Fairness to correspondents compels us to give deferred articles room which we accordingly do in this number.

ON returning from our appointment at Argos, we find that our printers have already enough in type to fill the columns of THE RESTITUTION, and we conclude to let it go to press rather than delay it for a contemplated article we have just commenced.

MOST of our readers, no doubt, have learned something concerning the insane tragedy at Pocasset, Mass., relative to a deluded man named Freeman, killing his little daughter, under the horrible delusion that, like Abraham of old, he was called of God to offer up some member of his family as a sacrifice. For the information of that class of our readers who depend upon THE RESTITUTION alone for their knowledge of current events, we shall probably give the details next week.

A BROTHER sends us the following list of passages in which zoe—psukee —occurs in the Greek New Testament. The entire number of occurrences is 105. It is rendered life and lives forty times; soul and souls fifty-eight times; by personal pronouns twice; mind and minds three times; heart and heartily twice. The list is sufficiently full to completely elucidate the meaning of the word to the English scholar:

Matt. 2, 20. They are dead who sought the child's —.
6, 25. anxious about your —, what you shall eat, etc. Is not the — of more value than food?
10, 28. who kill the body, but cannot destroy the —. utterly destroy both — and body in Gehenna.

1 Corinthians xv. 21-26.

G. M. MYERS.

"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

A request appears in THE RESTITUTION of March 12th from Brother Levi Tuttle, for an exposition of the above Scripture, and especially its bearing upon the resurrection. Also he desires the exposition from one who disbelieves in the resurrection of the wicked. This is exactly me so far as the faith goes. Therefore, I write for his gratification, and all others who may desire to read. I write not because I would presume to be the best among us qualified to write upon this text. I write not because I would desire to stir up controversy upon this subject, as I know many differ from me on this point. But I respond and write because this is a theme which, above all others, the gospel of the kingdom alone excepted, seems to thrill my whole system most. I know it is unpopular, but I care not for that. I know many of my brethren differ from me on this point, but we draw no lines and have no unkind feelings arising out of our differences. Therefore, what I submit is prompted "with malice toward none and with charity toward all."

But, now to the text. In discussing the subject of the resurrection, in the 21st verse of the chapter, the apostle introduces an antithesis between Adam as standing (shall I say) at the head of the genitive race and introducing death, and Christ standing at the head of the regenitive race and introducing life from the dead by a resurrection. And, as a reason why this is so in each member of the antithesis, the language of the 22d verse is called out. "For, as in Adam all die,"—the first member of the antithesis—"even so in Christ shall all be made alive"—the second member.

NOW, for perspicuity, let us consider each member of the antithesis separately. Then, of the first—"As in Adam all die," there are two words that demand attention, viz: "In" and "all." And as to the meaning, or

THE BREADTH OF THE WORD "ALL."

As every one will agree, it is to be determined by the certainty of the meaning of the word "in."

1. Of the lexicographical meaning of the Greek particle en, here rendered in, it may, as the circumstances of text and context requires, be in, by, through, with, etc.

2. Of the various renderings of the word in the text under consideration, the number is about equal on each side for in and by.

3. Of the textual meaning here, whatever may be said of the word, or whatever may be its renderings—in, by, through, or any thing else,—we firmly believe, and shall so contend that it denotes relationship; and, therefore, that on account of relationship to Adam the human family die.

To illustrate: One of the crowned heads of Europe has an only son, and in the course of time abdicates the throne, or, by the natural course of human events, passes into death. We know that on account of relationship which the son sustains to the father that then he will fall heir to the crown, throne and empire. But, if on the other hand, before the king or emperor passes into death, as was the case with Napoleon I. and Napoleon III. his crown is removed, from his throne he is deposed, then, on account of relationship sustained between father and son, poverty, humble position and possibly disgrace is bequeathed.

Application: So with Adam, he was created:

1. Constitutionally mortal,—subject to decay and death.

2. Placed in Eden thus with a remedy at hand would enable him to overcome decay and death, and enable him to live on.

3. He violated the divine command and for that violation he forfeited his right to the remedy and his relationship was thrown back upon his original basis, and the tree of life never been given, left with the principles of decay implanted in his constitution to work out death. Therefore, as in the illustration, when he forfeited his right to the estate and the remedy, it was forfeited, likewise to, and put beyond the reach of his posterity as they stand related to him, and on account of relationship to him share in his misfortunes. And, therefore, "in," or on account of relationship to Adam we, who stand related to him, "all" die.

Thus, the meaning of the word "in" determines the scope of the word "all" in the first member of the antithesis.

Now, as the word "in," in the first member of the antithesis must, unmistakably, denote relationship to Adam, and from the nature of the case cannot mean anything else, it determines, beyond the possibility of a doubt, the meaning of the word "in" as standing in the second member of the antithesis, else the antithesis is valueless. With these points then developed and well established, the word "in" in the second member can mean nothing but relationship to Christ, which determines the scope of the word "all" in the second member of the antithesis.

I conceive, and firmly believe the idea of the verse to be: For, as all who stand related to Adam die, even so all who stand related to Christ shall be made alive.

Next, in the 23d verse order in the resurrection is brought to view. The remark, the band, the company, the order of those who are to be raised.

1. Christ—who is the first born among many brethren. Rom. viii. 29. The head of the body. Eph. i. 19-23. The first fruits. Verses 23, 18, 20; Rom. xi. 16.

2. Those that are Christ's at his coming. See verses 42-55; 1 Thess. iv. 13-17; Rev. v. 6-10, etc.

3. Another order, band, company, rank at the end. The end of what? Not of the kingdom, for that will have no end. See Dan. vii. 18; Luke i. 33. But of the resurrection.

But a question we will anticipate. If only those in Christ, or which stand related to Christ are to be raised, and those who are Christ's are raised at his coming. Where the opportunity of another order—band at a subsequent period? We reply, that when we read and study the Scriptures closely relative to the work subsequent to Christ's coming back to earth, there is ample opportunity and a necessity for another rank or band in the resurrection. Let us specify a few points as briefly as possible:

1. Christ comes to resurrect and change the saints. 1 Cor. xv. 23, 50-55; 1 Thess. iv. 13-17.

2. Christ comes with his saints to execute judgment. Zech. xiv. 5; Jude 14. But these two events, as the purposes are seen to be very different cannot be the same. The first is at the close of Gentile times as is seen by reading Acts xv. 13-17; Rom. xi. 25-29 and Luke xxi. 24, while the other is subsequent to the signs in the sun, moon, stars and etc. Luke xxi. 25-27. Then following in the cluster of events notice that, after the change indicated by Christ's open, visible manifestation in power to the nations as indicated in Zech. xiv. 1-9; Ezek. xxxviii. 20; 2 Pet. iii, and Rev. vi. 12-17.

3. Comes the sealing of the 144,000 from Israel. Rev. vii. 1-8.

4. The 144,000 standing on Mount Zion and singing to the Lamb and four beasts and twenty-four elders (or saints, see Rev. v. 6-10); see Rev. xiv. 1-5.

5. The first angel's message. Rev. xiv. 6, 7.

6. The second angel's message. Rev. xiv. 8.

7. The third angel's message. Rev. xiv. 9-12, which last message and work is identical with Rev. xix. 11-21 and Dan. vii. 9-12. And yet.

8. Saints upon the earth and dying in the Lord. See Rev. xiv. 12, 13.

But, question: Who are these here referred to? I answer, not those who are Christ's at his coming, who are then raised and changed, but those who are living on the earth, who hear, believe and obey the gospel between incident first as we have cited and incident eight. As these incidents here given are to spread over a period of time, possibly from ten to a hundred years, are we to conclude that none during this interregnum will believe and obey? not at all. And yet, from incident eighth as we have cited, (see Rev. xiv. 12, 13,) not all the nations then will be subjected to Christ.

But question again we anticipate: Will these he heirs with Christ in his kingdom? No, for heirship will be complete when Christ comes, and these will rest in the death state till their order or band comes. But, question again: Will these, when raised, be immortalized? If they ever shout the victory over death and the grave, they will, for we learn that, "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory, (I ask when?) O death, where now thy sting? O grave, where now thy victory?" 1 Cor. xv. 54, 55. But, I ask again, when is the last enemy triumphed over? Not till the triumpher puts on immortality. Will the wicked ever triumph over death? No. Why? Because he can never put on immortality. Must the wicked be raised in order to fill 1 Cor. xv. 26—"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death?" Not unless he can put on immortality will he ever be enabled to enter into the triumph. But, further of this verse, (1 Cor. xv. 20,) to which our brother calls especial attention and of which he desires an explanation, there are about four positions taken.

1. A universal resurrection to judgment, and a final assignment of good to eternal happiness and of bad to death of body and soul in hell.

2. A universal resurrection to judgment either simultaneous or otherwise of good and bad, the good rewarded with eternal life and the bad put back into the death state.

3. A universal resurrection to final holiness and immortality of all—a final restoration of every member of Adam's family.

4. A resurrection of those only who are Christ's, and are prepared to put on incorruption and immortality and about the victory over death—the last enemy.

Now, my brother, a few questions:

1. If you conceive a universal resurrection absolutely necessary to the destruction of the last enemy death, and death is thus completely destroyed, how can you return the wicked to his dominions as position 1 and 2 are wont to do?

2. Could death, after he is completely destroyed, yet have power to hold them when returned? Would it still be a triumph?

3. Where the necessity of a triumph over an enemy and a wresting from his hands territory, a treasure, or a prisoner and then a surrender of the same back into his possessions as propositions 1 and 2 necessarily do? I ask you to reconcile verse 26 to your view while any one is resting under your second death.

But, we argue with the world, that if the soul is immortal and capable of, between death and the resurrection, enjoying the felicities of a heavenly house, or enduring the miseries of an orthodox hell, why the necessity of a resurrection of the old body? Why the necessities of a judgment to come as they understand? We ask, is God liable to mistakes in consigning some one to heaven or to hell, which mistake must thus in judgment be rectified? Let me turn the question; are we led to believe that God does not, and will not know without an investigation of the case who will be worthy of that world and a resurrection from the dead? No, I do not; and I believe that you do not entertain such a thought, but ascribe to him omniscience—see 2 Tim. ii. 19—"Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal. The Lord knoweth them that are his." Then, if he knows them that are his, why the necessity of bringing the wicked to life? It cannot be to go into judgment to ascertain whether his or not—that which he already knows. Or can it be that he brings them to life to get to kill them again? This we can hardly believe as he is not a God of cruelty but love.

Further, we are informed, Heb. ii. 2, that every transgression and disobedience under the law received a just recompense. If this be true, what is to be thought of a God who would go beyond justice, as will be the case if these persons are brought up, tried and again killed.

Again, think; did God, Jesus, or the apostles ever announce a law to man and affix as a penalty for its violation two deaths? Did God say to Adam that, in the day thou eatest thou shalt surely die, and after that four or five thousand years you shall be resurrected, tried, and killed again? Did God say through the prophet the soul that sinneth it shall die twice? Did Paul say the wages of sin is to die twice?

But, further, as no such penalty has ever been affixed to any divine law, what is to be thought of a law-giver who would make a law and for its violation announce only a part of its penalty, reserving the announcation of nine-tenths of the penalty till after hundreds had broken the law? Would he be regarded as wise, as just, as merciful?

But, should none of these questions be applicable to you, and you espouse the third position enumerated on the verse, then there will appear insurmountable difficulties and irreconcilations to the position—a resurrection to a final holiness and immortality of every human being—which we will not now have time and space to enumerate.

Then, as I conceive, the fourth position as above stated—a resurrection to holiness and immortality and a final triumph over the last enemy death, by those who are Christ's—is the only terrible and Scriptural one that can well be occupied. I freely admit that there are a few texts of Scripture which seem to conflict even with this position, but, that of some we have unfaithful renderings, and of others our troubles arise by not associating contexts with the immediate texts, and by not observing figures and symbols. With these before us there are none,—at least to my mind—irreconcilable and unsatisfactory.

This must suffice upon this text, at least for the present, as it is much more than intended in the outset.

Your well-wisher and brother in Christ.

Christian Conduct and Conversation.

The longer I live the deeper grows my conviction of the importance of a godly walk and chaste conversation. Without these our Christian profession is a sham with which we try to deceive our fellow beings, but fail in this most wofully. This class of counterfeits is easily detected, and we know it; yet, knowing it, we continue to palm off our spurious Christianity upon the world, and before that God who has said: "The hope of the hypocrite shall perish." The Christian religion is designed to make men and women pure and good, honest and true. It puts a curb on our passions by commanding self-control. Paul says the "old man is crucified with Christ * * * * that henceforth we should not serve sin. Rom. vi. 6. If in deed and word we are found over on the side of the flesh, no amount of religious cant; no loud and lofty profession of faith, no exhibitions of Sunday piety and sanctimoniousness; nor even frequent and impassioned prayer will atone for such a life. The experience of high and holy emotions, and solemn impressions under prayer, preaching and singing, during a brief hour of congregational service, though good as far as they go, are of no account unless they form and strengthen good resolutions to subdue our passions and appetites and to illustrate in our daily walk, in practical detail, the principles and precepts of our holy religion. Faith without works is dead being alone, James ii. 17. In the light of this text how rates that faith which turns the hungry from your door unfed? or that prayer: "be ye warmed and filled," if your hand is not extended in bestowment of the needful gift? Or how about that profession of honesty which withholds from your poor neighbor, year after year, the ten fifteen or twenty dollars due him for labor, under the flimsy plea of hard times, when the price of your tea, coffe and tobacco for one year would more than pay the debt. Stinginess and parsimoniousness (what the world calls as such) is commendable if practiced with a view to paying what we owe.

NEWS ITEMS.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, April 25.—Several persons have died suddenly of late of a fever which by some is supposed to be the yellow fever, of which heretofore only foreigners lately arrived have been victims. The crews of several vessels in port are sick, but no fatal case has yet occured among them. The French man-of-war La Bourdonais, which had been stationed here some time, has left on account, it is said, of the present sickness. It is difficult to determine whether the fever is epidemic or not. Nothing has been done toward disinfection. Our streets are in such a filthy condition that it is astonishing that epidemic disease has not developed before.

THE PLAGUE IN THE CAUCASUS.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 14.—The disease which has broken out in the Caucasus proves fatal in twenty-four hours. In Diriy, which contains 160 houses, seventy persons have died. In Medivrisheni, with 200 houses, there are 200 persons dead. The mortality elsewhere is on the same scale.

LONDON, May 15.—The Standard's Lahore correspondent telegraphs that Englishmen returning from Cashmere report that not sufficient provisions for a week remain, and that the relief arrangements have broken down.

LONDON, May 15.—A conference was held at Barnsley yesterday at which 120,000 colliers were represented. It decided to demand ten per cent. increase of pay, and if refused to stop work throughout the country. Another conference will be held in Birmingham in five weeks to fix the date for giving notice of a strike. The interval will be devoted to agitation.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 14.—The Governor of Orenburg telegraphs that another fire occured there on the 8th inst., which was quickly extinguished. A fire also broke out on the 12th inst., in the Cossack quarter, which was half consumed. The Governor of Uralsk, in the government of Orenburg, telegraphs, under date of the 11th inst., that fire has destroyed a considerable portion of the town, and is still raging.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 16.—The greater part of Lublin, a city of 20,000 inhabitants, in Russian, Poland, has been destroyed by fire.

DIED.

ODELL—March 14, 1879, at Jamestown, Michigan, brother William Odell, aged fifty-two years.

Brother Odell left his home in Woodland, Barry county, to attend the quarterly conference at Jamestown, his old place of residence. He seemed to enjoy the meeting, and, by his earnest exhortations contributed much to its interest. Toward the close he became quite unwell, and on Monday was taken down with pneumonia and typhus. During his sickness he was tenderly cared for by his wife and daughter and other kind friends. He was delirious to some extent during his sickness, but a faithful obedient life, and living faith in the gospel of the kingdom is the best evidence of his preparation to meet the lord and have part in the first resurrection. For several years he has cherished the blessed hope of the Savior's glorious appearing, but latterly has been unusually active in the work of the Lord, and diligent in searching the Scriptures. He was chosen elder of the band organized at the conference last fall in Woodland. His death was a great affliction to his family and loss to the church. A large concourse was addressed by the writer from the words "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. xv. 57.

SKEELS—May 10, 1879, at Fruitport, Muskegon county, Mich., Dorr Skeels, eldest son of our lamented brother James Skeels and sister S. Skeels.

He long contended with that fatal disease, consumption, visiting Colorado without avail. In the morning of life at the age of twenty-seven, he was called to meet man's last and worst enemy, death. Thus, in a brief period, the only daughter, father and son have been laid in the silent tomb, waiting the arch-angel's trump, while an afflicted family mourn their loss. A discourse by the writer from Phil. iii. 21, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead" (from among the dead ones).

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The annual Conference of the state of Michigan, will be held at Hammond, West county, Mich., commencing on Thursday, May 29, 1879, at 9 o'clock, p. m., and closing the following Sunday evening. Hammond is situated about nine miles southeast of Grand Rapids on the Grand River Valley R. R. Brethren coming on all roads will make connection with the Valley road at Grand Rapids. Trains leave Grand Rapids going southeast as follows: 6.30 a. m., 11.55 a. m., and 6.00 p. m. Brethren coming to this meeting will inquire for Wm. McClellan of W. R. Woodward, Bros. H. V. Reed and D. T. Heisted are expected to attend this meeting to preach the word. We extend an earnest and cordial invitation to all the brethren in this and other states.

D. P. SPENCER, Sec.

The quarterly assembly of the church of God will meet near Mt. Union, Frederick county, Md., on Friday night, May 23d, and hold over Sunday. Brethren coming on the train to Smithburg will be met and conducted to the place of meeting. Come one come all and let us have a good time.

JAMES BROWN.

GENERAL MEETING.

The quarterly meeting of the Indiana Conference is appointed to be held at the Antioch meeting house, 3½ miles south of Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind., commencing Friday, June 6th, at 10 a. m., and continuing over the following Sunday. Persons coming on the cars from the south will get off at Argos, and those from the north, east and west, will get off at Plymouth, from which places there will be conveyances to the meeting. A general attendance of the household of faith is cordially solicited. In behalf of the brethren.

POETRY.

The Widow of Nain.

The only son of his mother, and she was a widow. Luke vii. 12.

The dust on their sandals lay heavy and white,
Their garments were damp with the dews of the night,
Their hot feet a-weary, and throbbing with pain,
As they entered the gate of the city of Nain.

But lo! on the pathway a sorrowing throng
Present, mournfully chanting a funeral song,
And, like a sad monotone, cheerless and slow,
The voice of a woman came laden with woe.

What need, stricken mothers, to tell how she wept?
Ye read by the vials that sorrow hath kept.
Ye know, by the travail of anguish and pain,
The desolate grief of the widow of Nain.

As he who was first of the wayfaring men
Autumnal, the music burden was lowered, and then
As he touched the white grave-clothes that covered the bier
The bearers shrank back, and the mother drew near.

Her snow-pinkled tresses had loosened their strands,
Great tears fell unchecked on the tightly clasped hands;
But hushed the wild sobbing and stilled her cries
As Jesus of Nazareth lifted his eyes.

Eyes wet with compassion as slowly they fell—
Eyes potent to soften grief's tremulous swell,
As, sweetly and tenderly, "Weep not," he said,
And turned to the passionless face of the dead.

White, white gleamed his forehead, loose rippled the hair,
Bronze-tinted, o'er temples transparently fair;
And a glory stole up from the earth to the skies,
As he called to the voiceless one, "Young man, arise!"

The hard, rigid outlines grew fervid with breath,
The dull eyes unclosed from the midnight of death;
Weep, weep, happy mother, and fall at his feet;
Life's pale, blighted promise grown hopeful and sweet.

The morning had passed, and the midday hours burned;
Once more to the pathway the wayfarers turned.
The conqueror of kings had been conquered again;
There was joy in the house of the widow of Nain.

SELECTIONS.

[The Bible Banner.]

The Next Age.

IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Heb. ii. 5. "For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come (the habitable about coming) whereof we speak." A world of inhabitants, after the present, subject, not to angels—to whom? The overcomers shall have "power over the nations." Rev. ii. 26; iii. 21. The diligent and faithful shall be over five or ten cities, according to capacity, Luke xix. 12-27; and the Apostles over the twelve tribes. Matt. xix. 28. "The powers of the world to come,"—the age about coming. Heb. vi. 5.

ITS DURATION.

The only future age whose measure is given, is the 1000 years of Rev. 20. Any theory that puts that prophecy in the past involves such absurdities that it hardly deserves attention. We therefore assume it to be future. It is not material to our present purpose whether or not the next age is to be 1000 common years. It will begin with the resurrection of the blessed and holy, and the events apparently assigned to it in prophecy suggest a period of at least 1000 years.

ITS NATURE.

How many theories meet us? We need not stop to disprove them. Better find, if we can, what the Scriptures say of it.

Who will be there? Christ and his saints—Israel and the nations.

Their condition. Christ and the saints—rulers; Israel and the nations—subjects. The saints—immortal; Israel and the nations—mortal. The saints perfected physically, morally, mentally, cannot grow old and decay; cannot be tempted and sin; cannot err in judgment, nor be defeated by art or force; can neither wish to do wrong, nor allow wrong in those under their control; will not marry, and cannot die. They will, however, be finite in every particular; as they may improve in every respect in knowledge, power, usefulness, and happiness. Though from all nations, they will be one company, and in perfect sympathy with Christ.

The twelve tribes of Israel will be subject to the twelve Apostle, and will be recognized and honored by having their names inscribed on the twelve gates of the New Jerusalem. God always finds what he wants and when he wants it. Jesus, Paul, and James speak of the twelve tribes as existing in their time. They will be found in the next age, and a remnant will believe, repent, and be received again, gathered the second time from all countries—the restored prodigal—and be helpful to the enrichment of the world more than was the preaching to the Gentiles. Rom. 11.

The nations in the millennial age will be liable to be deceived by Satan if he is not bound, Rev. 20, and the leaves of the tree of life—growing abundantly and widely distributed—will be for their healing. Rev. xxii. 2. Israel and the nations will of course be mortal. We are not told when any of the converted in that age shall be made immortal.

ANGUISH, VENGEANCE, DESTRUCTION, ETC.

We are liable to crowd things together that are to occur widely apart, where the spirit of prophecy has not indicated the chronology of events. We may be sure that all that is prophesied will come to pass, and everything in appropriate order and time. The flaming fire, vengeance, destruction, and second death, are sure to come; so are the rapture and joy of the saints, the new song, the peace, glory, converting implements of war into implements of husbandry, none hurting nor destroying, the world obedient to the world and law from Zion. The Jews could see no room for both the cross and the crown; so they have been kicking the former and vainly clutching for the latter for nearly two thousand years, and nobody so badly hurt by their folly as themselves. We ought to have learned better than to imitate them—ought to have learned that God will find room to fulfill all his prophecies. It is not so hard to see. The severities in the millennial age are prompt checks for the current wrongs on the part of those living in that age. The second death, after that age, will swallow in oblivion the resurrected wicked, and, probably, the surviving wicked of that age.

The recession of Christ will cost many lives, but only of those who resist his reign. The conquest complete, (the work of a few years,) the sweet influences of justice, kindness, love, peace, and purity, with power to support instead of discourage them, will Edenize the world.

PROBATION.

Wm. Miller believed, and Eld. J. V. Himes endorsed and published for him, in 183-, that the door of mercy would be closed some time before the coming of the Lord, in 1843-4; and when the time passed, in 1844, nearly all who followed their general views believed probation to be exhausted. Easing gradually from that conclusion, many final and sealing messages were promulgated with great confidence, and for a few years were quite generally received.

The Advent Herald, published at Boston, was from the first enriched with copious but garbled extracts from English millennarian writer, cutting out all allusions to probation after the advent. By this double injustice—to those writers and to its readers—it prevented their service and made them help to fix in the minds of American Adventists the unscriptural idea that probation would close at the advent, a sentiment subversive of the system of thought they labored so learnedly and earnestly to establish. It also helped to fix a narrow and ungenerous habit which, unfortunately, has been propagated by its successors.

The prophetess of the Battle Creek Sabbatarians had a vision confirming the opinion that the door of mercy was shut on the tenth day of the seventh month, in 1844, and they have never recalled it. How could they recall the vision and still honor the prophetess? Her visions are the chief corner-stone of their sect; so, contradictory and absurd as they are, they must be retained and explained. They work as earnestly as any others to convert sinners, and have baptized many thousands since the door was shut." They seek consistency under the miserable subterfuge that the names of all who should afterwards be converted were born with the names of all Israel on the breastplate of the High Priest into the holy of holies on the tenth day of the seventh month, in 1844. Many of these converts were at that time unnamed and unborn. That smells of Calvin.

NOT TOLD WHEN PROBATION WILL CLOSE.

The Bible does not tell us when probation will close. It does declare the fate of some individuals, nations, and classes, but does not fix a line and say beyond that there can be no more change of character. So we cannot at present know when the trial of human nature will end. It might seem fair to infer that the second death, closing the little season at the end of the one thousand years, will be its limit; but this side the second death, certainly, there is no time when some are not on probation. So far as we are told, the first life of each individual is his only time of probation.

POST-ADVENTUAL PROBATION.

The idea that probation will close at the second advent is inconsistent with much that we find in the New Testament, as well as in the Old. As: (a) The reign of the saints. Their reign over one another, over nobody, or over convicts condemned to hopeless despair, would be equally incongruous.

(b) The growth of the kingdom from the mustard-seed state, as from the little stone. Its accretions come from the success of its inherent qualities in transforming foreign elements to its own nature, like the leaven.

(c) The evident office of the saint priest-kings is to improve the condition of their subjects. They are to rule and teach to save. Only the obdurate will feel the rod of iron and lick the dust.

(d) The word of the Lord and the law going forth from Zion, are to be successful in making all know him from the least to the greatest.

(e) So the gospel will be preached while Christ is reigning in Mount Zion, "to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people," exhorting them to fear, honor, and worship God. Rev. xiv. 1-7. This is not to mock them surely. Who will charge God with commanding what is impossible? Who will say that Christ has not reigned on Mount Zion? Who, that the hour of his judgment has come, and that the 144,000 have been with him in the past? His reign will be to save. "Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil because I am good?" All the kingdoms and all the people will be given to Christ when the seventh trumpet sounds. Was the Jew wronged by the conversion of the Gentiles? Will the immortal saints be grieved if "His mercy shall so endure" that every nation, kindred, tongue, and people shall yield many trophies to his grace?

(f) He shall yet put down all rule. 1 Cor. 15. The violence is on the kings, and their armies and sympathizers, that the rest may be relieved from their oppressions.

(g) Satan and the man of sin, and the beast and his image, and the false prophet, are to be taken out of the way, that human nature may have a trial under favorable circumstances. Who objects?

(h) Will God provide in the leaves of the tree of life, a universal remedy for all physical injuries of the nations for a thousand years, and exclude them from the privilege of moral improvement?

(i) The Savior intimates, in Matt. xii. 31, 32, forgiveness of all sin except that against the Holy Ghost, alike in this age and in "that about to come."

(j) The reason given by James before the most important council of the Apostles and elders ever assembled, for the revival of the dynasty of David at the Lord's return is, "That the residue of men might seek after the Lord." Acts xv. 17.

I have tried to pack the New Testament intimations about the next age into a single article of reasonable length, and yet preserve perspicuity. The reader must judge how well. What of it? To keep an appreciation of the wealth of glory to the saints and to the race in the second coming of the Lord. Don't spoil their precious theme by making it a seat of judgment or a sword of schism. The Lord help us to love the truth and bear it with charity. —By O. R. L. C.

The Kirwan Letters to the Right Rev. John Hughes, Bishop of New York.

LETTER III.

Causes of Early Misgivings continued—Confession.—Holy Wells.—Prohibiting the Bible.—An Incident.

My Dear Sir,—In my last letter I commenced a statement to you of the causes which, in early life, caused my misgivings and distrust as to yours being a true Church, and as to its holding the true faith. I referred to some incidents connected with the claims of your priests to miraculous power, with the doctrine of Purgatory, and with praying to the saints. I shall now proceed with a statement of some more of those causes.

The doctrine of confession is one of the primary doctrines of your Church. It requires every good papist to confess his sins to a priest at least once a year. If any sins are concealed, none are forgiven. This doctrine makes the bosom of the priest the repository of all the sins of all the sinners of his parish who make a conscience of confession. Hence the common saying in Ireland, "You carry as much sin about you as the priest's horse." And this is one of the sources of the fearful power which your priests have over your people; and with this doctrine of confession is connected the power of the father confessor to grant absolution to the confessing penitent. It is sometimes affirmed, and then denied, to suit circumstances, that the priest claims such power; but Dr. Challoner, in his "Catholic Christian Instructed," chap. 9, asserts this power, and on what he deems scriptural authority; and I never knew an individual who came from confession, with the privilege of partaking of the communion, who did not feel and believe that his sins were forgiven him; and if they were not immediately forgiven, they would be on the performance of the prescribed penances. You, sir, will not say that I either misstate or misrepresent the doctrine.

Now for some of my early impressions upon this subject. Father M—— held frequently his confessions at the house in which I was clerk. He sat in a dark room up stairs, with one or more candles on a table before him. Those going to confession followed each other on their knees from the front door, through the hall, up the stairs, and to the door of the room. When one came out of the confessing-room, another entered. My turn came. I entered the room, from which the light of day was excluded, and bowed myself before the priest. He made over me the sign of the cross, and after praying something in Latin, he ordered me to commence the detail of my sins. Such was my fright that my memory soon failed in bringing up past delinquencies. He would prompt me, and ask, Did you do this thing or that thing? I would answer yes or no. And when I could say no more, he would wave his hand over me, and again utter some words in Latin, and dismiss me. Through this process I often went, and never without feeling that my sins were forgiven. Sins that burdened me before were now disregarded. The load of guilt was gone; and I often felt, when prompted to sin, that I could commit it with impunity, as I could soon confess it and secure its pardon; and this, sir, is the fearful and fatal effect of your doctrine of confession and absolution upon millions of minds.

The questions, however, often came up, Why does the priest go into a dark room in the daytime? Why not pray for me in English, and not in Latin? How can he forgive sin? What if my sins, after all, are not forgiven? And I always found that I could play my pranks better after confession than before, for I could go at them with a lighter heart. Very early in life my confidence in this doctrine of confession was shaken, and at a later period I came to the conclusion that it was a priestly device to ensnare the conscience and to enslave men. Do you, in your soul, believe it is any thing else?

Another thing which made early a deep impression on my mind was this. On my first remembered journey to Dublin, we passed by a place, called, unless I mistake, St. John's Well. It is, as you know, one of the "Holy wells" of Ireland. There was a vast crowd of poor looking and diseased people around it. Some were praying, some shouting; many were up in the trees which surrounded it. All these trees were laden, in all their branches, with shreds of cloth of every possible variety and color. I inquired what all this meant. I was told, "This is St. John's Well, and these people come here to get cured." But what do those rags mean, hanging on the trees? I was told that the people who were not immediately cured tied a piece of their garments on some limb of the trees, to keep the good saint of the well in mind of their application; and, judging from the number of pieces tied on the trees, I inferred that the number that went away cured were very few. I had previously read some travels in Africa describing some of the religious rites of the sable sons of that continent, and the thought that those performed around St. John's Well were just like them occurred to me. I have no doubt but that the rites witnessed in my youth are performed there yet; that the rags of diseased persons are now streaming from those trees to remind the saint of the requests of those who suspended them. There was always a priest present to hear confessions and to receive the pennies of the poor pilgrims; and the impression then made upon my mind was, that it was a piece of paganism; and I have since learned that it is a relic of Druidism; and the rites and ceremonies about this well, I learn, are nothing in comparison with those performed at the wells of Saint Patrick, the county Down. I will here insertan account of a festival at St. Patrick's Well, as given by an eye-witness:

"When or how the custom which I shall describe originated, I know not, nor is it necessary to inquire; but every Midsummer eve thousands of Roman Catholics, many from distant parts of the country, resort to these celebrated holy wells to cleanse their souls from sin, and clear their mortal bodies of diseases. The influx of people of different ranks, for some nights before the one in which alone, during the whole year, these wells possess this power (for on all other days and nights in the year they rank not above common draw-wells), is prodigious; and their attendants, hoards of beggars, whose ragged garments, if once taken off, could not be put on again by the ingenuity of man, infest the streets and lanes, and choose their lodging in the highways and hedges. Having been previously informed of the approach of this miraculous night, and having made ourselves acquainted with the locality of the wells, early in the evening we repaired to the spot. We had been told that we should see something quite new to us, and we met with what scarcely was credible on ocular evidence. The spot on which this scene of superstitious folly was exhibited was admirably adapted to heighten every attendant circumstance of it; the wonderful wells, of which there are four, being situated in a square or patch of ground, surrounded by steep rocks, which reverberated every sound, and redoubled all the confusion. The coup d' œil of the square on our approach presented a floating mass of various-colored heads, and our ears were as tonished with confused and mingled sounds of mirth and sorrow—of frantic, enthusiastic joy, and deep, desponding ravings. On descending into the square, we found ourselves immediately in the midst of innumerable groups of these fanatics, running in all directions, confusedly in appearance, but methodically, as we afterward found, in reality; the men and women were barefooted, and the heads of all were bound round with handkerchiefs. Some were running in circles, some were kneeling in groups, some were singing in wild concert, some were jumping about like maniacs at the end of an old building, which, we were told, was the ruins of a chapel erected, with several adjacent buildings, in one miraculous Midsummer's night by the tutelary saint of the wells, of whose talent as a mason they give, it must be confessed, no very exalted opinion. When we had somewhat recovered from the first surprise, which the (to us) unaccountable fantastic actions of the crowd had given us, we endeavored to trace the progress of some of these deluded votaries through all the mazes of their mystic penance. The first object of them all appeared to be the ascent of the steepest and most rugged part of the rock, up which both men and women crawled their painful ways on their hands and bare knees. The men's clothes were all made so as to accommodate their knees with all the sharpness of the pointed rock; and the poor women, many of them young and beautiful, took incredible pains to prevent their petticoats from affording any defence against its torturing asperities. Covered with dust, and perspiration, and blood, they at last reached the summit of the rock, where, in a rude sort of chair hewn out of the stone, sat an old man, probably one of their priesthood, who seemed to be the representative of St. Patrick, and the high-priest of this religious frenzy. In his hat each of the penitents deposited a halfpennie, after which he turned them round a certain number of times, listened to the long catalogue of their offences, and dictated to them the penance they were to undergo or perform. Then they descended the rock by another path, but in the same manner and posture, equally careful to use cut by the flints, and to suffer as much as possible; this was, perhaps, more painful travelling than the ascent had been; the suffering knees were rubbed another way; every step threatened a tumble, and if any thing could have been lively there, the ridiculous attitudes of these descenders would have made us so. When they gained the foot of the hill, they (most of them) bestowed a small donation of charity on some miserable groups of supplicants who were stationed there. One beggar, a cripple, sat on the ground, at one moment addressing the crowd behind him, and swearing that all the Protestants ought to be burned out of the country, and, in the same breath, begging the penitents to give him one halfpenny for the love of 'amale bl ssed Jasus.' The penitents now returned to the use of their feet, and commenced a running sort of Irish jiggish walk round several cairns or heaps of stones erected at different spaces. This lasted for some time. Suddenly they would prostrate themselves before the cairn, and ejaculate some hasty prayers; as suddenly they would rise and resume their millhorse circumrotation. Their eyes were fixed; their looks spoke anxiety, almost despair; and the operation of their faculties seemed totally suspended. They then proceeded to one end of the old chapel, and seemed to believe that there was a virtue, unknown to us heretics, in one particular stone of the building, which every one was careful to touch with the right hand. Those who were tall did it easily; those who were less left no mode of jumping unpracticed to accomplish it.

POETRY.

If We Faint Not.

L. M. HUGHES.

If we faint not, friends beloved,
In due season we shall reap,
And God's peace which understanding
Passes, shall our full hearts keep.

All shall know Him. He will help
In the hour of dark temptation.
Even near He stands to comfort
In the midst of tribulation.

See, He standeth at the door.
All our tears to wipe away;
He our burdens bore to lighten
Knocks at every heart to-day.

To-day, if we but hear His voice,
Sealed we may be as His own,
His, to have all joy and comfort
When He cometh to His throne.

If that loving Shepherd coming
Finds us faithful, in that day
He will give a crown of glory,
One that fadeth not away.

"Kiss the Son lest He be angry!"
Hasten, for the hour is nigh
When the sign of His appearing
Shineth on us from on high.

Reach our hearts, oh, gentle Savior!
Turn us, turn us all to thee,
That, when in Thy kingdom cometh
"Blessed of the Lord" we be.

Austin, Ill.

SELECTIONS.

[The Publishers]

The Original "Apostles' Creed."

A venerable member of the Wesleyan Conference, held at Bristol in July, 1877, declared in that assembly, that the creed, which every Wesleyan preacher professed to believe, was the longest creed in Christendom. Every man whose name was on the Minutes had said, I believe the doctrines taught in Wesley's first four volumes of sermons, and his notes on the New Testament.

At a time, when there is so manifest a desire on the part of many to be free from the old standards; and, indeed, from all written authority in matters of faith, it is certainly remarkable that the Wesleyan Conference should contend so earnestly for subscription to a creed of such enormous dimensions.

It is not our intention, at present, to examine the merits of that voluminous creed, or any of the other creeds and confessions in so-called Christendom—of various lengths and differing dogmas; but to call attention to one that is older and shorter than any of them—namely, The Apostles' Creed: not that formula commonly so termed, constructed by other man at a later period, but the real, genuine, original confession made by the Apostles themselves:—"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

The circumstances in which this confession was made, are thus narrated by the Apostle Matthew:—"When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, He asked his Disciples saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? And they said, some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, but whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Matt. xvi. 13-17.

There are several important circumstances connected with this confession, to which the reader's attention is requested. Notice then—

I. That this is not only the confession of Peter's faith, but also that of his fellow Disciples. The confession is the answer to a question put by the Lord to all the Disciples present on the occasion, "Whom say ye that I am?" Peter was the spokesman, but he spoke for all; as at another time mentioned in John vi. 66. "When many of our Lord's disciples, offended with His teaching, went back, and walked no more with Him, Jesus said unto the twelve, will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered Him, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life; and we believe, and are sure, that Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Whatever this confession means, then, it was homologated by all the Apostles—it is the original Apostles' Creed.

II. Notice, the sense in which the terms were used by the Apostles when they made this confession. What did they mean when they avowed their belief that Jesus was the Christ? This question is of great practical moment, though often not attended to. By referring to the narrative of John i. 41-49, the reader will find the best illustration of what the Disciples of Jesus meant when they called Him—the Christ, the Son of the living God.

Andrew Simon Peter's brother, having followed Jesus to the house where he dwelt, and remained with Him during that day, was so impressed with the interview, that he "first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, we have found the Messias, which is being interpreted, the Christ; and he brought him to Jesus." The following day Jesus bids Philip, a fellow citizen of Andrew and Peter, follow Him; and Philip is so impressed with Jesus, that on finding his friend Nathaniel, he at once communicates the fact that he had discovered no less a personage than "Him of whom Moses and the prophets did write."

From his form of expression, we see very plainly that there was a common understanding between Philip and Nathaniel about some particular person, in whom they were deeply interested. The expectations they mutually had of that person, appear in the exclamation of Nathaniel, when convinced that Jesus was indeed that person whom Philip had represented him to be. "Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel."

All these men were cherishing the hope of the appearing of a King of Israel, "of whom Moses and the prophets did write;" and the term by which he was commonly spoken of was "the Messiah," or in Greek, "The Christ," that is "The Anointed"—a term applied to the kings of Israel from the circumstance that they were installed to office by having oil poured on the head. Thus, Saul and David, the two first of Israel's kings, are spoken of in their historical books as "the Lord's anointed."

It seems very manifest, then, that the Disciples of Jesus believed Him to be this promised King of Israel of whom Moses and the prophets had written; and that that was what they meant when they said He was the Christ.

Many other examples of this use of the term, might be quoted from the New Testament; but it is unnecessary, the more so from the circumstance, that the fact is well authenticated that at the time Jesus publicly appeared, there was a common expectation among the Jewish people that the son of David, whom the prophets had foretold would reign on Mount Zion, was about to appear. Professor White, an eminent lecturer in the Church of England, states that "these glorious expectations were not confined to those whose superior station might lead them to expect the first honours and emoluments of the Messiah's kingdom; but that even the Disciples of the Lord, who had been chosen from the meanest of the people, long retained the same opinion, and indulged the same hopes with the rest of their country." Such, we think, were their ideas of the Messiahship of Jesus, when, at Cæsarea Philippi, His Disciples responded to their Lord's inquiry —"We believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

III. The next matter to which we call particular attention, is the fact that Jesus approved the confession. Jesus answered: "Blessed art thou Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." There can be no doubt that Jesus knew the sense which Peter attached to the words He had spoken—the sense in which his Disciples believed Him to be the King of Israel; and He confirmed the understanding in their minds by expressing the strongest form of approval. Is not that a remarkable fact, though it seems to be commonly forgotten? Can you conceive that He would have done so had their notions on the subject been wrong? Would any religious teacher amongst us, who is at all worthy of his place, commend what he knows to be a gross mistake? Yet many are continually saying that the Apostles had mistaken and carnal notions of the nature of their Master's Kingship during the whole period of His sojurn with them. How are we to account for this strong approval by the Lord, of this confession of the Apostles, and of the fact that nowhere do we find Him correcting their beliefs and expectations regarding the nature and place of His reign, if they were mistaken? He knew what was behind their words—the thoughts of which the words were the symbols; yet He said: "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." He knew, we say, the thoughts and expectations of His Disciples regarding His kingdom; and instead of correcting them, He on several occasions confirms these expectations by the language he used; as, for instance, when he promised them thrones on which they should judge the twelve tribes of Israel; and spoke of drinking the fruit of the vine new with them in His Father's kingdom—Matt. xix. 28-30. So far was Jesus from esteeming these hopes and expectations to be carnal—frothy, He declared "flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven." The beliefs and expectations, which found utterance in the words, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God," so far from being of human origin—the offspring of ignorant prejudice, had been enkindled by the Father Himself; by the words of the holy prophets who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. And so we are confident that the sense in which the Disciples of our Lord used the terms of the confession we are considering, was the true sense; and that those who affirm the contrary, are in serious error.

IV. Regarding the Apostles' Creed, we have yet another thing to notice—namely, that it is the creed appointed by God for the whole world, Jew and Gentile alike. That is a strong assertion, and requires to be well substantiated, and the proof we have to offer is such as this: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born (or begotten) of God. 1 John v. 1. The same writer referring to his narrative of the works and words of the Lord Jesus, declares, "These things were written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." John xx. 31.

Yet, strange to say, the creeds of the day give this one no distinct utterance! Instead of the formula: "I believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God," we have simply:—"I believe in Jesus Christ."

But is not this confession sufficient? Yes, if the person using these terms, means thereby to declare that he believes in Jesus, as the Christ of God—His King anointed to reign on Mount Zion, the hill of His holiness. But the formula, "I believe in Jesus Christ," does not distinctly express that belief; and we know that many use it with the idea that, Jesus Christ is the name and surname of the Redeemer, without any reference to His kingly office; so that their confession is not really a confession of the creed, that Jesus is the Christ.

But, it may be objected, does not the Apostle Paul in (Romans x. 9) assure us: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus; and shalt believe in thine heart that God raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved?" Most assuredly; but that is not contrary to John's testimony; that, by believing that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, we have life through His name; for that is the belief concerning the Lord Jesus, that we are to confess with the mouth. All who, in Apostolic times confessed with the mouth the Lord Jesus, confessed that He was the Christ. As an illustration of this truth, we point to the statement in John ix. 22, that if any man did "confess that He (Jesus) was the Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue." The confessing of that about Jesus, which led to expulsion from the synagogue, is exactly the truth by believing which the Apostle John tells us we perishing sinners may have life through the name of the Lord Jesus.

Here we fancy some will exclaim: But is that all a sinner is to believe about Jesus in order to be saved? Is His death for our sins to be made no account of? By no means. As a necessary consequence, all who believe that Jesus is the Christ, must believe the whole Apostolic testimony regarding Him. Try to fancy it otherwise! But believing all that is written of Him, this must be believed and confessed, "Jesus is the Christ the Son of the living God." In illustration of this, consider the remarkable case of the three thousand who were added to the church in one day. Acts ii. 22-41. These terror-stricken ones believed that Jesus was the Christ; and because they so believed they, at first were alarmed, and cried out: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" They had not then obtained peace in believing; they needed to know more about Jesus—to know that there was remission of sins in His name; and that by Him all that believe are justified. The Apostle Peter knew more about Jesus that day than when at Cæsarea Philippi he declared his belief that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God; yet his confession was as genuine then as it was when he bore witness for the same truth on the day of Pentecost. But here, at Jerusalem, he believed in his heart, and confessed with his mouth, that God had made that same Jesus both Lord and Christ, having raised Him from the dead to sit on the throne of David, a Prince and a Savior, to give "repentance to Israel, and the remission of sins."

Such was the testimony the Apostles gave of Jesus wherever they went; such was the creed of the first Christians. Brief; yet comprehensive of all that the prophets and Apostles have spoken of God's beloved Son.

All who would have a sure ground of hope of life eternal, require to make this good confession. To do so, as the confession of their own faith, they must know who Jesus is, and what he has done for their salvation, and what the Christ is, and what he is to do, in order to confess, intelligently, that they believe Jesus to be the Christ, the Son of the living God. The failure to Jesus that comes short of that, comes so far short of the creed of the Apostles and their converts.

The question, will God accept or save none who believe less than this? may probably be started here: but to it we have no authorised reply to offer. The matter of saving sinners belongs to God; and His mercy is infinite. In that mercy we hope. The Savior is very pitiful and of tender mercy; and, whatever others may feel at liberty to affirm, the writer of this paper is not prepared to say how little faith in God's Son, or belief about Him, may render a sinner accepted for His name's sake; but of this we are confident, that what we have described is the only creed to be believed and confessed in order to salvation, according to the teaching of the Apostles. "These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God; and that believing ye might have life through His name." "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." And so we find it recorded that, at Thessalonica the Apostle Paul, as his manner was, went into a synagogue of the Jews, and for three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures; opening and alleging that the Christ must needs have suffered, and risen from the dead, and (saying) that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is the Christ." The translators of the authorised version made a most important omission when they left out the article before the word Christ, here. The Greek is not Christ simply, but the Christ. So also in 1 Cor. iii. 11, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus the Christ."

In these days of so-called "Advanced religious thought" and "Higher Criticism," these representations of ours will appear foolishness to many; and some may impatiently and scornfully demand; "Why should the Father of all men suspend their salvation on their belief and confession of any particular thing regarding Jesus of Nazareth?" We are not sure that God has revealed His reason for this; we simply call attention to the revealed fact. The purpose of God shall stand, cavil who will. If the reader will, however, look at Phil. ii. 5-11, he will see that the appointment of God that all men should believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God; and that believing they might have life through His name, is in entire harmony with what is written there. "Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name which is above every name: That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth: and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

God has set His heart on the Son of His love; and determined that He shall be acknowledged and obeyed by all in the heavens and in the earth. Such was the love of that Son to His Father, that in obedience to His will, He divested Himself of His Divine honor, left that glory which He had with the Father before the world was, and appeared in fashion as a man, and became a servant of men, and obedient unto death. Therefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name above every other; seated Him at His own right hand in the highest heaven, till His enemies be made His footstool,—when in the panoply of the Father's glory, and of his own glory, and the holy angels with Him, he rides forth in majesty King of kings and Lord of lords, to receive the homage and submission of all nations, peoples, and languages. And just as then, and all who will share the blessedness of His righteous reign, must bow to Him, and confess that He is Lord—even so now, God wills to have His Son thus honored and acknowledged by us sinners of the human race. And well we may, since God has so loved us, that He hath sent His only begotten Son into the world to be a propitiation for our sins. Herein, indeed, is love, not that we loved God, but that He so loved us that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us.

Come, then, and adore Him: O bow at His feet,
And give Him the glory, the praise that is meet.

He who loved us, and gave Himself for us is the Messiah—the King of Israel, the King of the world—for the kingdoms of this world shall indeed, one day, and for ever, be the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever. Amen.

Railway Notes.

THE one thing wanting to make a direct railroad communication between India and Europe is a railway from Alexandretta, the nearest point on the Persian Gulf, to Kurrachee. A committee has been formed in London, consisting of the Duke of Sutherland and several other noblemen and gentlemen to acquire certain routes through the valley of the Euphrates to complete the connection. This done, it will be possible to go from London to Kurrachee in about seven days—a distance which it now takes ninety days to cover.

The Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia has issued a pamphlet urging the speedy construction of an Orenburg-Tashkend Railway. His arguments for this route, based on that of Da Lesseps and Cotard, is, in brief, as follows: If a grand circle be drawn of the globe between London and Calcutta, the segment of it intersected between the two cities goes through Amsterdam, then a little south of Berlin, then through Varsow, through Southern Russia to the Caspian Sea, which it cuts somewhat above forty-four degrees of latitude; then through the Sea of Aral, proceeds to the east of Samarkand, cuts the Indus about a hundred miles south of its great angle, and goes down the valley of the Ganges to Calcutta. Russia is in possession of the Asiatic part of that shortest route to India. She ought consequently to construct at once the line of railway which most closely follows it—to wit, from Orenburg to Tashkend.

THE greatest railroads in India are composed of the Punjab and Delhi system, some 1,200 miles in length, meeting at Delhi the East Indian Railway, which goes to Calcutta, and which is about 1,000 miles in length, with a branch at Allahabad to Jubbelpore, some 250 miles additional in length. More, it connects with the great Indian Peninsular system which is carried on to Bombay, some 550 miles. This system runs through a chain of mountains, called the Thull and Vhrne Ghatz, where the engineering difficulties have been immense, and 15 miles of the tunnel made. The line then runs from Poonah to Mugpore, where it is connected with the Madras Railway, some 850 miles in length. This line also serves Bangalore, the garden of the Madras Presidency, and the coolest spot in the plains of India. In the same direction is the Hyderabad State Line, belonging to the Nizam. The Bombay and Baroda Railway runs to Glucwarah, thence through Central India to Ahmedabad, where it is connected with the Rajpootan State Railway, running to Delhi. At Calcutta is the Eastern Bengal Railway, which goes to Barrachpore, thence to Koosbteah, from which a line of steamers connects with Assam, the great tea growing country of India. In Oude is the Oude and Rohilkund line, which runs 300 miles through some of the richest plains of that fertile region. The noble bridge, about 1½ miles in length, which spans the Ganges at Cawnpore, belongs to this company. These comprise the general grand trunk system of railways in India.

New Heavens and New Earth.

Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. 2 Pet. iii. 13.

I understand the new heavens and earth as being among a cluster of literal things and events that we are plainly taught to look for in the connection and many other Scriptures. By the sound principles of literal interpretation, we, as a people, have come to believe in a personal and near advent. The last-day scoffers were to say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" "All things continue as they were from the beginning of creation." Peter declares they "were willingly ignorant of the great change implied in the existence of the heavens and earth in the beginning by the word of God." Also of the great change made by the flood. "But the heavens and earth which are now, by the same word, are kept in store, reserved unto fire (instead of water) against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."

Now, if the coming scoffed at by the wicked and love by the saints, if the creation and flood—"day of the Lord"—day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men are literal, why not the present old heavens and earth, and the new that are to succeed them be considered literal also? Consistency is a jewel, in the interpretation of the Scriptures, as in everything else. Suppose the new or third heavens and earth are spiritual instead of literal, then these heavens and earth "which are now reserved unto fire" are spiritual, and the fire spiritual, and the earth overflowed with water was spiritual and there was no real water, and the Swedenborgians may be right in saying that it was a flood of wickedness. So, when God created the heavens and earth in the beginning, he did not make the literal heavens above us and the solid earth beneath our feet. Hence, the absurdity of spiritualizing the new earth.

Thus I am constrained to look with Peter and all the Christians to whom he wrote for a new earth that shall be the theatre of perfect righteousness—a "heavenly country,"—this earth changed through the agency of literal fire. Let us, right here, consider some of the objections urged. It is thought by some that the description of this fire is inconsistent with the survival of a remnant of the nations that is so fully predicted by the prophets. Dr. Seiss remarks, that the words "heavens being on fire," simply means the atmosphere being inflamed, heated—filled with fiery volcanic emissions, and lit up with lightnings. The word rendered "pass away," does not mean to cease to exist, but to pass from one place or state to another. As applied to the atmosphere, it expresses a change, implying motion, and that very violent—"with a great noise, or rushing sound." He says, "the phrase burnt up," is also rather expressive for the original which means simply to be "burned." The words "dissolved" and "melted" are elsewhere translated "loosed." "Fervent heat" means "set on fire, heated." He adds: "The plain grammatical meaning of the phrase is, that certain elementary substances of the earth shall become loosed by being heated and set on fire, as in the case of great and violent volcanic eruptions, when vast floods of fire and lava are ejected from the earth, filling whole countries with darkness and destruction." "As there is nothing to show that the burning and fusing of the earth will be universal, so there is no reason to believe that all the works that are in the earth will be burned." As the object of the fire is "the perdition of ungodly men," its effect would appear to be limited to parts of the earth. God can easily preserve a remnant of the nations if he has purposed to do so. But, it is said, that the heavens and earth are sometimes used figuratively in the Bible to mean something else. Suppose that, in the highly poetic descriptions of the prophets, there were a few such instances, they cannot disprove the many literal uses of the words in such statements as are found in the epistles of Peter and John and Paul.

It is easily proved that the heavens and earth will not literally "perish" in the sense of annihilation, or literally "pass away." Heb. i. 10. "And, thou Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands; they shall perish, but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed." Thus, "perish" is defined to be "changed," and the passing away of the heavens and earth does not mean the passing away of something else, but the great change of the real heavens and earth at the close of the thousand years, when the Creator "shall make all things new," and "the meek shall inherit the (new) earth." But it is contended that the promised new earth of Isa. lxv. 17, is the creating of "Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy." I think a fair construction of this passage is, that God will create three new things—new heavens and earth, so glorious that the old will not be remembered, and Jerusalem a rejoicing—and her people a joy; and these events will all transpire in their proper order in "the great day of the Lord." Isa. i. 2, is supposed to be metaphorical heavens and earth. "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth; for the Lord hath spoken; I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me." Heavens and earth, in this passage, and all similar passages, most manifestly, mean the literal heavens and earth, addressed as witnesses of the ingratitude and rebellion of the Jewish people. The figure used is not that of metaphor, by which heavens and earth are made to represent something else like them; but the figure is that of personification, by which life and action are attributed to the inanimate heavens and earth, and they are addressed as intelligent persons. Jesus told the Pharisees: "If these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out." Luke xix. 40. Now, because stones cannot cry out, suppose they should be considered spiritual stones! All would admit they were literal stones, but could not literally cry out. By the same figure life and action are attributed to the stones, as they are attributed to the heavens and earth in the other passages. I am looking "for a better country, that is a heavenly." TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the transformation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as a result for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Trust in God.

Editor Restitution:—The following communication was written by Brother Pinney by special request, to an aged pilgrim in Herkimer county, and, having the privilege of reading it, I thought it might comfort others, and requested the privilege of copying it for publication, which was granted, and I forward it to you for that purpose:

FAITH TO ENDURE—HOW OBTAINED.

DEAR BROTHER:—In great infirmity and suffering I take this opportunity of complying with your request through Miss F. C. I regret that the [illegible] my infirmity will oblige me to be brief, as I am suffering intensely and almost continually, and, being located in the head, makes it next to impossible to write much, especially where much thought is required. These facts must excuse any want of connection apparent in the few brief and simple remarks I may make:

1. As to faith in God under affliction—how obtained. I answer, by faith in God's promises, and the conclusion of the gospel. I feel to bless God who hath comforted me in all my tribulations, that I may be able to comfort them who are in any trouble by the comfort wherewith I, myself, have been comforted of God. "For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation aboundeth also by Christ, whereby we are enabled to rejoice in God." Always rejoice in tribulation, is a command, and should be obeyed; and the reason given is, that it worketh patience, experience and hope; these are the graces much to be desired, for patience enables us to endure the ills and trials of life. Experience is always good, for it yields hope, and hope takes hold of eternal life and glory. If, then, tribulation yields such fruits, why not rejoice in it? God is good, and his mercy endureth forever. He doeth all things well, and does not willingly afflict his people. Let us not, then, despise the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when we are rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. What! since his chastening is an evidence of his love would you not be willing to suffer a little joyfully, if, thereby, you could obtain an evidence of his love to you? But, again, none others are received as sons. What! would you be a son of God, become an heir of glory, a joint heir with Jesus Christ, to all things? Oh, glory to God; come, then, affliction, dreary, sharp, sickness, pierce my heart; you only give the weary an evidence of love most blessed.

Again, God chastens us not for pleasure, but always for our profit, that we may be made "partakers of his holiness." This is a great and necessary attainment. Without it no man can see God. Would you see God and reign with him forever in glory? Then must you be willing to be chastened a little here, in view of such blessings. Shall we complain of a little affliction? Shall we murmur and repine, and feel that the Lord is a hard Master? What! shall we receive good at the hand of the Lord, and not evil? Will not the Judge of all the earth do right? Can he do wrong? Say, my brother can he do wrong?

Again, no affliction is for the present joyous, but grievous. Nevertheless, afterward, it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them that are exercised thereby. This is good fruit, indeed, and takes hold of the kingdom, for the righteous are permitted to enter through the gates into the city, and have a right to the tree of life. God help us to endure, and so overcome as to receive a crown of righteousness when Christ shall appear. To such it shall be said: "Open ye the gates that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in." Isa. xxvi. 2. Oh, then, let us, in view of such glorious promises suffer joyfully. Yes, rejoice in tribulation; (though poor human nature shrinks from suffering), rejoice with exceeding great joy in view of the glory set before us. "Though now for a season, if needs be, we are in heaviness through manifold temptations; that the trial of our faith being much more precious than gold that perisheth might be found unto honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. i. 6, 7.

Again, in the kingdom we shall want honor and to be exalted to the white robed company. Tribulation will do it. Says an elder: "Who are those arrayed in white robes?" and the answer was: "These are they which come out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Who, for such an exhaltation, would not endure tribulation with all long-suffering and joyfulness? "For I seek on," says Paul, by the eternal spirit, "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

Once more, afflictions yield glory. We shall want glory in the kingdom. Yes, in large measures. But, mark! while I give one of God's richest consolations. Oh, that it was written on the margin of the heavens. Hear, ye afflicted suffering ones; near, and rejoice! "These light afflictions, which are but for a moment, worketh out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Brethren, is it not enough? What more can I say? God is faithful. Who will fulfill? Oh, let us believe, and, believing, let us rejoice with a joy that is unspeakable, and full of glory. "For these exceeding great and precious promises are given unto us that we may be made partakers of the divine nature." 2 Pet. i. 4. And, remember, these promises are sure. They are yea and amen in Christ Jesus. They cannot fail. Oh, think how they were confirmed by the oath of God; that by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation, etc. God is faithful, and, believing, we can but rejoice in tribulation, however great, and suffering ever so severe. I wonder not the Hebrew youths walk through the furnace, and the martyrs about the victory until their voices were lost in death. So, let us trust in God in all our afflictions; rejoicing in God always in hope of glory and a kingdom.

But, I will give one more promise, the great sheet-anchor promise, that never drags, however high the winds blow or hard the storm beats in affliction's darkest hour, it never fails, no never; it is the grand climax of consolation, the topstone of the mighty tower, a promise with shoutings: grace unto it is the fulness of the infinitude of the ocean of God's love to his poor, afflicted people here. Hear it, and we know that all things shall work together for good to them that love God. Rom. viii. 28. Do you love God? Then this promise is yours, and it will never fail you. Mark! Paul speaks by inspiration. We know, then, the promise is sure. It never has failed. I have tried it in every circumstance in life. It cannot fail, however dark and trying the providence, however severe the affliction, however great the suffering, it is one of the "all things" that work together for good. Standing by faith upon it, I can smile at Satan's rage, and face a frowning world. Go into the furnace or the den; walk up manfully to the stake and shout for joy in the boiling cauldron of oil, yea, we can defy all the combined powers of earth and hell; for, come what may, it is all for our good. Oh, glory to God, for this blessed promise, this soul-cheering promise, and soul-triumphing consolation; all things for our good, praise the Lord, O my soul, and let all that is within me praise his holy name. Oh, how with this, we can triumph over Satan; for, let him afflict and wrong us as he may, let him do the worst he can, he is only polishing our crowns, and whitening our robes, and working out for us glory. I have often, in my hours of sufferings, especially in the night seasons, spoke and said to him, work away you poor devil; heap on your afflictions; you are only scouring my crown; it is all you are fit for; work away, etc. I have often almost imagined I could hear him gnash his teeth for rage.

But, my brother, what think you? With such consolation, can we not suffer joyfully? If our faith is unwavering in these promises, can we not obey the injunction to "rejoice always?" yea, rejoice in tribulation?" Brother, we can. In fact, believing, can we do otherwise than rejoice in the most dark and trying seasons? God helping, I will rejoice always, however dark and gloomy the hour. God, in due time, will deliver and give us victory. Let us, let us, then, trust in him, though he slay us, and trust him everywhere. We cannot trace him, and in due time he will crown us with glory in the kingdom of God.

It has done me good to write out these promises, and I trust they may do you good, and comfort you in all your afflictions. May God bless, and comfort, and strengthen you with all might according to his glorious power unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness in Christ Jesus; and, let us resolve never (God helping us) to indulge in murmuring thoughts, however dark and severe our trials, but rejoice always in hope of the glory of God soon to be revealed. I can add my testimony to the power and sufficiency of God's grace through these promises to me-ward through eight long years of suffering and affliction. They have never failed to sustain me in the darkest hours. I was young, with a family depending on me for support. I was preaching for a small remuneration, scarce enough to sustain us; my highest salary, $350 per year. And, then, that was cut off by my cancer, which stopped my preaching, and sent me from home to try to cure it in 1847. Since then I have been on constant expense, and have been able to do but little to support myself or family. For the last three years I have been confined mostly to my house and room, unable to do anything, and have suffered intensely and constantly, with a wife and five children to care for, and much sickness in my family. These were circumstances calculated to try one's faith, and lead to murmuring, and to be cast down and doubt God. But God, my brother, has been faithful, and his grace hath sustained me through it all, and enabled me to rejoice in God all the day long; and, here, let me testify to God's faithfulness. I have never suffered for want, no, never; but have abounded in all things and lacked nothing, and never expect to want. God's faithfulness, in the past, is to me a pledge for the future. I will still trust in him who is my God and my refuge evermore. I have no care, no anxiety for the present or future. I have left all in the hands of God, who doeth all things well, and feel to say, in all things, "My Father, glorify thyself, even so, for it seemeth good in thy sight." Blessed be his holy name forever and ever, who hath promised that all things shall work together for good. Amen and amen.

E. R. PINNEY.

Dear Brother Chaplin:—The above letter has been copied by me, having become acquainted with a daughter of Brother Pinney, a Sister Smith, a very devoted and straightforward gospel believer. She being very willing that I should have it re-published, I thought it might not be out of the way to do so. But you will not your own judgment in the matter. I am not particular. I am now at Wells, Minn.; have had several talks with quite a number of different people; find some quite interested. Mrs. Smith's husband, the Sister Smith of whom I speak, is very much interested. He is quite an intelligent man, and, I think, he will obey the first opportunity. I am in hopes the gospel will take effect in the hearts of some here. I feel that the Lord is on the side of truth, and it will prevail. I received the tracts in due time. You will find, enclosed, one dollar more for THE RESTITUTION for six months. Please send to my address, Wells, Minn. Now, dear Brother, don't forget to pray for me, for unworthy me; and, now, I would say, hold on to the promises, for very soon he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry; and now the just shall live by faith; bless the Lord, O my soul, and let all that is within me praise the name of my God.

SELECTIONS.

The Kirwan Letters to the Right Rev. John Hughes, Bishop of New York.

LETTER III.—CONCLUDED.

Holy Wells.—Prohibiting the Bible.—An Incident.

But the most remarkable, and doubtless the most efficient of the ceremonies, was reserved for the last; and surely nothing was ever devised by man which more forcibly evinced how low our nature can descend. Around the largest of the wells, which was in a building very much, to common eyes, like a stable, all those who had performed their penances were assembled, some dressing, some undressing, many stark naked. A certain number of them were admitted at a time into this holy well, and there men and women of every age bathed promiscuously, without any covering. They undressed before bathing, and performed the whole business of the toilet afterward in the open air, in the midst of the crowd, without appearing sensible of the observation of lookers-on, perfectly regardless of decency, perfectly dead to all natural sensations. This was a strange sight, but so nearly resembling the feast of lunatics that even the voluptuary would have beheld it without any emotions but those of dejection. The penance having terminated in this marvelous ablution, the penitents then adjourned either to booths and tents to drink, or join their friends. The air then rang with musical, monotonous singing, which became louder with every glass of whisky finishing in frolicsome debauch, and laying, in all probability, the foundation for future penances and more thorough ablutions. No pen can describe all the confusion, no description can give a just idea of the noise and disorder which filled this hallowed square, this theatre of fanaticism, this temple of superstitution, of which the rites rival all that we are told of in the East. The minor parts of the spectacle were filled up with credulous mothers half drowning their poor children to cure their sore eyes; with cripples who exhibited everything that has yet been discovered in deformity, expecting to be washed straight, and to walk away nimbly and comely.

"The experience of years had not shaken their faith; and though nobody was cured, nobody went away doubting. Shouting, and howling, and swearing, and carousings filled up every pause, and 'threw o'er this spot of earth the air of hell.' I was never more shocked and struck with horror; and perceiving many of them intoxicated with religious fervor and all-potent whisky, and warming into violence before midnight, at which time the distraction was at its climax, I left this scene of human degradation in a state of mind not easily to be described. The whole road from the wells to the neighboring town was crowded with such supplicants as prefer mortal half-pence to holy penance. The country around was illuminated with watchfires; the demons of discord and fear were abroad in the air; the pursuits of the world and the occupations of the peaceful appeared put a stop to by the performance of ceremonies, disgraceful when applied to propitiate an all compassionate divinity, whom these religionists were determined and taught to consider jealous rather than merciful. I wish it were in my power, without insincerity, to pay a compliment to the Irish Catholic clergy. On this occasion they were the mad priests of these Bacchanalian orgies—the fomenters of fury—the setters-on to strife—the mischevious ministers of debasement of their people, lending their aid to plunge their credulous congregations in ceremonious horrors."*

Now, sir, can you, as a man of high intelligence, regard these things in any other light than as the merest impostures to delude the ignorant? And what epithet sufficiently expressive of abhorence can we apply to the priesthood who thus impose upon a credulous people? Can Hindooism surpass this in its worst orgies?

I well remember yet another of these impostures. When a boy, I often heard that, on the morning of Easter Sunday, the sun might be seen dancing in the heavens and in the chapels, to express its joy on the anniversary of the resurrection of Christ, and I often wished to be where I could witness the phenomenon. It took place in a certain chapel, and in the presence of many pious and admiring beholders. An unbeliever in priestly miracles was present, who traced up the dancing of the sunbeams through the chapel to an individual managing concealed mirrors so as to produce the wonderful effect! Of this I heard; and although it seemed incredible, yet it made an impression on my mind. The probability of the imposture cannot be doubted by those who know that the earth which covers the grave of Father Sheely (who was convicted of treason, and hung in the county of Tipperary), when boiled in milk, cures a variety of diseases. Would that we had not convincing evidence of far worse impositions than this!

The Bible with all its notes and glosses, as published by the authority of your own church, is denied by you to be a complete rule of faith. On this question I will not now enter, only so far as to say that this denial holds a very intimate connection with its virtual withholding from the people. If not a complete rule, it may lead astray; and as it is capable of opposite interpretations in some of its passages, the souls of the people must not be endangered by its general circulation. It is better to know nothing of the Bible than in some particulars to misinterpret it! Your infallible Church teaches both ways on a variety of subjects, and, among the rest, on the circulation of the Bible. It allows it in Protestant countries, with some stringent regulations; it virtually forbids it in purely papal countries. How many Bibles could your reference procure in Spain, Portugal, Naples, or Italy? In your many visits to Rome, to give an account of yourself to your master, have you ever sought for a Bible in its bookstores? How many Spaniards or Italians have read a Bible through? How many of the Irish peasantry that can read and write have ever read one chapter of it? Now, sir, for years together, I sat daily at table with a Catholic priest, who was a member of the family, and the curate of the parish, and I never saw a Bible used in the family. I never heard at table, or in the morning or in the evening, a religious service. The numbers of the Douay Bible, published by subscription in folio, were taken in the family, but never read. And not only so, but I never heard a sermon preached in a Catholic chapel in Ireland, nor a word of explanation on a single Christian topic, doctrine or duty. The thing nearest to a sermon that I heard was a scold from the altar because some person sent for the priest at midnight to confess and anoint a dying person. And before I was sixteen years of age, I never read a chapter in the word of God, while in other respects my education was not neglected. I often asked the meaning of this thing and the other, but there was no explanation; nor can one out of one thousand, in papal countries, give a single reason for one of your peculiar doctrines or duties. And since, in the maturity of my judgment I have examined this matter, I have greatly commended your wisdom in withholding the bible from the people; if I were a bishop or a priest of your Church, with no better principles than the rest of you, I would do the same. I heard a man who lived near the Canada line, in Vermont, during the last war with Great Britain, tell the following story, "There was," said he, "much smuggling going on. Whenever we met a traveler with a pack of any kind, we ordered it to be searched. Honest men always said, 'Search and welcome.' But when ever a man refused, or made any fuss about it, we always suspected that there were contraband goods in the pack, and we were never mistaken." You have brought contraband goods into the house of God and the Bible tells the people so. Hence it is forbidden. Light is the sure death of darkness. The circulation of the Bible will be the death of your whole system.

An Unfailing Helper.

"I may be faint and weary says the believer, but my God cannot. I may alter and fluctuate, as to my frames; but my Redeemer is unchangeably the same. I might utterly fall and come to nothing, if left to myself; but I cannot be so left to myself, for the Spirit of Truth hath said, 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.' He will renew my strength, either by changing my weakness into strength, or by enduing me with his own power. He is wise to see and provide for all my dangers: He is rich to relieve and succor me in all my wants: He is gracious to hear and answer all my prayers: He is omnipotent to deliver and defend me from all my enemies: He is faithful to perfect and and perform all his own promises: He is eternal and immortal, to bless my poor depending soul with eternal blessedness and immortality. O what a great and glorious Savior for such a mean and worthless sinner! O what a bountiful and gracious, indulgent friend for such a base and insignificant rebel!"

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

One forgives everything to him who forgives himself nothing.

He who finds pleasure in vice, and pain in virtue, is a novice both in one and the other.

We must do quickly what there is no hurry for, to be able to do slowly what demands haste.

The wise man does not speak of all he does, but he does nothing that cannot be spoken of.

The truths that we least wish to hear are those which it is most to our advantage to know.

Afflictions are the rough touches, and hard rubs that we get to polish us for use and for shining.

"He went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose."—St. Matt. ix. 25.

Did He not enter in where Death's dread sleeper
Lay still, with pulseless face and sealed eyes,
Put calmly forth each loud tumultuous weeper,
And take her by the hand and bid her rise?

Come to us, Savior! in our lonely dejection.
Speak calmly to our wild and passionate grief;
Bring up the hope and thoughts of resurrection,
Bring us the comfort of a true belief.

—Mrs. C. F. Alexander.

If man will give his heart and life to God, God will give him in return greater gifts than if Christ were to suffer death over again for him.

Sheridan: Wit loses its respect with the good when seen in company with malice; and to smile at the jest which plants a thorn in another's breast is to become a principal in the mischief.

Edward Everett: An intelligent class can scarce ever be, as a class, vicious; never, never, as a class, indolent. The excited mental activity operates as a counterpoise to the stimulus of sense and appetite.

When a man leaves our side and goes to the other side, he is a traitor, and we always feel that there is a subtile something wrong about him. But when a man leaves the other side and comes over to us, then he is a man of great moral courage, and we always feel that he has sterling stuff in him.

"Rome was not builded in a day,"
The ancient proverb teaches;
And Nature by her trees and flowers,
The same sweet sermon preaches.
Think not of far-off duties,
But of duties which are near:
And having once begun to work,
Resolve to persevere.

"Well, madam," said John Newton to one who was complaining of the imperfections of others, "if there were a perfect Church on earth, it would cease being so the moment you and I entered it." And that remark still has a pertinent application for those who, we fear, won't apply it.

It is they who glorify who shall enjoy him; they who deny themselves, who shall not be denied; they who labor on earth, who shall rest in heaven; they who bear the cross, who shall wear the crown; they who seek to bless others, who shall be blessed.

WORDS.

I have known a word hang starlike,
Through a night of dreary years,
And it often seemed the brightest
Through a blinding mist of tears;
And a weary wanderer gathered
Hope and heart on life's dark way—
For it cheered him as he struggled
Till the dawning of the day.

I have known a spirit calmer
Than the calmest lake, and clear
As the heaven that shown upon it,
With no wave of doubt or fear;
I have watched the storm sweep o'er it
Till its deepest depths were stirred,
Never, never more to slumber,
Only by a word.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 4, 1879.

WE must urge our friends to promptly renew their subscriptions; otherwise we shall be compelled to pass a week occasionally without an issue of our paper. We are doing all we can on our own part.

WE do not consider ourselves responsible for all the different views that find a place in THE RESTITUTION. We endeavor to give something like a fair opportunity to our correspondents, however, to set forth their sentiments in their own way. We think it most needful, as a general thing, to labor for the salvation of men by proclaiming the primary truths of the gospel as we have the example of the apostles for a precedent.

The Pocasset Sacrifice.

In our last issue we tried to give our readers a fair and truthful history of this sad and dismal tragedy that has caused so much speculation through the whole country. In this number our aim is to bring out some additional facts in relation to the mental and moral condition of the unhappy parents whose warped, deceived and frenzied imaginations led them to the commission of the awful deed. The poor deluded father and mother have been made the objects of the most pitiless scorn by that better class of community from whom it had been reasonable to expect expressions of sound and sober judgment even though the unnatural crime be confessedly one of unparalleled enormity. Those of a dissimilar faith have not only expressed their horrible detestation of the unhappy culprits, and their more intimate associates, but, in many instances, have endeavored to make the doctrine of the second advent of the Lord Jesus Christ, and its many adherents, in some way responsible for the insane act of an individual who happened to be a believer in the near coming of the Messiah. And some of a similar faith have been in hot haste in joining the above class in hurling the missiles of denunciation against the poor victims of fanaticism and those that happened to be in church relation with them. We should be glad, indeed, to know that all the stone casters would be pronounced sinless under the inspection of him who "searches the heart and tries the reins." The unhappy [illegible], has afforded a rare opportunity for formalistic hypocrite, the self-righteous Pharisee, the mean-souled bigot, the Bible-hating ritualistic juggler, the shriveled spirited sectarian, and the blasphemous infidel to vituperate not only the miserable parents, but also to vent their spite on a precious doctrine of divine revelation and all who cherish its blessed hopes. Though not an "Adventist" in the narrow sectarian application of that term, we are still bold to say that, as a Millennarian, we look for God's Son from heaven at no very distant day, to assume the sceptre of universal empire, and bring about that "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken of by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." The direful deed itself causes us more and more to realize the imperative necessity of his coming to end the world's miseries, superstitions, oppressions, infidelities and cruzed fanaticisms. It is the event that the true Christian regards as the very pole-star of the hope of this world's deliverance from sin and all its fearful results. We still, therefore, unequivocally declare our steadfast, unshaken faith in the return of Christ as "Israel's Hope and Earth's Deliverer." As human history shades off into ever darkening gloom, we most earnestly pray that the bright rising of the Sun of Righteousness may usher in the long-looked for millennial day of light and gladness, when all shall so truly know the Lord, from the least to the greatest, that no such fearful mistake will ever be possible. We look with pity upon the poor fanatical parents whose hallucination has sacrificed a pet darling child, and we shall not join in any fiendish assaults upon them in their misery. We must leave them to the rigors of violated law, and in the hands of the judge of all the earth who will do right. In some future paper we may speak of the sacrifices required in the Scriptures and show how safe it is to follow the written word instead of warming at sparks of our own kindling, by following our own vain imaginations, and, at last, lying down in sorrow. Below we continue the history as reported in the N. Y. Sun:

BARNSTABLE, Mass., May 26.—Dr. Mansell, the medical examiner of Barnstable county, has been watching Charles F. Freeman very closely, especially since Freeman's removal from the barnlike jail to the new structure, but he has been unable to detect any of the usual physical symptoms of insanity, either developed or incipient. Freeman was greatly pleased when he was put into the new jail, and even his wife, whom nothing has aroused from her melancholy, was glad to get away from the loft in which she had been confined. Freeman has been especially interested in the religious discussion which the killing of his little daughter has provoked. He still holds with pertinacity to his belief that he was called by God to do the act, and that some great good is to come of it yet. To Dr. Mansell he is reported as having said a day or two ago that it was possible that what God intended was a great religious awakening. He professes to prefer to be convicted, and even hanged, rather than to be acquitted on the ground of insanity. He is said to have affirmed repeatedly that he knew perfectly well before the act, and realizes just as well now, the responsibility that he was taking, but adds that as a faithful Christian he was constrained to sacrifice his child.

Freeman was told, it is said, that the account of his act, printed in the Sun, had been telegraphed to the newspapers in England and France, and he seemed to view this as only the working out of the mysterious purpose that compelled him to kill little Edith. He sleeps soundly, eats well, and takes much interest in the ordinary affairs of life. Since his imprisonment he has allowed his full beard to grow.

But Mrs. Freeman still sorrows, and is apparently pining away. She has admitted that she believed that the act was the result of a mistaken faith; but she insists that neither she nor her husband was guilty of any crime. The recent letter to a sister, which has been published, has been commented on by a number of clergyman as not the least remarkable manifestation of this mysterious tragedy. She speaks of Elijah, Elisha, and Christ raising the dead, and still insists that after the deed was done she and her husband had perfect faith that the child would be raised to them. But as the days passed and there were no manifestations, her heart failed, and now she knows they did wrong.

Mrs. Freeman found comfort in a recent conversation she had with Mrs. Fisk, who has charge of the eldest child. Mrs. Fisk suggested that she might have been tempted as Christ was by Satan, and this made a strong impression upon Mrs. Freeman. She asked Mrs. Fisk pleadingly, and with tears streaming down her cheeks, whether she supposed God would forgive them for having yielded to temptation, and Mrs. Fisk replied that God always forgave where there was true repentance.

"Then He will forgive us," and with that remark Mrs. Freeman seemed to give up all consideration of the religious aspect of the act, and to allow her maternal sorrow for her child to be unrestrained. Her husband's condition and the life of her living child are the only matters that now concern her. She does not want little Bessie brought to see her. She thought the surroundings would terrify the child. But she gave minute directions regarding Bessie, her school life, her dresses, her companions, and her religious instruction. Bessie does not yet know that her sister Edith is dead.

The Second Adventists in Pocasset have not yet recovered from the bewilderment which the widespread horror of Freeman's act has created. They are as meek and passive now as children. All that they say is, "We can't understand it." The feeble Foster Howard, one of the elders of the Pocasset Church, the man whom Freeman first told of the act, sits day after day in his kitchen, often with his Bible open in his lap, pondering. His faith was so strong that Edith would be raised that he has not yet recovered from the shock that the undisturbed grave has given him.

"I don't understand it," he recently said. "Here is the promise, that if we have faith sufficient we may say to a mountain 'Be removed,' and it is done. Our faith was equal to that, and yet our faith does not avail."

It is possible that the Second Adventists may hold the camp meeting, beginning June 15, as they intended, because public indignation has gone, and sympathy, or rather pity, has taken its place. But they cannot have the grove on Buzzard's Bay shore, nud Mrs. Swift, Mrs. Freeman's mother, has offered them a grove on her farm.

Throughout New England the attention of the clergy has been generally called to the tragedy, and many sermons have been preached upon it in Providence, Boston, Lawrence, Lynn, Springfield, Worcester, and other cities. In Hartford three clergymen—the Rev. Dr. Sage, Baptist, the Rev. Dr. Parker, and the Rev. Mr. Gage, Congregationalist—preached upon it on Sunday of last week. Dr. Parker boldly said that he doubted whether the Abrahamic story ought to be accepted literally, and Dr. Sage argued as strongly that it should be so read.

The following letter from Mrs. Davis, the undertaker's wife, will place some misrepresented matters in entirely a new light:

HARTFORD, Conn., May 25.—Mrs. Mary L. Davis, wife of A. J. Davis, one of the Second Adventists of Pocasset, has written a peculiar letter to a Hartford friend, whom she has known for many years. The following extracts cover the most important features:

* * It is but just to myself and Mrs. Swift to try and clear our characters up a little in your eyes from the blackness which the papers have heaped on us so unjustly. We are the same as when you saw us—no worse. I should have written you sooner, but have been sick ever since the tragedy. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman were very nice people. They have suffered from the persecution we have received from the Methodists, and, being in poor health, it wore on them and turned their heads and constant thinking on it had made them insane, though we did not suspect it. Mrs. Swift, or I, or any one of us, knew no more about it than you did. He was expecting to go out as an evangelist, and sent for us to come there at 3 o'clock, as we supposed, for a farewell social gathering before he went away. Others were sent for, the selectmen, &c., but they did not go. He talked around two hours before we knew what it was; then we cried and had a dreadful time.

Policemen are not so plenty as in Boston. It is a lonely place a mile from any other house. So we concluded some of us would stay all night and take care of the living and the dead, and the rest would go home, expecting every moment officers would come. My husband was out of town, but came home late, and came there at 11 o'clock, sat up all night and watched, and at daylight went for the officers.

The Methodists refused us the church, but at the last moment consented, if no Adventist spoke. There was no word of sermon or prayer for the afflicted parents, of their previous Christian character, for the other child or friends. So my husband wished to say a few words, not to justify the deed—none of us could do that—but, in view of their previous Christian character, they must be insane. The papers make a great story out of a little, and make up in lies what they cannot get in truth. They have made up the most infamous lies about us, and we are going to sue them.

Adventists had nothing to do with it. If any denomination did, it was the Methodists who drove the people out of their senses. You do not condemn the whole Congregational society because the Secretary of Home Missions defaulted. Every one must stand on their own merits, and it is a wrong thing to judge Adventism by this. If the Bible is true, Adventism must be, for it is built on it. But we do not sanction this any more than you do. Please think of us as kindly as you can, and consider that three-quarters that you read is malicious falsehood.

Our object is to give the unvarnished history of this mournful affair. From what we can learn, Mr. and Mrs. Freeman were formerly Methodists, but, owing to some difficulties, had, somewhat recently, become connected with a class of Second Adventists. While the generality of the community blame the Adventists, Mrs. Davis and others blame the Methodists, but we are not disposed to charge the blame on any denomination. In this frenzied deed, sober jurisprudence will have a unique and difficult case to dispose of. We await the legal decision with interest.

Errata.

Two typographical errors occurred in our last paper in the article entitled "The Gospel of the Kingdom." The word "opposite" in the second line should read opposite and the word "parable" about half way down the next column should read favorable before the word view.

Brother Myers on the Non-Resurrection of the Wicked.

A. D. MAGRUDER.

Editor Restitution:—I have read with the attention and fraternal interest which is due to one so intelligent and excellent as brother Myers, his contribution to your columns of May 21st, on 1 Cor. xv. 21-26. After carefully considering the testimony and reasoning he offers in support of his conclusion, "as one who disbelieves in the resurrection of the wicked," I am constrained to differ with him. May I crave brief space in THE RESTITUTION, that like Elihu, I may "shew my opinion?" I hope to do this in all kindness and respect to our dear brother whose praise is justly in all the churches for his work of faith and labor of love and patience of hope, and whom not having seen I yet love for his intelligent zeal and devotion in the blessed work of gospel proclamation, and his earnest contention for the faith delivered to the saints as he understands it.

Perhaps the shortest and simplest way of presenting my objections to his conclusion is by questions, which may show their unsoundness.

1. If the wicked dead be not raised for whom is the second death reserved? Not certainly for the righteous dead, for we are expressly told, "Neither can they die any more." Nor yet for the contemporary righteous living for they will not have died the first time. When the Lord of the resurrection comes they will not die but be changed in a moment, etc. Besides, the righteous—the saints—both dead and living, shall "not be hurt of the second death." Rev. ii. 11. So they are not in the premises. Obviously (I submit) it is the wicked dead only who can be the subjects of a resurrection and the second death. They suffer the first death as the penalty of Adam's transgression in common with all our race who die at all, and as the righteous "die no more" when raised, we see it is the wicked alone who suffer the second death and in order to undergo this penalty, together with "the indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish" denounced against them in Rom. ii. 8, they must, of necessity, be raised from the dead, to meet this doom. If this be not so, who are to suffer this second death, I again ask?

2. Rev. xx. discloses to us the destiny of the righteous and the wicked. The first, being blessed and holy, live and reign with Christ a thousand years. They have part in the first resurrection; on them the second death hath no power. But "the rest of the dead lived not again" etc. (which must include the wicked dead) and they, not being written in the book of life, are cast into the lake of fire "which is the second death."

How, then, can we safely argue that the wicked will not live again? will not be raised from the dead?

3. Now is it any reply to this reasoning on the Divine testimony to ask with brother Myers, "Must the wicked be raised in order to fill 1 Cor. xv. 26, the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death?" and to answer, "not unless he can put on immortality." We reject that this is not a logical answer, for it is a non sequitur. It is nowhere written that the wicked shall triumph over death. On the contrary, as the wages of sin is death, the sinner is brought under death and death triumphs over him. But when? Not alone at his first death, for Adam's sin, for in that case the righteous hath no advantage over him, seeing both share a common fate. It is the second death of the sinner that makes the difference in their destiny. As to the saint, his last enemy—death—is destroyed at the first resurrection, but as to the sinner, his last enemy—death—is destroyed at the second resurrection. In his own destruction which is in his second death. The testimony teaches a first resurrection and a second death. It also reveals to us that the saint is to be the subject of the first resurrection—which implies a second—and that the sinner, "one not written in the book of life," is to be the subject of the second death, which implies a first.

These resurrections are, in point of time, one thousand years apart. Rev. xx. 5. The saints have part in the first. Ib. 6. "The rest of the dead," i. e., those not saints—the wicked—have part in the second, Ib. 15, which is the end of them, and they remain forever under the dominion of death, for such is their "wages."

Thus as to them, death is never destroyed. They reap the reward of their doings, and when they have died this second death, are all destroyed. death, the last enemy of living man, not of the wicked dead, is himself destroyed, for there are no wicked in existence for him to prey upon, and as "Othello's occupation is gone" he passes off as it were, leaving only immortals behind him over whom he hath no power.

Is not such the plain and simple Bible solution of the whole drama of our human existence? It seems to me it must be so, unless some intelligent brother can tell us who, if not the wicked, are to be the subjects of the resurrection, at the end of the one thousand years, and of the judgment and the second death afterwards.

To the Brethern of South Western Missouri and Kansas.

Bro. John W. Haughawout, of Traer, Iowa proposes to visit you, and to spend the present summer and autumn in your states in proclaiming the truth. And as his name has appeared in the columns of our paper as one somewhat connected with a late tragedy enacted at Gifford, Iowa, you will allow me to say to you without going into detail—which would be too lengthy and uninteresting—that I have labored to gain all the evidence possible and think that I have about all that there is from first to last. And now as a conclusion, after reading and considering simply as point by point I gained, and then as a whole together, I must say that while the circumstances show that Bro. Haughawout has acted imprudently in some respects, yet the evidence falls far short of conviction of criminality, and fails to show that he was in any way or to any extent responsible for the fatal deed of murder committed upon the girl by her lover. My evidence I have gained from other parties, and have had but little conversation with Bro. Haughawout as to the matter.

Further, it is to be considered and suggested in connection with the case.

1. That he held a discussion at Gifford at my solicitation, and as a disputant in my stead, amidst tremendous opposition, and, as a result baptized fourteen persons, and to crush his influence and to drown our teachings in that vicinity the plot was laid to entrap him. It is mainly a war against our cause.

2 To cover up the crime of another party a Reverend against whom there is undisputed testimony, Bro. Haughawout has been constantly held up before the public. Therefore all things considered I do not hesitate in commending Bro. Haughawout to you as a good worker, one who contends earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and as one calculated to do a great deal of good for the Master's cause. Yours truly, G. M. MYERS.

Brother Chaplin:—Please insert in THE RESTITUTION the following marriage notice clipped from the Canton Repository:

"DOUBLE WEDDING:—An unusually happy matrimonial affair took place last evening at the residence of Mr. Henry Eshelman, on South Market street, the occasion being the marriage of their daughter, Miss Anna M. to Mr. George W. Young, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Mr. Charles Cable, of Sandyville, Ohio to Mary L. Murray, of this city. The ceremony was impressively performed by J. M. Stephenson, of Chicago, Ill., in the presence of about forty of the relatives and friends of the families."

They visited friends in Cleveland, returning to Canton the following Monday. Last Thursday night, after having received the congratulation of their many friends and well-wishers, they took the 10:20 train for their very comfortable and pleasant home in Brooklyn, intending to visit relatives in Pennsylvania on the way, and not reaching their home until Tuesday. I cannot do better than to insert the following notice and invitation to quite a number of friends in Brooklyn, New York City, and elsewhere:

"Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Young. Married at Canton, Ohio, May 22, 1879. Reception Thursday Evening, June 5, 1879, Eight o'clock, 242 Hooper Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

May peace, happiness and prosperity, attend them through the journey of life. J. M. STEPHENSON.

SELECTIONS.

The Mysterious Woman.

Governor Briggs, of Massachusetts, in a speech at Albany, many years ago, related the following thrilling incident:

At a certain town meeting in Pennsylvania, the question came up whether any persons should be licensed to sell rum. The clergyman, the deacon, and Physician, strange as it may now appear, all favored it. One man only spoke against it, because of the mischief it did. The question was about to be put, when all at once there arose from one corner of the room, a miserable female. She was thinly clad, and her appearance indicated the utmost wretchedness, and that her mortal career was almost closed. After a moment of silence, and all eyes being fixed upon her, she stretched her attenuated body to its utmost height, and then her long arms to their greatest length, and raising her voice to a shrill pitch, she called to all to look upon her.

"Yes!" she said, "look upon me, and then hear me. All that the last speaker has said relative to temperate drinking, as being the father of drunkenness, is true. All practice, all experience, declare its truth. All drinking of alcoholic poison, as a beverage in health, is excess. Look upon me. You all know me or once did. You all know I was once the mistress of the best farm in the town. You all know, too, I had one of the best—the most devoted of husbands. You all know I had fine, noble-hearted, industrious boys. Where are they now? Doctor, where are they now? You all know. You all know they lie in a row, side by side in yonder churchyard: all—every one of them filling the drunkard's grave! They were all taught to believe that temperate drinking was safe—excess alone ought to be avoided: and they never acknowledged excess. They quoted you, and you," pointing with her shred of a finger to the Priest, Deacon, and Doctor, as authority. "They thought themselves safe under such teachers. But I saw the gradual change coming over my family and prospects, with dismay and horror: I felt we were all to be overwhelmed in one common ruin—I tried to ward off the blow. I tried to break the spell, the delusive spell—in which the idea of the benefits of temperate drinking had involved my husband and sons. I begged, I prayed: but the odds were against me. The Minister said the poison that was destroying my husband and boys was a good creature of God; the Deacon (who sits under the pulpit there, and took our Farm to pay his rum bills), sold them the poison. The Doctor said that a little was good, and excess ought to be avoided. My poor husband, and my dear boys fell into the snare, and they could not escape, and, one after another, was conveyed to the sorrowful grave of the drunkard. Now look at me again. Yet probably see me for the last time—my sand has almost run—I have dragged my exhausted frame from my present home—your poor-house—to warn you all—to warn you, Deacon—to warn you, false teachers of God's Word!" and with her arms high flung, and her tall form stretched to its utmost, and her voice raised to an unearthly pitch—she exclaimed:

"I shall soon stand before the judgment seat of God—I shall meet you there you false guides, and be a witness against you all!"

The miserable female vanished—a dead silence pervaded the assembly—the Priest, Deacon and Physician hung their heads—and when the president of the meeting put the question,

"Shall any Licenses be granted for the sale of Spiritous Liquors?" the response was unanimous—"No!

What Nature Teaches.

The revivication of the vegetable in the spring after the apparent death of winter, and the double life through which some insects pass, are thought to typify, if they do not foretell, a future life for man. These are certainly beautiful symbols of that future state which is more plainly revealed in the gospel, but they come infinitely short of proving or even of symbolizing the immortality of man in that future state, and much less the immortality of all men, both good and bad, which is the point in question. If these analogies are to be used at all in this argument, they afford a remarkable confirmation of the doctrine taught in the Scriptures that immortality is not the portion of all, but only of a part of the human race. It is not every vegetable that revives in the spring—nor every seed that sprouts up after an apparent death in the ground, but only such as have life remaining in them. All others go to decay.

And as for the larvæ that pass through the chrysalis state into a higher life as winged insects, they must preserve the germ of their future life unimpaired while they are in their first stage, or the butterfly within them is never developed. They die often fulfilling their career as grubs or larvæ and come short forever of that aerial lepidopterous state for which nature had designed them, and into which those of their species who are fit are admitted.

Naturalists tell us that every larvæ of this class, as the caterpillar for instance, carries within itself, while in its grub state, an embryo butterfly or psyche (Psuche?)—as it is called in Greek—the very word the Scriptures use for the human soul—possessing all the organs of the butterfly in an undeveloped state, in addition to its own proper organism, and that this embryo butterfly or psuche hidden within the grub, is peculiarly liable to the attack of little winged insects called ichneumon flies, which pray upon its substance and destroy its life, and that too, without any apparent injury to the grub. It fulfills its larvæ life and [illegible] into the chrysalis state, and like all other grubs of its kind, wraps itself in its cocoon or winding sheet in the anticipation of a higher life to come. But it does not rise with its fellows to another life in the air as a winged butterfly, for the embryo psuche (soul) within was destroyed while it was yet a crawling grub. It only goes to corruption and perishes forever. This butterfly life is reserved for those only of its species that were prepared for it and died in a well founded hope of the life to come. Here is the doctrine of conditional immortality typified in nature as clearly as possible.

The parallel is perfect, and if this does not foretoken and teach what we believe the Scriptures declare concerning the destruction of the psuche or soul within man by sin while yet in this world, and his consequent forfeiture of that higher angelic life in the world to come which is reserved for the righteous alone, then it is impossible for nature to teach us anything by analogy.—J. H. Fittingill, M. A.

Holding On.

An infidel passing through the shadows that hang around the close of life, and finding himself adrift amid the dark surges of doubt and uncertainty, without anchorage or harbor in view, was urged by his sceptical friends to "hold on." He answered: I have no objection to holding on, but will you tell me what to hold on by? Here is a question which men do well to consider before they reach the closing scene. If they are to hold on, what are they to hold on by? Where is their trust? Where is their confidence? What certainty have they as they go down into the shadows? Surely a man who comes to his dying hour needs something better than infidelity can give him; he needs the guiding hand of him who is the resurrection and the life, who has conquered death and triumphed over the grave, and who is able to bring us safely off at last. He needs that hope which is "as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."

Colonel John Hannah recently died at Sand Mountain, Ala., aged 136. The Knoxville (Tenn.) Tribune says that the old man fought with Washington in the French and Indian war, and knew Patrick Henry when he was a barefoot boy in Virginia.

POETRY.

"They Shall Inherit the Land Forever."

There comes a day of holy beauty, bringing
To earth the promised rest and peace;
When in the wilds sweet flowers are springing,
When strife shall cease.

No more as wanderers, alone, forsaken,
Shall God's accepted people roam:
No more by vengeful conquering foes o'ertaken—
They rest at home.

Forever shall they dwell in joy and gladness,
Jehovah's word their refuge and their stay;
No voice of weeping, not a shade of sadness
Falls on the day.

Like as a tender flower puts forth its blossoms
When the returning quickening spring is near;
So will Israel bud and blossom in beauty
When Christ appears.

Lift up thy voice, Jerusalem, in songs eternal;
Thy robes of mourning shall be worn no more;
Thy morn shall dawn in glories bright and vernal
When sorrow's o'er.

Ages shall pass, and still the glories shining
Shall brighten earth's remotest land and sea;
Death reigns no more his sceptre dread, resigning
To blest eternity.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution: It has been some time since you had a letter from me; yet I have been striving in my feeble way to make my voice heard in the grand cause of truth. I visited Kentucky, this spring and spoke for the brethren. That God may cause the words spoken to bear fruit, I humbly pray. As soon as I can I will send in the names of some persons here who are desirous of taking the paper but have not the means. My own means are limited but I shall use every endeavor to forward on the cause. That you and the able corps of correspondents may be spared for your useful work, is the sincere hope of yours in the faith. W. J. CROCKETT.

Blythe, Ga., Va.

Editor Restitution:—I have been aware for sometime that my subscription was due and have had the necessary two dollars in currency, but wished to send a small offering, consequently have waited to get the greenbacks, and, as yet, have not got it; will have to defer to another time. You, perhaps, are aware that paper money is scarce in small towns in this state, and there is no money order post-office here. We are all alone here. There are some Christadelphians about here who appear about as intolerant as Babylon, also some Seventh Day Adventists, which does not satisfy the Bible student of twenty-five years standing. Would be much pleased to find some of the One Faith and One Hope of our calling who would not be too good to call us brother or sister. Of course there are some scattered about, but, I have, so far, failed to find any organization of them who are not too far advanced in knowledge to preach what our Lord and Master was sent to preach, viz.: The kingdom of God. J. W. SUTTON.

Editor Restitution:—On first days of this month I delivered six discourses at Good Hope, about six miles south of Paris, and six, about the same distance north of Marshal, at all of which I had good congregations and attention, though but one addition. This was a lady whom I immersed into the Christ. The brethren and sisters meet alternately at Good Hope and at a school house near Brother Myers'. They ought, with the aid from the world which they can get, to build a house for worship. I got up a subscription whilst there, and, in a little time, got over one hundred and fifty dollars subscribed. Whether they will build it or not, is uncertain, though they could do it easily. For about eight years, occasionally, I have preached in that neighborhood. As long as I was able to ride that distance in a buggy, I furnished my own team and preached gratuitously. Since my age forbids that, and there is a railroad leading near there, I only allow them to pay my railroad fare. Whilst there, I told the brethren that, if they would build a house according to the terms of the subscription, I would give them twenty-five dollars and preach quarterly for them for one year at my own charges. My age and business forbid that I should go from home more; but, if they will fulfill their engagements for a house, I will fulfill mine, if I live. Otherwise, I think, at my age and surroundings, my public ministry, only near home, is at an end. May the good Lord preserve us unto his kingdom.

BOSTON, Mass. May 30. The Herald will to-morrow publish the following special from Island Pond, Vt.: The entire school district known as the Jacobs Mill district, at Newark, ten miles from here, numbering twenty children, drank water from a brook poisoned by the carcasses of dead horses and sheep; also potato tops upon which paris green had been used, they being thrown into the brook. Seventeen children were taken down, and eleven are dead. The others cannot live. Edward Morse lost two, F. Simpson one, L. Wilson one, Mr. Park one, John Cole one, and John Aldrich five, his entire family of children. Mrs. Aldrich is hopelessly insane. The children suffered untold agonies, and after death the bodies became putrid, and required immediate burial. Work has been suspended and great excitement prevails.

LONDON, May 30. A dispatch from Simla says the treaty of peace between Great Britain and Afghanistan was ratified to-day. A salute of thirty-one guns was fired in honor of the event.

The eruption of Mount Etna increases in force. The quantity of ashes thrown out is somewhat less, but the volume of vapor has greatly increased in density. On Wednesday night a number of brilliant balls of fire were thrown to a great height, and burst aloft like rockets, emitting a fiery shower. A stream of lava is flowing apparently in the direction of the town of Randazzo, but the exact line has not been verified. On Wednesday night loud reports like the rolling of artillery were heard.

CATANIA, May 30. Fresh craters have opened in Mount Etna, endangering Bianca Villa, Randazzo, and Castiglione. Clouds of ashes overhang Piedmonte, which is almost totally dark.

ROME, May 30. The latest advices from Randazzo report that craters have formed on two slopes of Mount Etna, and a double eruption is proceeding. The Acl Reale and Catania road is blocked, and much damage has been done.

LONDON, June 1.—Count Koskull, the Czar's most intimate friend, was murdered last night on the outskirts of St. Petersburg.

LONDON, May 30.—A telegram to the Western Morning News of Plymouth from its Martinburg correspondent, dated May 14, says: "There is exciting news from the Tugela frontier, near Helpmakaar. On the 11th of May, a great battle took place at a point between Thringpost and Sanhwalla. A powerful Zulu chief, named Matcons, with all his people numbering some thousands, had resolved to surrender to the British. He was joined by Dabalmanzi, Cetywayo's brother, who commanded the Zulus at Gingiblovo and the remnant of that army, its chiefs having kept away from Cetywayo since their defeat through fear. When nearing Thringpost they were unexpectedly intercepted by a powerful force, supposed to be commanded by Cetywayo, coming from the northward. A fearful conflict ensued, resulting in a great slaughter of the Zulus who wished to surrender, and they were dispersed and driven back. Matcons escaped. It is reported that Dabalmanzi was killed. King Cetywayo, elated with his success, and apparently learning that Lord Chelmsford's columns have made a forward movement, has summoned all his followers and taken a strong position at the fork of the White Umvelosi, at its junction with the Black Umvelosi. At his back are some of the highest known mountains of Zululand, densely wooded at the base. The country in front is swampy. Here the King evidently awaits the British. The native scouts say that he has declared he will never surrender. He is believed to have collected all his available forces, and no raids into Natal are now feared. A bridge across the Tugela is now available for light transport. Col. Pearson, who has been suffering from fever, is now better. Much sickness from sunstroke prevails. The Boers in the Transvaal are quieting down.

QUINCY, Ill., May 31.—A tornado struck Kirksville, Mo., about 11 o'clock last night. Six or eight residences were blown down, and a number of people badly injured, Mr. John Watson, attorney, is severely injured. His entire family was buried in the ruins. The fine residence of Mr. Harris was demolished. How much damage was done in the surrounding country is not yet known.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 31.—An Atchison (Kan.) dispatch says a terrible wind and rain storm visited Frankfort, Marshall county, Kan., at 6 o'clock last evening, which lasted over two hours. F. B. Taylor's warehouse was torn to pieces, and several small houses, stores and stables were more or less damaged. The houses of Messrs. Fox, Caesar and Vaughn, three miles from town, were blown down, and the inmates considerably injured. They are now here receiving medical treatment. Fox's house and contents were blown into the river.

A messenger just in from Irving, in the same county, says the storm at that point blew down sixteen houses, killed eight persons, wounded about twenty-five, and several are missing.

The residences of James Warden, Mr. Armstrong, J. Williams, Mr. Thompson, and twelve others, the names of the owners not given, were totally demolished. The Presbyterian church, the public school building, and the Irving elevator were completely destroyed. The east span of the railroad bridge crossing the Blue river was blown down.

A committee with funds, provisions and lumber left Atchison on the Central Branch Railroad this afternoon to supply the wants of the sufferers, and another committee is soliciting additional aid.

The woman is the more vigorous of the two, but both are obliged to keep their beds most of the time.

The Grand Canon of the Arkansas is nine miles in length, being the narrow winding way of that river through granite, the walls rising in many places to the height of 2,600 feet. This rock-bound river pathway was discovered by the Spanish missionaries as early as 1542. From that time it is not known that any animal life passed through it until the summer of 1870. Last week a train of cars on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad made the passage. Along the palisade that forms the northern boundary of the gorge, and about ten feet above the boiling waters, the engineer has carved a roadbed.

In making some excavations to widen the bed of the Tiber, the discovery has been made, in the garden of the Farnesina Palace, of an extremely elegant chamber which once formed part of a sumptuous habitation of the early times of imperial Rome. The ceiling is of the most beautiful stucco, with figures and ornaments in relief in an excellent state of preservation. The walls are painted in the Pompeiian style. Some of the figures have very graceful features and profiles, resembling by their delicacy the celebrated lekithoi of Attica. In the diggings in the Forum the bases of statues with inscriptions of the imperial epoch have been found.

Mlle. Adelaide Montgolfier, a daughter of the inventor of balloons, is still alive, aged eighty-nine years. She is possessed of a large fortune, and presented the Museum of the French Aeronautical Academy with a copy of the large medal executed by Houdon, and representing her father and uncle, who was associated with him in the invention of baloons. This medal was executed to commemorate that event. A movement will be got up in France for celebrating the centenary of that memorable event, which took place in June, 1783, in the vicinity of Lyons.

Apropos of the hidden treasures hereafter to be fished out of the Tiber, Ridolfo Lanciati, an eminent Roman archaeologist, writes to the London Athenæum: "I have often thought and written that the existence of objects of value in the bed of the river was not probable, because either they must have sunk to an enormous depth through the light mud of the bottom, or been carried away by the violence of the stream. I am glad to confess my mistake; and state that the bed of the Tiber contains immense quantities of things of value, especially coin in regular strata, which begin from Pius IX.'s age and end with the flint implements of pre-historic times." At one point dredgers, operating over a small area and at a depth of only twelve feet under the surface of the water, have recently brought to light an immense stock of coins and other curiosities.

Mountain Shepherds in South France have had 1031 Scriptures and 1600 tracts and religious almanacs circulated among them in 1878. This mission work was commenced by Miss Esther Beamish in the spring of 1877. While visiting the South of France for health she noticed a constant succession of flocks of goats and sheep traveling to the South. Each flock was tended by three shepherds, and was accompanied by a donkey, bearing all the household necessaries for a sojourn of four months in the rough huts erected on the mountain pastures. Beginning with the low plateau on St. John's Day (the patron saint of shepherds), the flocks gradually ascend the mountains from slope to slope, as the great snows melted, until they reach the highest peaks. One shepherd in each flock generally comes down every three weeks through the summer to the valleys, to sell cheeses and to buy provisions. Miss Beamish obtained for the three summer months from the London and the Paris Bible Societies a grant of Bibles and two colporteurs, who were stationed at the foot of the mountains, at places through which hundreds of flocks pass annually, and from which many intersecting valleys radiate.

One party of shepherds subsequently said, "They were no longer afraid of Protestantism; that the Protestants gave them the Bible and books which taught them that there was salvation in Christ the Lord, and in no other." Prayer should be offered that the Scriptures scattered throughout the mountains during the summer may yield a fruitful harvest in thousands of households in the plains to which the shepherds return in the winter. The whole cost of the work in 1878 was less than 3Gl. ($175). The mission will be recommenced this spring.

The Focus of prophetic lines of calculation in the years 1881-6 is engaging the attention of students of the unfulfilled prophecy. It is remarkable that the same period is also the subject of much interest to astronomers and students of the physical sciences.

A secular journal dated May 12th calls attention to the startling astronomical phenomena which will occur in 1881, and which it is believed will be the herald of others equally wonderful. In that year a phenomenon will be witnessed which it states has never before occurred in the history of the world. There will be a conjuncture of all the planets, which will be on the same meridian at the same time, and thus bring all the attracting influences to bear in the same direction at once. What the effect of these influences will be it is impossible to determine. Some idea may however be gathered from the data of the year 1862, when only one planet—Jupiter—was in close proximity to the sun. At that time strange perturbations were noticed by astronomers in the centre of our system, and meteorological and electrical phenomena of an unprecedented character were observed in our world, as the result of the changes effected on the sun. What then must be the effect of the combination of heavenly forces? On this point men of science are unable to furnish information, but it cannot be disputed that strange agitations of nature may be expected.

What reader of prophecy can doubt that in these forecasts of science there is confirmation of the conclusions arrived at by devout students of Holy Writ who have sought Divine Guidance in their studies, nor how, at this time more than ever, it becomes us to remember our Savior's injunction, "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

DIED.

LOWE—May 20, 1879, at Fruitport, Mich., of Dropsy, Bro. James Lowe, aged sixty-six years.

Brother Lowe was born in England and many years since was baptized there for the remission of sins. For several years past he had been learning more of the gospel of the kingdom and striving to obey that gospel, not to be ashamed to lay aside every weight and the sin that did so easily beset, and run with patience the Christian race. We trust that his companion, who is a full believer in the Abrahamic gospel, and his sons, who have tenderly ministered unto him in his sickness, will walk in the narrow way that leads to eternal life, and be saved to the morning of the resurrection. A discourse from 1 Thess. iv. 17, was preached by the writer to a large congregation. E. HOYT.

SMITH—At Jamestown, Mich., April 25, 1879, of Heart disease, Sister Julia Smith, aged sixty-seven years.

Sister Smith with her husband united with the Baptist church many years ago in the state of Ohio. For more than twenty years she has been a consistent member of the church of God in Jamestown. She, with her husband and family, were among the first in that place to embrace the gospel hope of the soon coming Savior. This blissful hope has been her comfort through years of sickness and in the the trying hour of death. The husband and children, while they mourn the loss of an affectionate wife and mother, "sorrow not as others who have no hope." A large congregation was addressed by the writer from 1 Thess. iv. 13.

"Break from his chosen Heavenly home,
Attend, O earth, his sovereign word,
Restore thy trust; a glorious form
Shall then arise to meet the Lord."
"And so shall we ever be with the Lord." Paul.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

There will be a conference at Dixon, Ill., to commence June 20, 1879, at 2:30 o'clock, p. m., and will continue over Sunday, composed of northern Ill. and southern Wis. A general invitation is extended to all who wish to attend. "Come, brethren, come out to meeting and see each other once more and talk about the things of the kingdom once more, and encourage each other to continue in the good work and gain the things promised to the faithful ones. Dixon is on the Illinois Central and the Northwestern railroads. Those coming by rail will inquire for John Anderson or Julius Anderson and they will be cared for.

By order of conference.
J. S. ARBUTH.

GENERAL MEETING.

The quarterly meeting of the Indiana Conference is appointed to be held at the Antioch meeting house, six miles south of Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind., commencing Friday, June 6th, at 10 a. m., and continuing over the following Sunday. Persons coming on the cars from the south will get off at Argos, and those from the north, east and west, will get off at Plymouth, from which places there will be conveyances to the meeting. A general attendance of the household of faith is cordially solicited. In behalf of the brethren. A. A. C.

The Lord willing I shall spend the month of May in Frederick county, Md., and will preach at the following places: Mount Zion, Walkerville, Highland, and Catoctin Furnace. One of the above mentioned meetings to take the place of our quarterly meeting as may be agreed upon by the brethren and friends of that locality. Bro. John D. Good will be with me. N. J. MORGAN.

The Lord willing the semi-annual meeting of the Christian Association will be held at New Hartford, Butler county, Iowa, in connection with the tent meeting to be held there, commencing June 19th and holding over the second Sunday. We are informed brother H. V. Reed has promised to be there a general invitation is extended to all who love the appearing of our Lord to be present, and it is hoped by the order of the board that all will come prepared to provide for themselves and that the brethren in the immediate neighborhood of the meeting may not be overburdened.

POETRY.

Thoughts on Death.

W. J. CROCKETT.

Can earth boast lasting bloom?
Can loves sweet tender ties
Prevent death's noisome gloom?
Or check the rising sigh?

Can human power avail
Upon the graves' dark brink?
Do not the mightiest grow pale
And cringe and shrink?

Ah, yes, man's actions tell
He fears the silent tomb,
And shudders when the dismal knell
Sounds forth his doom.

And is there, then, no balm
To soothe the dreadful thought
That life's but a deceitful calm
With death and darkness fraught?

Yes, mortal, turn thine eyes
To Calvary's sacred cross,
There hung the glorious sacrifice
To save the lost.

There flowed the crimson tide
That cleanses all thy stain.
And they who in Christ's love abide
Shall live again.

Oh, solace for our grief,
Why should death make us weep?
His cruel away is brief;
'T is but a sleep.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Brethren of Christ.

For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren. Heb. ii. 11.

This portion of the word is of a highly important character, and of great concern to us, for it clearly reveals our relationship to the law of the highest. It is vastly important that we understand from the word of God what is written concerning the calling, character and relation to the world, of the individuals that sustain so close a relationship as is implied by the brethren of Christ, so that we can compare our character and relation to the world, with what is written concerning the same in the word of God, and see whether we are able to identify ourselves with the inspired portrait of the character of those who shall finally be reckoned the brethren of Christ, the Son of the living God.

In the first place let us consider the calling of the brethren, for the Scriptures certainly teach very emphatically that they are a called people.

Who is it that calls them? for if they are called, some one must call them. We will refer to the word and see if we can find who it is that calls, and how they are called. "Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called." Rom. viii. 30. "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ before the world began. 2 Tim. i. 9.

How does God call? Let Paul answer: "Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2 Thess. ii. 14. Then God calls by the gospel. What is the gospel? It is the voice of God by Jesus Christ proclaiming glad tidings of a coming kingdom. God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, wherefore he saith, to-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your heart. Heb. Jesus called by the gospel when he was on the earth, and then he gave the commission to his disciples, and so the calling goes on through the long dark night until the present time, and will go on until the fulness of the gentiles are come in. "My sheep hear my voice and I know them, and they follow me and I give unto them eternal life." John x. 27. The sheep are the same as brethren.

Now, then, we know who calls, and how the call is given, and who it is that hears.

We will now notice what is meant by following Jesus as the Good Shepherd who giveth his life for the sheep, for it is said that his sheep follow him, and if they follow him they must pass through the same road that he passed; and a description of the follower of Jesus will also describe the character of the brethren. Well, we cannot follow Jesus in repentance, for he knew no sin, but we can follow him in immersion, and in reality this is the first step that can be taken in following Jesus. We say on the authority of the word, that a birth of water and spirit is essential to having part in the first resurrection, and we also believe that all the brethren will be drawn by the Lord, and obey from the heart the form of sound doctrine and come in possession of the spirit of truth without which we can never rise from among the dead.

Well, Jesus after he was baptized was tempted of the devil, and must the brethren who follow Jesus, follow him in temptation? Yes; it is necessary that we be tempted, and that is what the devil is for, to tempt the children of God. He tempted Jesus and shall he not tempt us. My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptation, knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope. So, then, temptations are necessary, so that our faith may be tried and patience wrought out in us. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life.

What is the reason the devil does not succeed in his designs in tempting the children of God? Simply because God who calleth us is faithful and will not suffer us to be tempted above what we are able to bear; but will with the temptation make a way to escape that we may be able to bear it.

Thus, we see, if we would follow Jesus the Good Shepherd, we must be tempted as he was tempted, and we must also resist temptation, as he resisted. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you."

Well, brethren, if we endure the temptations that befall us, we shall be able to identify ourselves with the character of the holy brethren as recorded in the word of God. What is in store for all who continue with Jesus in temptation? Read Luke xxii. 28-30.

Let us now consider the relation of the brethren to each other; and in the the first place I would say that the many brethren that compose the body of Christ are like Christ in worldly circumstances. "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called." "Hearken my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him." 1 Cor. i. 26; Isa. ii. 5. Jesus was very poor and humble when on the earth. "The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the son of man hath not where to lay his head." "Though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich." As he is, so should we be in this world.

Thus, we see, it is God's choice to call the poor of this age. But mark! they are rich in faith; that is, they believe all the Lord hath spoken. Of course there are a few exceptions to this rule, for some rich men are called; but there is a charge for them to keep, found in 1 Tim. vi. 17. But the generality of the called of God, are in poor and humble circumstances, as the Scriptures testify.

Brethren, let us now consider our love to each other. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light." "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." "And this is the message that ye love one another, even the message that we heard from the beginning."

Thus, if we are in the marvelous light of the glorious gospel of Christ, we are loving one another; if not we are in darkness even until now. Then far be it from us who profess to be in the light of God by which the glorious doctrine of immortality is revealed; far be it from us to hate the brethren of Christ.

Who is my brother in Christ? "He that doeth the will of my Father in heaven the same is my sister and brother," so said the first-born among many brethren. Jesus, in speaking of his brethren, says, "for I was an hungered and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." Matt. xxv. 36.

Now, if what we have said concerning the poor circumstances of the called of God, be true, it is very easy to understand these striking characteristics of poverty and affliction which describe the circumstances of the majority of the called of God; and these characteristics of poverty are synonomous with the tribulations and sufferings through which we must enter into the kingdom of God. "And if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him." And if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him." We notice, also, that some were able to feed the hungry, and clothe the naked, and entertain the the stranger, and minister to the sick and prisoner, which illustrates the love that exists among the real brethren of Christ. "Hereby perceive we the love of God because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye gave them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?" 1 John iii. 16-18; James ii. 14-17.

Thus, we have in these two statements of the apostles, a sample of faith which worketh by love, a pure holy love, the first fruit of the holy spirit; a love far different from the sectarian love of the present day, that loves only its creed adherents. This love which is shed abroad in the hearts of believers by the Holy Spirit which is given unto them, is found only in one sect, and that sect was everywhere spoken against in apostolic times. Acts xxviii. 22. And this sect is everywhere spoken against, to-day. I candidly ask the question, brethren, with all sincerity, can a man be a brother of the Lord Jesus to-day, and not be hated by the world? Has human nature changed, or has the word of God ceased to be true since Christ and his Apostles ended their ministry? "Marvel not my brethren, if the world hate you, we know that it hated him (Christ) before it hated you." "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." John xv. 19. Are not the disciples of Jesus hated by the world to-day, as they were 1800 years ago?

But, where shall we go to find the world to-day? The civilized world is called the Christian world to-day. So, then, if this be true, there is no world to hate the brethren of Christ. But, may it not be a mistake to call the civilized world "Christian?" Then, we have Christian nations, and all these nations fully equipped for war, and ready to slay each other. Whereas, we read in the Book of God of only one Christian nation composed of individuals that must not fight, nor "resist evil," and when "smitten on one cheek to turn the other also;" "for they that take the sword, shall perish by the sword." Thus, if the word of God be true, it is a great mistake to call the nations "Christian."

Then, again, the so-called Christian world is divided into three great churches, the Greek, the Catholic and Protestant; and the Protestant is divided into a great many more churches. Yet, on the authority of the Book of truth, none of these churches is "the church of the living God, the pillar and the ground of the truth." Let there be no schism in the body, the "church." Where, then, shall we find "the church," the body of Christ? They are in the world, not among all churches, but among all nations; and, furthermore, they are in Christ, and also in the doctrine of Christ.

This may sound strange to some, that one cannot be in Christ without being in his doctrine. Well, let us hear how the Word reads: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him Godspeed." 2 John x. 11. Now, in the face of this statement, who will say doctrine is not essential to salvation? "But, God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." Rom. vi. 17. Thus, according to this, doctrine is something to be obeyed; for, by the obedience of one, shall many be made righteous."

Now, then, if one cannot be saved and made righteous, or be a brother of Christ, without obedience to his doctrine, it is plain doctrine is to be obeyed in order to become a brother of Christ, or else we fail to understand the teaching of the word. And this brings us to the line that divides the brethren of Christ from the world. The one class obey the doctrine of Christ, the other class obey the doctrines of devils. The meaning of doctrine is, teaching, precept, principle, advice, counsel, in short, the whole word of God; for the word of God, and the doctrine of Christ are identical. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, hath both the Father and the Son." The man that rejects the word baptism, water immersion, rejects the word or counsel of God. The Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him (John). Luke vii. 30. And, what will be the end of him that rejects the word of God? They shall be destroyed from among the people. Acts iii. 23. "Everlasting destruction." May God keep us from rejecting his holy word. What did the people do, who did not reject the word of God? Then they that gladly received his word were baptized; and they continued steadfastly in the apostles doctrine. Acts ii. 41, 42.

Now, all can see where the brethren of Jesus stand, and where the world stands. What shall we say to these things? Shall we depart from the word of God because professedly Christian men reject the word of God, and say that they can go into the kingdom of God without being born of water? God forbid; rather "let God be true, though every man be a liar." We ought to obey God rather than man, for upon obedience to his word, depends our eternal salvation. Thus we see, that the relation of the brethren of Jesus to the world during the period of Satanic government is, that of enmity and isolation; "The friendship of the world, is enmity with God." "In the world ye shall have tribulation." The church and the world are antagonistic to each other. There is enmity between the woman's seed and the serpent's seed. "He that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now." You cannot wed the true church with the world; you might as well expect oil to mix and remain with water, as for the brethren of Jesus to love and fellowship this present evil world. "What communion hath light with darkness, or Christ with Belial?" "If any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him." "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing." "Evil communications corrupt good manners." The world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. And what a striking similitude there is here between Jesus and his brethren. "He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." Though we are not known by the world, yet "God knoweth them that are his," and Jesus knows his sheep, and they follow him. The followers of Jesus are looked upon by the world as a worthless set of men, despised and rejected, and made the object of ridicule and contempt, just as Jesus was.

The very reason why there is very little persecution in the present time is, because it is seldom that the pure, unadulterated word of Jesus is proclaimed. But the time is not far distant when the so-called Christian world will be arrayed in hostility against the little flock of truth-keepers who will retain the testimony of Jesus, and love not their lives unto death. God is going to send "strong delusion upon the world, that they (the professed church) should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12. "He that believeth not shall be damned." The agency by which this strong delusion will be brought about, is presented in the thirteenth chapter of Revelations, where it is said, all that dwell on the earth shall worship him; that includes the nations of the earth, now called Christian nations. But, there is one class that will not worship him, and that class are the true worshippers that will understand their God, and whose names are written in the Book of Life; and, of course, they will be killed as their brethren were, that would not worship according to the traditions of men.

But, the brethren of Jesus will finally triumph. The world killed Jesus, but he lives to-day, and because he lives, the brethren shall live also. The world may persecute and kill with the sword, and kindle the faggot fires around the saints of the Most Holy, yet the word of Jesus says: "Fear not them which kill the body, but can not kill the soul," for the life will then be hid with Christ in God. And as Jesus came forth from the dead vitalized by the Spirit of God and the power of an endless life, and became the first born among many brethren, so will the brethren whose blood has satiated the thirst of the Roman harlot, and whose ashes have been scattered to the four winds of heaven in order to frustrate the resurrection hope, spring into immortal being, bearing his glorified image, when he appears to avenge his own elect. Then let the world scoff and ridicule, and persecute, and if the will of the Lord be so, put to death; they cannot obliterate the future immortality that is sure and certain, and which will only be the more highly appreciated by the knowledge of the suffering and sinful contrast of this mortal life through which we must pass if we would enter the portals of the heavenly kingdom and reign with the once crucified, but now exalted son of God: "For these light afflictions which are but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Thus the sufferings of the saints will enhance the glory of the future; for, without the experimental knowledge of suffering, sin and death, we should have no appreciation of the bliss and ecstacy, holiness and immortality that is to be revealed in us. If we would follow Jesus, we must follow him whithersoever he goeth. The Revelator beheld the Israelitish first-fruits of the general assembly and church of the first-born standing on Mount Zion, and the testimony was: "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." "For, except a man deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me, he cannot be my disciple." And, if we would follow Christ, we must suffer. If, when we do well, and suffer for it, we take it fraternally, this is acceptable with God. "For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow in his steps." 1 Pet. ii. 21.

Such is the position of the brethren of Jesus in this wicked world, out of which they have been chosen. Pilgrims and strangers on the earth, dwelling in the land of promise as in a strange country. I tell you the brethren of Jesus are not interested and engaged in building fine houses and desiring to dwell in elegant and decorated mansions, and arraying themselves in costly apparel, and embellishing their persons with jewelry of corruptible gold and silver. Oh, no, far from this; they are content with such things as they have, and by faith are persuaded that, in heaven they have a better and enduring substance that will outrival all the glittering splendors of earth, and shall remain eternally unblemished by the rust and decay of time. The substance of things hoped for are about to be revealed, the dark night of sin and suffering is far, very far spent; the glorious morn of heavenly glory is about to break upon the world, and the little flock that have kept the testimony of Jesus, and shared with him in sufferings and temptations, are going to take the kingdom that was prepared for them from the foundations of the world, and will be associated with Christ in the work of restitution that shall finally perfect forever the saved nations of the renovated earth. Then will the holy prophets, apostles and saints, be eyewitnesses of the glorious events that they long ago foretold, believed, and for the faith in which they once suffered and were put to death. Abraham, the recipient of the promises, will behold the fulfillment of the promise, that in his seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. The resurrected church, (the royal seed) will attest its fulfillment; the renovated nation of Israel, and through them the universal conversion of all nations, will attest the farther and universal fulfillment of the God-given promise, "in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." The glorious verification of eternal truth approaches; the sheep have nearly all heard the voice of Jesus; the times of the Gentiles are kneiling to a close; the day star of the restitution is about to arise. Be ye also ready and watch unto prayer.

Death.

We have wondered a thousand times why men eminent for both learning and piety should pass encomiums on death. There is not in all the Bible a sentiment or word connected with the subject of death that justifies such a course. From the very beginning of Genesis to the very end of Revelation, whenever and wherever death is spoken of, it is always mentioned as the enemy (not the friend) of our race. It is the terrible yet just, judgment on man for disobedience: "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Gen. ii. 17. "The end of those things is death." Rom. vi. 21. The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. "Sin when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Jas. i. 15. Christ, voluntarily came under the curse of the law, "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." Heb. ii. 14. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. xv. 26. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Rom. v. 12. These texts present death fairly to the mind of the reader as our enemy; and in no sense, nor under any circumstances whatever can it be justly said death is our friend. Death kills indiscriminately, and without the least show of mercy, all who by sin are placed under his power; and were there no antidote, the killing would simply be eternal both in its nature and duration. Life, in no form, nor at any time, would come again after death. But our rejoicing before God is, he hath prepared an antidote, in the resurrection. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22. "Jesus saith unto her, thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live (again.) John xi. 23-25. "The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth." John v. 28-29. Jesus says, "I am the resurrection and the life." And herein lies the crowning excellence of our hope as believers. Christ, the Resurrection; Christ, the Life. Death, by God's appointment, destroys all men. Christ, by his divine power, brings all to life again. In bringing death into the world, the devil acted a conspicuous part. In bringing the dead up again from the enemy's land, Christ is the glorious actor. No future life, only through the resurrection; and no resurrection, only through the power of Jesus Christ, seems to be the doctrine of the Apostles.

On the occasions of preaching funeral sermons, it is announced from the sacred desk ten times, perhaps, that death takes good men to heaven, where it is once said that the resurrection will bring them up from their graves. Thus we rob Christ of the glory due to him, and give it to the devil. If any doubt this, we simply say "to the law, and to the testimony." Death places all its victims in the grave; none in heaven. "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, (and) is not ascended into the heavens." Acts ii. 29-34. We cannot understand why, as an orthodox Christian, we must believe that dead men, whom the Bible asserts are both dead and buried, are now actually alive and in heaven. But the glorious and heaven-honoring doctrine of the resurrection, for preaching which the Apostles suffered more persecutions than for any other sentiments uttered by them, will make all right. "For this we say unto you by the word Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them that are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the arch-angel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. iv. 15, 16. Now, if this Scripture teaches anything, it simply teaches that the general judgment will find millions sleeping the sleep of death, and that the mighty power of God will be most gloriously displayed in their triumphant and glorious resurrection from the dead. Then will the countless millions of the redeemed be satisfied, in the language of David, when they awake in his likeness. And then will they sing the song, "O death, where is thy sting; O grave, where is thy victory."

We give to death credit for nothing but killing men. Right there his power ends. In this respect he is justly styled the King of Terrors. We give to our glorious Redeemer all the honor and glory of our resurrection from the dead. If there be no resurrection "then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. xv. 18. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." 20th verse.

"We may sleep but not forever;
There will be a glorious dawn.
We shall meet to part, no never,
At the resurrection morn."

Dean Stanley's Progress.

The Dean is quoted as saying recently:

"The most learned of all the living bishops of England [Dr. Lightfoot] has, with his characteristic moderation and erudition, proved beyond dispute, in a celebrated essay attached to his edition of 'St Paul's Epistle to the Philippians,' that the early constitution of the Apostolic churches of the first century was not that of a single bishop, but of a body of pastors indifferently styled bishops or presbyters, and that it was not till the very end of the apostolic age that the office which we now call Episcopacy gradually and slowly made its way in the churches of Asia Minor; that Presbytery was not a later growth out of Episcopacy, but that Episcopacy was a later growth out of Presbytery; that the office which the Apostles instituted was a kind of rule, not of bishops, but of presbyters; and that even down to the third century presbyters as well as bishops possessed the power of nominating and consecrating bishops."

Joy.

God delights in joy; and his desire for his people is that they should be trustful and joyful—and this both for their own sakes and for his glory. God needs vigorous workers, and he can only have these by bestowing on them a joy adequate to the greatness of the work. In joy the Apostles went forth to work for God, and they found that the joy of the Lord was their strength. It is joy then, not sorrow, that is our strength; and they that have done most for God, have been those who have had most joy in God

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

An Advent Rhyme.

See, my friends, the light is fading—
Light of a beclouded day;
Night of doubt our faith is shading,
Error leads the world away.
With the twilight
Comes the dawn of brighter day.

Watch! and ye shall see the morning,
With its purple and its gold;
Watch, in spite of scoff and scorning,
See the gates of day unfold.
Earth's deliverance
From the long-borne curse behold.

Wait, your watchful eyes upturning,
For the promised Advent sign;
While your lamps are brightly burning,
In your hearts its light shall shine,
And your being
Take a glorious form divine.

Softly, like a whisper falling
Only on attentive ear,
Comes a message, each one calling
In his presence to appear.
"Lo! the Bridegroom
Does not tarry; he is near."

Open stand the palace portals,
Out the blinding splendors leap;
Enter glorified immortals,
Ye your virgin souls who keep.
Heirs of all things,
Time's ripe harvest now ye reap.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Bride of the Great King.

Bro. Ira Forbes has written and quoted the salient Scriptures that relate to God's covenant relation with Isreal as this bride. In these texts the terms relating to husband and wife are employed to set forth the obligations that Israel has taken on them to serve the Lord. The marriage covenant embraces the most endearing terms known to that people, and these are employed to call forth the corresponding affections and services that Israel owed to their covenant God. As the loving wife should love her worthy husband, so Israel was bound by the highest motives of gratitude, and by a regard to their own welfare, to love and serve the Lord their God, who had chosen them, delivered them, fed them, brought them to the promised land, and exalted them above all people as to intelligence, wealth and assurance of unceasing favor.

But, as our our brother modestly asks for aid, if need be, to a further understanding of this great subject, allow me with like humility and discretion to add, that, with all that class of Scriptures that he quotes there is another class interapersed that raised the advanced believer to a loftier range of thought than that of Israel and Jerusalem, the temple and the altar, the sacrifice and the then officiating priesthood or king. For all these terms belonged to the then earthly plan of God's all comprehending purpose. They made up "the shadow of good things to come—the patterns of things in the heavens." Heb. ix. x. Hence, even Abraham, the friend of God, paid homage and tithes to an higher, a royal priesthood! David reverenced a lordship in the coming one superior to his own! Nay, Solomon said in all his glory "the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands!" Gen. xiv.; Psa. cx.; 1 Kings viii. 27; Acts vii. 4, 8, 49; Heb. i. to 10.

Thus it was known in Israel's palmiest days, that "the way of life was above to the wise, that they might depart from hell (sheol) beneath." The law to that nation was added because of transgression, till the seed should come—to whom it was evangelized—or to whom the promise was made. Gal. iii. 19.

This carries our minds beyond and above Israel, the mediation of Moses, the Aronic priesthood, or the Davidic dynasty in Jerusalem that then was. This profound fact is thus embraced in the primal structure of the gospel preached to Abraham, and foreshadowed in the entire temple service. The prophetic mediator, Moses, the typical priesthood, Aaron, and the royal house of David, identified with Jerusalem, were but "patterns of things heavenly." Heb. ix. 23. They were stages of the still unfolding glories of the one gospel of the blessed God, that culminates in the city that hath foundations whose builder and (organizing) ruler is God. Heb. xi. 10; Rev. xxi. From such solid ground I think:

1. That I should not go back to a figure of speech used of any part of the pattern, in order to fill out the crowning glory of the future. Jerusalem will be rebuilt on her own heap, (hill, Psa. lxviii. 15-16.) and justify all the language pertaining thereto, of course.

2. But our shortsightedness that sees but parts of His ways, should leave to God all that is too high for us to harmonize.

3. The pattern shown to Moses in the Mount—as erected in the tabernacle of the Wilderness—was not the magnificent and gorgeous temple in Jerusalem, the metropolis of Isreal? Nay, more, the city of Solomon was not to be compared to the transfiguration of the glorified Jesus, with Moses and Elijah in glory, and the honored apostles who found it "good to be" there—given to aid our apprehension of the kingdom to come! Hence I dare not anchor back into the historic Jerusalem in bondage, but rather wait on God to open my understanding of things heavenly.

4. The loftier plane of divine promise that shone out from all the mountain peaks about Jerusalem's best estate, remains to be realized. So in her restoration, through the millennial age especially, the divine, excelling glory will abide above as of old—from everlasting! The divinity is never to be absorbed, and so let down into humanity, nor the heavenly things themselves become exhausted in any imagined exaltation of the earthly Jerusalem! No! No! God has a time and an order for the infinite and everlasting amplitude of all the length and breadth and depth and height of his revelation, that passeth our present knowledge. Amen.

There is to be new heaven as well as new earth. "The angels of God will ascend and descend." John i. 51. The Lord shall be "a great king over all the earth. God hath gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet! Sing praises unto God, sing praises unto our king." Psa. xlvii. He is the repairer of the breach between earth and heaven.

5. The bride of Christ is the church. St. Paul says of the man who leaves father and mother to be one with his wife—"this is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church." Eph. v. 32; Rev. xix. 7-8. Of course this cannot apply to the city of Jerusalem restored. Its import is plain.

6. Ritualism in all its grades of apostasy from Christ anchors back of the gospel, and builds up again after the pattern, that which has been abolished. But faith looks up, and hope anchors within the veil, whence Jesus, the coming one—the Melchizedek Priest—will come to gather and glorify all who are to constitute his Bride, and verify to them every "jot and tittle" of his heavenly things.

7. To crown the whole we read that the kingdom—the right of the firstborn—was taken from Israel whose center is Jerusalem, and is given to those "who are the called, and the chosen, and the faithful." This is irreversible. Matt. xxi. 32; Heb. xii. 23; Rev. xvii. 14.

The Kingdom of God.

Then said Jesus unto them: therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old. Matt. xiii. 52.

In this chapter is recorded a number of parables, all relating to the kingdom of God. It is not our purpose, at this time, to give an exposition in detail, but simply to call your attention to them and request a careful study of them, and their application to the kingdom of God; what the sum is to the solar system, to give light, life and animation—such is the kingdom of God, the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and his coming again in glory in God's glorious scheme of man's redemption. Did Christ mean what he said, "But seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all things shall be added unto you?"

First, seek to get a correct understanding of what constitutes the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus the Christ.

Second, seek to get a correct faith and render a willing obedience, having the heart deeply imbued with the heavenly, Holy Spirit that dwelt so richly in Jesus and his holy apostles.

The prominent points of interest to the student of the Word of God in relation to the kingdom: First, what constitutes a kingdom? Where is it located? When will it be set up? How many, and who or what compose the elements that constitute the kingdom of God? These points are clearly defined in the Scriptures, and are essentially important in order to a correct understanding of the kingdom of God.

But, to our subject, and what is contained in the text. Every scribe well instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old. Every scribe; there are three definitions given by Webster: First, one who acts as secretary of any society or public meeting. Second, a teacher or an expounder of the law; a sect often referred to and coupled by our Savior with the Pharisees. Third, a term used by carpenters in fitting one piece of timber or wood to another. The second meaning is the one used in our text. We will look at it in the light of orthodoxy or modern theology and compare it with the Old and the New Testament Scriptures. We read that holy men of old wrote and spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. Did they go to a theological seminary and put themselves under the instruction of professors and teachers, and subscribe to a human creed or covenant, made in the interest of a sect or denomination, and bind themselves to bend the Scriptures to suit said creed? Nothing of this kind is once named in God's Book—the Bible.

Under the dispensations previous to the gospel age, God chose, or selected, suitable persons, and anointed them with holy oil, thus qualifying them to give utterance to the words of the Holy Spirit of God. Under the gospel age, or dispensation to the Gentiles, a change in God's economy, or arrangement, has been adopted, he sending his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, to introduce a new order of things. It was necessary that the head should be qualified, or set apart, and anointed for the work before him. This was accomplished under the approbation and sanction of the eternal Father at his baptism in the Jordon. "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Thus qualified, he chooses his cabinet. Who, and what were they? Did he go among the learned to make his selection? Beecher says he made a mistake. He should have gone to Athens. Say not thou to the angel of the Lord it was an error, for the sequel shows his choice to be a wise one. Immediately after his baptism, his anointing with Holy Spirit, and his fearful conflict with the tempter, he enters upon the work of preaching the gospel, or good news of the kingdom of God.

How unlike modern religionists, who must graduate from a theological seminary, (not that we would ever be heard to say one word against learning,) receive a call, settle over a church with a good salary, preach a smooth gospel, for the people love to have it so. Are such instructed unto the kingdom of heaven? Let us see; they will tell you the kingdom is in the heart, in the church and in the skies. Query: Can you get a King, the Lord Jesus Christ, his cabinet, the twelve apostles, Palestine, the territory of the kingdom, the Hebrew nation, as subjects with the escaped of the nations, the whole world as the dominion of the kingdom which is to be given to the people of the saints of the Most High to be governed by law, a synopsis of which is given in Christ's sermon on the mount into the heart? into the church? or up in the skies? "Which bringeth out of his treasury things new and old."

Here we enter a large field, quite too large for our dwarfed intellect and crimped capacity. We are at a loss where to begin, and just what to say. We way speak of the old and the new in the light of God's arrangement of the ages. In no sense, whatever, dare we go beyond divine revelation. In that but little is said. No one, we think, will object to a classification of the ages since the beginning of the world, as recorded by Moses in Genesis. It is called the antediluvian age, or age beyond the flood. It was governed by moral suasion, and utterly failed to bring the race of apostate Adam up to a high and holy standard in harmony with the divine mind. Men, made in the image of God, degenerated, waxed worse and worse till all flesh had corrupted his ways before God. So the word affirms Gen. vi. 12, 13. Tell us no more of governing or ruling the world or the race, while in mortal flesh and blood, by moral suasion, after such a fearful and total failure.

A careful comparison of the new with the old, the beginning with the ending of the first age of the world will be interesting and profitable. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, or, arranged the ages. The account given by Moses of bringing together the elements that compose the planet earth, and arranging them in their proper order, all moving in perfect harmony, governed by perfect and exact law, is a subject that may well engage our admiration and astonishment. Harmony, peace and infinite delight reigned supreme; "the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Man, the masterpiece of God's workmanship, created in God's image, was placed in Paradise—the garden of delight—with an helpmeet to till the ground, to multiply and replenish it—the earth. Can the human mind imagine, or conceive of, a more delightful condition to be in? This was the beginning of the age, or the new, if you please. Keep this delightful state of things before your minds, pass over the age of from 1000 to 1500 years; men yielded to temptation, ate the forbidden fruit, became a sinner, for sin is the transgression of law, so says Paul and John; went on from bad to worse, and in the short time named above, corrupted all his ways. The record says, "It repented God that he had made man," and he purposed to destroy all flesh in whom is the breath of life. Surely, an enemy hath done this. But a remnant was spared to begin another age and make another trial; with how much better results the record must show. Truly, if we judge from the prowess of men in the flesh to violate God's holy law, as at the beginning of the patriarchal age, we cannot hope for much improvement.

The first thing of note at the beginning of the new age, immediately after Noah and his family came out of the ark, was to erect, or build an altar, and offer sacrifices to the Lord. Here was a recognition or proof of Noah's faith in the God of the Bible. Heb. xi. 7. The next was God's covenant of promise, that he would not again destroy the world, or all flesh, by a flood of water; and, as a confirmation, or a token, he has set the beautiful rainbow in the clouds. We should have noticed what is contained in the fifth and sixth verses. In them is contained what is understood to be the death penalty. It is God's positive command to Noah, and is the first enjoined at the commencement of the new age, and we know of no Scripture teaching that contravenes or does away with this positive command of God.

The third item we notice is the sudden departure of the children of men from God's ways. It is contained in the eleventh chapter. It is a record of the building of the tower of Babel, and God's displeasure and punishment upon them for their temerity. There is much valuable information contained in the 9th, 10th and 11th chapters of Genesis, which we are compelled to pass over for want of room. It will be well to study them carefully in the light of the subject we have under consideration.

We now come to the call of Abraham, the father of the Hebrew nation, in which centers the burden of prophecy. Although the sacred historian does not fail to record the wicked doings of the children of men, and God's judgments upon the nations for their wickedness, it is not necessary to specify in detail. Follow the two converging lines down the stream of time from the call of Abraham to the close of the prophetic age, and note carefully the great and precious promises and the many inducements held out to them. If they would be obedient, they should be unto him a peculiar treasure above all people; that they should be the rulers and not the ruled in his kingdom. Note carefully the history of the Hebrew nation, and God's merciful, gracious and wonderful dealing with that people, down to the last king or prince, Zedekiah, that sat on Israel's throne. "Thou wicked and profane prince, thus saith the Lord God, remove the diadem and take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."

From a careful study of the Old with the New Testament for forty years, we fail to find any support for the belief that men in the flesh and blood state are capable of governing in harmony with the divine being. Notwithstanding the increasing light of each succeeding age from Adam to Christ, the sequel shows a perfect failure. Yet, notwithstanding, the conclusions we arrive at, we are strong in faith, and joyful in hope, that a glorious future awaits the righteous, and that he has not created the world in vain, but to be inhabited. There is a large amount of positive utterances of Holy Spirit through God's prophets in the Old Testament relating to the future of our world and the race of men. Nothing can be made more clear or plain than the fact that it will be by, or through, a kingdom composed of the elements, as we have stated, but made immortal by the spirit of holiness through a resurrection from the dead.

In our next we will compare the beginning with the ending, the old and the new, through gospel and the millennial ages, and try and bring out from God's treasure—the Scriptures—things both new and old.

"The Word—In the Beginning—Was God."

Editor Restitution:—Having been from home for some time, and since my return having been very busy, I have gotten somewhat behind in my reading of THE RESTITUTION. To-day I took up the number of March 12th and the first article that came under my eye was the one with the above heading, by Asa W. Button. I wish, with your permission, being an entire stranger, to give your readers a few thoughts on said article, as the writer solicits criticisms. I agree with him in taking exceptions to the teachings of theology in respect to Christ being "the eternal Son of God." But, where, he asks, "Where is the evidence of an eternally pre-existent Son?" I answer: Although there can be no evidence produced in favor of a pre-existent Son, there is plenty in favor of a pre-existent life.

There is this, also, underlying the whole article of Brother Button. There was no divinity in Jesus until he was anointed with the Holy Spirit at baptism. Or, the only way in which the Father dwelt in him was by his Spirit sent upon him at that time, for he quotes: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor;" (italics mine). In reply to this I quote from Luke i. 35, in the language of the angel Gabriel to Mary: "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore that holy thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Here is clearly the power of the Holy Spirit and of God even in the conception of Jesus. And he was holy from birth. He was not the eternal Son of God, but he was the eternal Logos—the eternal life. Brother B. sees very clearly that his article "puts a diminishing value on our Savior, and tends to lower him," or he would not have inserted that qualifying clause.

Jesus and the Scriptures as clearly teach the pre-existence of Christ, or a Savior, as they teach the eternal existence of God. Jesus himself says, "Before Abraham was, I am." John viii. 58. Brother B. will be as much compelled to explain away here the am as he was to explain away the "had" in the expression, "The glory which I had with thee before the world was." Again, Jesus says: "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending." Rev. i. 8. This shows that the am is co-existent with God.

Once more, "Not that any man hath seen the Father, save he which is of God, he hath seen the Father." Nowhere is it stated that Jesus had seen the Father while he was in the flesh, therefore we can come to no other conclusion but that he saw the Father before the "Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." Still another, "What and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before?" Who is this "Son of Man?" and where was he before he became the Son of Man? Truly, the divine Logos who was up with the Father before "he was made flesh." Paul says: "By him were all things created .... and he is before all things, and by him all things consist." Col. i. 16, 17. Here Christ is said not only to be "before all things," but that he also "created all things." If he were before all things, then he must have had a pre-existence of all things.

It is truth we are seeking. It is not for me to say how or what that existence was. I am content with the fact that there was such an existence.

In connection with Paul I give John's testimony—that "beloved disciple," who seems to have had a nearer and dearer connection with Jesus than any of the other apostles. Hear him. "For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness and show unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us." 1 John i. 2. If John does not say that Christ was the eternal Son of God, he says that he was the "eternal life which was with the Father." For it is not God who is spoken of here as "the eternal life," but the "word of life." If it is the truth that "God was in Christ," it is also the truth that the "word of life" was the "eternal life" that "was with the Father in the beginning." And John says that "the word was made flesh and dwelt among us." Therefore Christ is the "eternal life" which was with the Father from the beginning, for John says, "we have seen it." By the life which is eternal, which was manifested to the apostles, some understand that immortal life of blessedness which was brought to light and promised in the gospel to believers.

But, as that life is said to have been with the Father, it must mean, either the eternal life, or existence of the Father himself, or of some other person. Now, since the eternal existence of the Father could not be manifested to the apostles by revelation, which pre-supposes the existence of God, "the life which is eternal" must be that which the word, or Son, possessed with the Father before the world was; and which was manifested to the apostles at our Lord's baptism and transfiguration, when, by the voice from heaven, God declared him his beloved Son. It was manifested likewise by God's raising Jesus from the dead.

Iceland the region of intense natural cold, is full of religious warmth. The word of God is the text-book of the people. Every home has its Bible, not just as an ornament, not as the well-kept cherished marriage gift, nor because of some undefined superstitious feeling of reverence, but for daily use. In Iceland the Bible is constantly and faithfully read. As a consequence, Iceland is without a theatre or prison. There is no such office as sheriff. They own no cannon, and military drill is an unknown science.

It is estimated that 160,000,000 copies of the scriptures have been printed and circulated in the present century. The American Bible Society has printed 35,000,000 of this number, and the British and Foreign Society seventy-six

THE RESTITUTION.

A. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 11, 1879.

THE Quarterly Conference at Antioch was quite well attended by brethren and sisters from abroad. Very full audiences convened on Sunday. A fuller account hereafter.

CIRCUMSTANCES have delayed the paper for the current week a day or two. On Monday and Tuesday we were absent from home; this, and the length of one of our selections, has caused us to use but little space editorially.

COMMUNICATIONS on the non-resurrection of the ungodly, a future probation for those that have "sinned without law" and died without the knowledge of God or the gospel, and several other speculative topics, are distasteful to very many of our readers. We can not devote much more space to these themes either pro or con. We must devote our paper more to the practical questions of interest to the living in the present dispensation. What we must do to be saved is the question of questions.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Future Punishment.

There is a diversity of opinion on this subject. The two prevailing ones, however, are never-ending suffering and annihilation. As Universalists do not believe in either, and yet believe in punishment, I shall class the above two as opposites—extremes. The doctrine of Universalists embraces neither, and involves the repudiation or mystical interpretation of too much plain testimony for a sincere child of God to adopt; therefore we must look somewhere else for the truth. It seems to me the truth lies between these extremes, and partially embraces all three of the doctrines.

I do not adopt this view thinking to conciliate the differences of opinions. I am not one of that stamp. I shall stand out uncompromisingly for the truth regardless of the views of others, but I shall aim to do so in a Christain spirit, and shall respect the opinions of others as such.

Punishment, I believe, is for two reasons,—first, for the good of the creature, and secondly, for the security of the happiness of others. The doctrine of unending suffering is embraced in the former to this extent,—It lasts until the sinner reforms or is cut off. Forever is frequently used in this sense. The doctrine of a punishment by a guilty conscience is also embraced in the former to this extent,—If the physical punishment is effectual, it works sorrow of heart unto reformation. Annihilation is embraced in the latter.

Physical punishment does not always result in a reformation of our children; it will be so in God's dealings with mankind. There will be cases where the chastisements will not work a reformation, even when that time comes, in which they shall not suffer for the sins of others, and when they shall know, as our children know, what it is for. In these cases annihilation will be the result. Then annihilation is true? Yes. Then why is not the future punishment? It is a part of it to those who will not reform under the chastisements of the Lord Jesus. The annihilation of the willfully disobedient is necessary to the final and complete happiness of the righteous; for they cannot be completely happy where sin exists.

Is there any support in the Scriptures to the view of a future punishment other than death? I think there is. In Luke xii. 57, 58, we read: "And that servant who knew his Lord's will and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; but he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes." You will notice by the preceeding language, that these are unbelievers, and that all those servants who had once looked, but at this time were unprepared, were classed with them. Those servants who are prepared, are immediately placed in authority; so the text could not refer to them. The text does not teach annihilation, because some are to receive more than others. There are no degrees in death; it is one sweeping stripe, and all is gone.

It seems to me justice and mercy require more punishment for two crimes than for one, and more for one kind of crime than for some other. Then, too, the state of the heart should be taken into consideration. To my mind the text I have quoted teaches that when Jesus comes every individual will receive some sort of punishment for sins committed, unless thorough repentance, which brings thorough reformation, has preceeded his advent; and that some will recieve greater punishment than others.

In Rom. ii. 6, 8, 9, we read: "Who (God) will render to every man according to his deeds; . . . . but unto them that are contentious and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath; tribulation and wrath upon every soul of man that doeth evil." This language is equivalent to that used by Luke. The righteous indignation and wrath of God will be poured out upon the sinner, and if repentance is not the result, "sin when it is finished, brings forth death." "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers; therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation" (condemnation). Matt. xxiii. 14. Death is death; there is no greater to it. "Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto the Bethsaida! for if the mighty works which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you. And thou, Capernaum, which are exalted unto heaven, shall be brought down to hell; for if the mighty works which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee." Matt. xi. 21-24. If death is the only punishment, how can it be more tolerable? "Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt not come out thence until thou hast paid the uttermost farthing." Matt. v. 25, 26.

This last text, without careful perusal, might be questioned as testimony on this point, but I think it is quite evident this is what our Savior meant to teach by the text. Our adversary, when we are in the world, is not the devil, and besides we are not to be agreed with him; but our adversary, when we are in the world, is Christ. Why? Because he is opposed to sin, and is going to establish righteousness. We are to be agreed with him. We are now in the way with him. The judge is coming, and if we are not agreed, we shall be cast into prison. Christ is our adversary. God is the judge—he will judge us through Christ. When this life ends we are represented as going before the judge, the intervening space of time from death to the resurrection not being taken into the account. "Thou shalt not come out thence till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing," implies that they shall come out. If they have, under the righteous wrath of an offended God, reformed, they will come forth to life; but if unrepentant they will come forth to destruction.

Do you say some will put off doing better? So they do now. But let all such know that God will reward them with indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish. And to those who are willfully disobedient, let me quote the words of Paul again. Hear him: "For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation tion, which shall devour the adversaries." Heb. x. 26, 27.

Resurrection to life, simply, will not relieve us of one of our sins; "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether good or whether it be bad." You can deceive man by saying, I could not help it, and that you are a creature of circumstances; but you cannot deceive God. If you have known to do good and did it not, you will have to go before the bar of God, and you will be cast into prison; and you will not come out until you have paid the very last mite. Nor does this relate to the whole truth, only, the gospel and its injunctions and all connected therewith; but it relates to any little act of kindness, or any other one duty, whether great or small. If we know to do only one little act of kindness, and do it not, we are accountable so far, and our work will go into judgment. It is true I do not know your accountability; every thing to outward appearance may say you are, and to what extent; but I am not to judge now. The saints will judge the world at the proper time.

None of us will ever understand the manner of working in that judgment day, until the day itself discloses it. But we know some things he says about it; some of them we have been bringing to your remembrance. But here are some more: "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that acknowledge (Diag.) not God, and obey not the gospel." 2 Thess. i. 7, 8. "For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord will be many." Isa. lxvi. 16. That fire will be used I have not a doubt, but that all will be destroyed by it without an opportunity to repent, that word "plead" denies. Micah says: "And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off." How does he rebuke sometimes? With flames of fire. Isa. lxvi. 17. There will be other means used in that day. When tribes or nations refuse to go up to worship, they shall have no rain. Zech. xiv. 17. Afflictions will be administered to individuals. Each individual will have to appear and recieve according to things done. To some, it will prove a blessing, but to others, it will end in their destruction.

To my mind, future punishment other than death is embraced in many texts that teach the destruction of the sinner. I will give you a sample: "A fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." Deut. xxxii. 22. "Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup." Psa. xi. 6. "For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day cometh that shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. iv. 1. You do not like this interpretation? But in the Scripture there is used similar language concerning other events. Isa. xi. embraced the first and second advents of the Savior. His first advent embraced the period from his birth to his showing unto Isreal. The expression "the Christ," embraces his kingdom, his kingship, his office as Savior, and many other things, and we can find many similar expressions. Then is it strange that the expressions I have quoted should cover more than the simple extinction of the sinner? I think not.

The horrible doctrine of misery through the endless ages of eternity, the world is fast repudiating because of making God a heathen monster; and now they are being rocked to sleep by another false doctrine—that they will lie down in forgetfulness, and that that is all they will recieve for their disobedience. Oh, brother! let us awake from that lethargy into which the devil has led us by this false doctrine, and send forth the note of warning in trumpet tones, crying, the Lord cometh to take vengeance! to reward every man as his work shall be!

May it be our happy lot, dear reader, to have fled "from the wrath to come" by having our works go beforehand unto judgment and sharing in the rapture of the saints.

Editor Restitution:—The announcement of Brother Storrs' illness has called forth such an urgent request to have a further report regarding his condition that I again crave a little space in your valued columns. Our dear brother, during a long, studious and active career, has been the honored instrument, in the hands of God, of making many hearts rejoice in the truths of the holy Scriptures; and, hence, their hearts were filled with sorrow and Christian sympathy by learning of his illness and very low condition. While our dear brother had fought a good fight, had kept the faith, and we knew a crown of righteousness was laid up for him, still we were loath to yield even a brief victory to that "enemy" who is soon to be destroyed. We could hardly feel reconciled to the gloom of the "valley of the shadow of death" when the pellucid glory of the Sun of Righteousness is very soon to burst upon the world. And, still, for weeks we hoped against hope, as it were. When I penned my last note to you concerning his illness, his end seemed very near. At the present writing, however, he is more comfortable, although very weak. There is some conflicting medical opinion regarding the precise nature of the malady, but much diminution of the pain encourages us to hope for improvement, if the Lord will. Oh, could we all as submissively bow to the will of our heavenly Father as our dear brother, our every care, pain, sorrow or joy, of this life would be swallowed up in the consolation afforded by that inspired declaration, "All things work together for good to them that love God."

WM. H. SPENCER.

Editor Restitution:—Since I last wrote we have been visited by that enemy—death. Brother and Sister Barrett had a little girl taken down with typhoid fever, and, after a few week's sickness, died. She was a bright child and loved by those who knew her. They also lost an infant. It seems hard to lay the little ones in their graves, but the Prophet Isaiah, lxv. 20, says: "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die a hundred years old; but the sinner being a hundred years old shall be accursed." When that time comes parents will not be deprived of their infants and children, neither will they weep, but the saying will be brought to pass: "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded saith the Lord, and they shall come again from the land of the enemy." Jer. xxxi. 16. They are not in heaven at the present time in the presence of God, Jesus and the angels. They are fit subjects for that place if any of the mortal race were, but they are not there, but they are in the land of the enemy. When they are brought back from that land they are not to go to another planet, but to the place they had been. Verse 17 says: "And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border." Jesus has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." When the little ones come back to their own land and the kingdom is set up here on the earth, then will be fulfilled the prophecy of Zechariah viii. 5, "And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof." May it be our happy lot to be worthy to enter into the kill of the Lord.

NEWS ITEMS.

FERRARI, June 6.—Several thousands are rendered homeless by inundation in the River Po.

CATALONIA, June 8.—The eruption of Mount Ætna has almost ceased. The flow of lava has completely stopped.

SIMLA, June 8.—Official advices from Cashmere state that the famine still continues, and that the mortality is frightful.

PARIS, June 8.—A dispatch to the Temps from Constantine reports that the Ouled-Addi tribe near Batna are in open revolt. The troops have arrived, but are much fatigued by the march.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 8.—Several secret gunpowder manufactories have been discovered at Tomie, in Siberia.

VIENNA, June 8.—Numerous and disastrous floods have occurred throughout Austria.

LONDON, June 8.—The North German Gazette says that the German Foreign Office has received confirmation of the reports of the destruction of the German Mission station in Natal, and of the ill treatment of the missionary by the British. Communications are still proceeding with the British government on the subject.

LONDON, June 9.—The funeral of the late Baron Rochschild took place to-day. The remains were interred at Willesden, near this city. There were forty-two mourning coaches in the procession, and upward of 400 private carriages followed to the grave. The Prince of Wales and Earl Beaconsfield sent carriages.

LONDON, June 10.—A correspondent at St. Petersburg reports that he has been informed from an unimpeachable source that the Czar renounced his visit to Berlin because the German police had received intelligence that it was highly propable his assassination would be attempted there.

MANTUA, June 10.—Another dyke on the River Po has burst, and the water pouring through the break has done immense damage in the Province of Mantua. The inundation took by surprise upwards of twelve communes. The inhabitants are completely destitute, and are encamped on the dykes. The scenes of distress are heart-rending.

LONDON, June 9.—Reuter's Constantinople dispatch says the inhabitants of the Djuma district are preparing to resist the return of the Turks when the Russians evacuate the district. They have sent away the women and distributed arms to the men.

CALCUTTA, June 9.—Official advices represent that the Anglo-Afghan Treaty has created a strong impression in Persia, greatly increasing British prestige. Forty thousand camels belonging to the British transport service have died during the war in Afghanistan. Cholera of a severe type has made its appearance in the lower Bolan Pass. A mission to Cabul is to be forthwith formed at Kohat, and proceed by the way of Khusam about the end of June.

Mr. Rassam, who is carrying on the work begun by the late Mr. George Smith, has just discovered at Babylon an octagonal cylinder, on the sides of which are engraved a history of the campaign of Sennacherib against King Hezekiah. This important find is to be sent to London for safe keeping in the British Museum.

BREVITIES.

The Japanese government has granted the right of Christian burial, a point hitherto jealously guarded.

There has been a terrible loss of camels in the Afghan campaign. Already the trade between India and Central Asia will be crippled simply for want of means of carriage during the next few years. Thousands of camels have perished from overwork and bad forage; and as these had been got together at high prices and with great difficulty, it is easy to understand the inconvenience that will be occasioned on the frontier.

A ROYAL GREAT-GRANDMOTHER.

The birth of a princess in Germany has raised the Queen of England to the dignity of a great-grandmother. The infant is the daughter of the Princess Charlotte, whose mother is Princess Imperial of Germany, the eldest daughter of Queen Victoria. The age of the infant's mother is nineteen; her grandmother is thirty-nine, and her great-grandmother sixty.

BABYLONIAN LITERATURE.

The Babylonian and Ninevite libraries were pottery. Their books were plaques of clay, on which the letters were impressed, and the plaques, being baked, became such enduring pages of history that in this nineteenth century after Christ we find them as legible as when printed. Innumerable Egyptian records are found in hieroglyphic characters on the various potteries of this people. Greek story and and history are abundantly illustrated on relics of Greek ceramic art. Wherever the Roman legions went they carried with them the art of making pottery, on which they impressed historical facts, from which the modern historian derives information otherwise unattainable. In short, it may be affirmed that next to the art of writing, and in connection with it, the ceramic art is of more importance to the student of history and of men than any and all the other arts.

Cholera has been making a fearful havoc among the pilgrims returning from the Hardwar fair, and is being spread by them through northern India. It is asserted that between 20,000 and 30,000 hillmen from the Himalayan districts near Nynee Tal died on their homeward journey. Several cases most of them fatal, appeared among the Fifteenth Hussars almost immediately after their Arrival at Meerut from Candahar, and it is supposed that the outbreak is due to some men having travelled from Moultan in railway carriages which had been used by infected pilgrims. The disease has appeared in most cities of the Punjab, and the fear of the spread of the epidemic to Peshawur has induced the authorities to remove the greater portion of the garrison there. It is suggested that the government might well consider whether it is not time to put an entire stop to those great religious fairs, seeing that they almost invariably form centres whence pestilence spreads throughout the country, and that the effective sanitary control of the masses of pilgrims assembled is almost impossible.

NEWLY DISCOVERED FOSSIL BIRD-TRACKS.

The lower Connecticut Valley seems to be quite as full of giant fossil bird-tracks, in stone, as the upper region about Turner's Falls, where Professor Hitchcock made his discoveries. Messrs. Coe & Fowler have just uncovered in their quarry on Powder Hill, half a mile west of the Middlefield and Durham station, a layer of stone indented several inches with bird-tracks. Several on a line are three and one-half feet from each other, and measure fourteen inches on the centre claw and outside claws being separated about a foot at the points. These tracks were made in the mud and ooze of a shore that was evidently washed by the tides, and each in-coming tide deposited a layer of silt, or mud, which became sufficiently hardened in the sun to retain the form of the impression, and in that shape the mud was slowly turned to freestone.

THE JEWS.

It is curious, not to say amusing, to see how people resent the introduction of the Jewish element into George Eliot's last great story. That the Jews killed Christ is the principal thing that many excellent Christians remember about that extraordinary race. They forget that the race also gave birth to Christ. That Christ should be killed by any people among whom he might appear was inevitable, and had to do with human nature at large. The exceptional and marvelous thing, speaking secular, was his production. There can be no reply to the tremendous retort of the Israelite upon whom the Christian had spat—that half Christendom worship a Jew, and the other half a Jewess. Says Matthew Arnold: "As well imagine a man with a sense for sculpture not cultivating it by the help of the remains of Greek art, or a man with a sense for poetry not cultivating it by the help of Homer and Shakespeare, as a man with a sense for conduct not cultivating it by the help of the Bible!" "Greece was the lifter-up to the nations of the banner of art and science, as Israel was the lifter-up of the banner of righteousness."

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

That joy which makes us slight prayer, will in the end fill us with sadness.

That alone is worth looking after which will make one lovely in the eyes of God.

Many of the shadows that cross our path through life are caused by our standing in our own light.

Work while the day lasts, work with a will,
Soon will the night come, when all will be still;
Sweet will it be, at set of sun,
To hear from the Master the welcome, "Well done!"

The pleasure of the senses is as a flower whose perfume quickly evaporates, and whose brilliancy fades in the hand that gathers it.

"Speak to me now in Scripture language alone," said a dying Christain. "I can trust the words of God, but when they are the words of man it costs me an effort to think whether I may trust to them." This was the testimony of one who died in the morning of life.

BY AND BY.

Weak and weary, worn with care,
Feeling life's load hard to bear,
Striving hourly, falling oft,—
Looking still to Thee, aloft.—
Pitying Father, hear my cry,
Make me perfect—by and by!

Leighton: Where the peace is that Christ gives, all the trouble and disgust of the world cannot disturb it. All outward distress to such a mind is but as the rattling of hail upon the tiles of him who sits within the house at a sumptuous banquet.

If you sleep through death's dark night-time,
He, the bright, the Morning Star,
Filling all the earth with glory,
Will awake you where you are.
O the gladness of the parted,
When our eyes with weeping dim
Shall behold the King of glory,
And be gathered unto him!

Dr. Manning: If any sincere Christian cast himself with his whole will upon the Divine Presence which dwells within him, he shall be kept safe unto the end. When did we ever set ourselves sincerely to any work according to the will of God, and fail for want of strength? It was not that strength failed the will, but that the will failed first. If we could but embrace the Divine Will with the whole love of ours, cleaving to it, and holding fast by it, we should be borne along as upon the river of the water of life.

Alone with Jesus earth grows dim.—
I can see my friends through him;
Time, space, all things below, above,
Reveal to me one Life, one Love,—
That One in whom all glory shine
All beauties meet—that One is mine!

THE RESURRECTION BODY.

Dr. A. J. Gordon: Have you noticed the change which takes place in a porcelain globe when a light is lighted within it? the dull grayish shade giving place to the luminous white. That has seemed to me to be the best analogy to the resurrection body of which I could conceive. The same person, each familiar feature there, but the Spirit of God dwelling within and transfiguring us with his light. A disembodied state has no particular charm for me. It would make me homesick to think of eternity with no house to live in. The humblest tenement of glorified flesh seems more attractive than the fairest spiritual Elysium which is all out of doors, a lonely soul in infinite vacancy. At home in the body I long to be, and that is promised.

POETRY.

Changed.

L. M. BURGESS.

Weary and heavy laden,
Bent with a load of care,
Leaning upon His promise
Life again grew fair.
Fair and sweet and tender,
Pulses within me thrilled,
Filling the days with splendor
That sorrow before had filled.

Now every moment meets me
Filled with a work to do,
Keeping myself unspotted
And to the Master true.
Helping my struggling brother,
Bearing a little space
The burden of some one laden,
Helping thro' His dear grace.

Finding in love to others
A brighter, better cheer,
Feeling my sorrows lessen,
His presence draw more near.
When I the cup of water
Give in His royal name,
Feeleth His promised blessing
Like to a living flame.

Fairer, and even fairer
His service seems to me,
Brighter, and ever brighter
The home that soon shall be,
When in His presence, smiling,
Freed from the "cumbering clay,"
All memory even of sorrow
Shall vanish far away.

SELECTIONS.

[Tschmalll Gazette.]

The Present Condition and Future Glory of the Planet.

Lecture to the Y. M. C. Association Bible Class, of Cincinnati, Ohio, Sunday afternoon, Feb. 16, 1879, by Rev. N. West, D. D. (Presbyterian.)

[We believe that our readers will be pleased that we give them the following long lecture this week on a portion of Scripture that has been regarded as somewhat difficult of interpretation. There are some expressions relative to the spirit going to heaven at death, and there passing the intermediate state in the enjoyment of celestial felicity, to which our readers will take exception as being unscriptural, and which we thought of erasing, but concluded, in fairness to the author, to print in an unmutilated form. The contrast between the present groaning creation, and the glories to be revealed when all things are made new, is presented in forcible style and in exceedingly beautiful language. The lecture, though long, will interest every one who will carefully peruse it. We take the piece from Messiah's Herald in which it was reprinted from the paper to which credit is given.]

For I reckon that the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us [precatyped with regard to us]. For the earnest expection of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God [the apocalypsed of the sons of God]. For the creature [the created thing] was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who subjected the same, in hope. Because the creature itself also [even the created thing itself,] shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty [the liberty of the glory] of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only this, but we ourselves, also, who have the first fruits of the spirit, even we, ourselves, groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body. For we are saved in hope. But hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it. Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what to pray for as we ought, but the Spirit himself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God. Moreover we know that all things are working together for good to them that love God, even to them that are the called according to his purpose. Rom. viii. 18-28.

The lesson to-day is this section—a section of Scripture that has well been called "the Evangel of Creation"—reverting in its retrospect far back to the fall of man, stretching in its prospect far forward to his final redemption from the grave. There is none more comprehensive in all the Bible, spanning, as it does, the sum of all human misery, hope and restoration, in which nature itself is a partner with man, both in his groans and his joy. The theme is the joint agony of the believer and nature in a common and present suffering, and their joint expectation and possession of a future and common glory—the last so immeasurably superior to the first as to make any comparison between the two utterly unworthy. Over against all the trials of the present life is set the salvation ready to be revealed in the resurrection of the just when Christ comes to earth the second time. Your present life may have been to you a long agony, a vale of tears, a Bochim, a martyrdom. The objects of your dearest affection may have betrayed you, your fondest earthly hopes been blasted, struggles of various kinds, sorrow, pain, tears, suffering, a full cup wrung out to you in all its bitterness, and conflicts known only to God. Gethsemanes and Calvarys may have marked your pathway, with the loss of things, the friendship and favor of those in whom you trusted been as apples of Sodom to your taste, and the remnant of existance seem to be but the protraction of what has already gone before. But look at the coming glory! This section is written for you. Not only heaven is yours with all its blessedness between death and the resurrection, but a greater glory still beyond. One glance at the future will convince you that the sum of all sorrows, here and now, public, domestic, private, is not worthy to be named, if you are a child of God, with the oncoming compensation at the resurrection of the just.

"As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing! as poor, yet making many rich! as having nothing yet possessing all things!"—this mixture of sadness and joy, despondency and hope, is the characteristic of all true Christian experience. And yet hope triumphs over present discouragement. The glory of the future casts backward its shimmering gleam on the gloom of the present, and like sunbeams refracted in the storm-cloud passing away, braids on the dark bosom of sorrow a bow of promise, radiant with beauty and full of consolation. Beyond the range of present agony and expectation, beyond even the resurrection itself, there is a glory-smitten land where pain and sorrow never come, and where tears never fall, and hearts never ache. You limit your thoughts, perhaps, to what you call "heaven"—a blessed place indeed—somewhere, you think, beyond the Pole Star, or the Pleiades, or near Sirius, or at Cygni, an intermediate state and place of disembodied spirits between death and the resurrection. You call it Paradise. Paul is speaking of no such place here. It is of our planet he speaks, the earth we tread, that inheritance to which Abraham is heir through the righteousness of that faith he has celebrated so much in this epistle, and with him all believers—an inheritance made glorious when Christ comes to unite the inheritance and the heirs together. It is the crown of his whole argument. Its logic, starting from the fall of the first Adam, and the damage to man and nature on that account, drives him to the recovery of man and nature by the second Adam, the glorification of the planet and believers together at the resurrection; the time when the veil that is spread over all nations like a pall of death shall be removed. Nature springs from her coffin, as it were; death itself is swallowed up in victory; tears wiped away from all faces, and the rebuke of God's people taken away from off all the earth. I want you to remember the PROGRESS OF THE APOSTLE'S THOUGHT in the chapter. First, he makes the grand announcement of the complete absolution of all believers in Christ from condemnation. This is verse first. Then he gives the reason for it, in verse second, viz: That the gospel, which he calls the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, makes believers free from the mere' law, which he calls the law of sin and death—of sin, because it reveals sin: of death because it condemns to death. Then he shows in what way the gospel does this, viz., by revealing the grace of God in the mission, incarnation, and judical crucifixion of Christ standing in the sinner's place, and procuring for him the righteousness he was unable to provide for himself, and because of which lack his justification was impossible by the law. This is verses three and four. Then he draws a contrast between the justified and the unjustified, the first being spiritually minded the second, carnally minded, the first possessors of life and peace, the second, hating God, impotent to please God, and doomed to death. This is verses five to nine. Then he shows that the believer has a regenerate soul in an unregenerate body doomed to death, because not yet pervaded by the resurrection-life of Christ. And yet though the body is dead because of sin, still the spirit lives on, even now, and after death, because of righteousness. It goes to heaven. But what of the believer's body? is not that redeemed also? Certainly. The indwelling Spirit of God in the believer's soul is the pledge and guaranty that the believer's body, too, shall share in the same divine life, and be quickened at the resurrection of the just when Christ comes. All this in verses ten and eleven, with a practical word in verse twelve and thirteen. Notice, now, what comes next as a necessary result of the indwelling Spirit. It is the sonship of believers. The Spirit in them is the spirit of God's son, the Spirit of adoption, and because of that they are children, and the spirit of Christ, in union with their spirit, keeps always saying within them, "Abba, Father!" and so bears witness with their spirit that they are the children of God, a concurrent and inseparably blended testimony in one perpetually present act and state of Christian consciousness, unless the testimony is arrested by indulgence in known sin, "walking after the flesh." This in verses fourteenth and fifteenth. Then, what next? Heirship, of course. Irresistibly so. If children then heirs, the inheritance, the patrimony, the kingdom of their Father, yet in reversion, not yet possessed. As sons, heirs of God; as brethren of Christ, joint heirs with Christ. All the same family. His the elder brother, they the younger brethren; all suffering together, all glorified together. This is the sixteenth verse. You see the progression. It is logical. It is comforting to a believer.

AND NOW WHAT IS THE INHERITANCE?

Is it what you call heaven, what you understand by that word, the centre of the universe, the King's imperial city, away beyond Orion and Arcturus, a place of upper glory, around which unnumbered solar systems revolve, its fancy suburb and decoration? Not at all. Such a thing is not in the chapter. Believers above are waiting, in expectation, without pain, precisely for what believers below are waiting in agony and hope—viz., the kingdom of the resurrection. Paul's thought terminates on the glorification of the planet—this earth of ours as the visible kingdom which shall be set up when the kingdom of Antichrist is destroyed, and Christ comes to raise his saints and to reign; for this we pray, "Thy kingdom come! thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Paul is telling us what awaits us when the angel sounds the seventh trumpet, and the militant state of the church is over and the mystery of God is finished, and the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of Christ, and he reigns forever and ever, and Popes, Sultans, Kaisers, Czars, and secular princes are no more. He is speaking of the millennial glory of the planet. Do you think it will come before he comes? Not at all. Does your thought of the kingdom exclude the planet? Then it is unscriptural. Does it come on the planet before the resurrection? So Papacy has said for fifteen centuries, and Anabaptists of the sixteenth century, and the Fifth Monarchy men in the time of Cromwell have said so, and sought to set it up, by fire, sword, and revolution. They were no believers in the pre-millennial coming of Christ. They were not pre-millenarians, and could not be. The Church of Christ has universally condemned both them and their doctrine. They were pre-advent "Millenarians," and are so known in history. They looked for a carnal kingdom, and 1,000 years before the resurrection. And how many hold to the opposite pole, the finer spiritual form of the same great error, still looking for the promised kingdom to come spiritually, apart from the deliverance Paul has connected with it, and 1,000 years before the resurrection! There will be no other kingdom on earth than what now exists, before Christ comes. The millennial victory of the church over the kingdom of Antichrist will not begin till Antichrist is destroyed by the personal, visible appearing of Christ. Nothing is clearer in all God's word.—2 Thess. ii. 8; Rev. xix. 11, 21. Then the kingdom comes, with the resurrection of the heirs of the kingdom, and the removal of the curse from the planet, Rev. xx. 1, 6; Rom. viii. 21, 23.

Take notice, also, that Paul makes no mention of the resurrection of unbelievers here. They are not "heirs" because not children of God. There is no jointer between them and Christ. They shall have no share in any priestly or kingly dominion here with him. They shall rise, indeed, but not with the righteous. Every man in his own order," that is, in his own division or band. The figure is a military one. "Only they that are Christ's at his coming"—the heirs of the kingdom. The wicked shall indeed rise, but not in the first resurrection, nor by virtue of the resurrection-life of Christ or indwelling of his spirit, for they are not united to Christ. It will be enough when their time comes, that they are called from their tombs by an act of omnipotence, apart from any spiritual quickening whatever. They do not rise to incorruption and immortal blessedness. Paul has no reference to them here, whatever. It is of the heirs alone he is speaking—the redemption of the bodies of believers from the grave and the second coming of Christ.

Now, then, what comes next? What is associated with the final redemption of the heirs at the resurrection? Clearly the dominion of the world, cursed and lost in the first Adam, and left a ruined legacy to his ruined children, but restored and blessed in the second Adam, and given back to man, redeemed from ruin—an inheritance of glory, to the perfect man in Christ Jesus, the justified man raised from the dead. Both fall together, the earth and man. Both rise together, the earth and man. This is Paul's great thought, and the only logical and theological end of his noble argument. The resurrection of our planet to newness of life is just as certain as the resurrection of the believer's body, for the planet to newness of life is just as certain as the resurrection of the believer's body, for the planet is an elect planet, predestined as the theatre of redemption, and will be sanctified and glorified with man, by virtue of the same redeeming work of Christ. The interpenetrating efficacy of the resurrection life of Christ, the power of his all glorifying Spirit, brooding in a regenesis of all things, and mingling with cosmical convulsions at the resurrection, will begin a restitution of all things that will put the vaunted triumphs of science to shame. What culture cannot do, this will do. It will emancipate the earth from the repressive curse that so long has held in check its vital forces and laws, and blasted its most generous endeavors after perfect development. The earth will be regenerated—born again. This is the sublime order and progression of the great thought struggling for utterance in the mind of Paul; first the spirit of the believer, next his body, next the planet, each in order, all the subjects of the same redeeming power.

Look, now, at the whole section that forms our lesson for to-day. Why is it the sufferings of believers are not worthy to be compared with the glory ready to be revealed in the last day? Is it because at the death of the bodies, their souls pass immediately to the glory of heaven, the intermediate state between death and the resurrection? Not at all. Is it true that the curse is lifted off from nature, progressively, in proportion to the death of believers? Not at all. If so, how blessed had earth been ere this! No. It is because something unutterably grand is to occur at the resurrection of the saints, when Christ comes to re-unite the heirs and the inheritance and glorify both together. What is it? It is what the Apostle calls the deliverance of the creature or the created thing, clearly the planet. (1.) The term creature cannot mean believers, for the two are expressly contradistinguished in the text. (2.) It cannot mean unbelievers, or all mankind, as the great Augustine, betrayed by a false theory, supposed, for the Apostle nowhere teaches Universalism. Unbelievers, and all mankind, are not joint-heirs with Christ, nor will all mankind share in that first resurrection of which Paul is here speaking, the resurrection of the just. (3.) It cannot mean fallen angels, for such have no love for God, nor long for the manifestation of the sons of God. It is the day of their shame and confusion, and of their binding and sealing in the abyss with Satan, their Prince. (4.) It cannot mean unfallen or holy angels, for they never were made subject to vanity, nor have ever been in the bondage of corruption. What then? If neither believers nor unbelievers, fallen nor unfallen angels are the creature, but by these excluding tests, are ruled out from the Apostle's thought, what remains for the definition? Clearly, just what the great Irenæus, Justin, Tertullian, Lactantius, Chrysostom, all the Greek fathers of the church, and most of the Latin, and all the best expositors of the Scripture to-day, hold—the planet itself, including (1) the material earth, (2) the atmospheric heavens, (3) the vegetable kingdom, (4) the animal kingdom, the whole reasonless, animate and inanimate creation, or what the Apostle expresses by the equivalent term, "the whole creation," or what we would call reasonless "nature." It is the interpretation of the ablest expositors—men like Luther, Calvin, Melancthon, Erasmus, Beza; men like Bengel, Tholuck, Olshausen, DeWette, Philippi, Ewald, Neander, Delitzsch Meyer, Lechler, Lange, Kurtz, Elliott, and multitudes whose names alone fill pages—all substantially one, declaring that, by the creature and the whole creation here is meant the whole reasonless creation animate and inanimate, the whole animate and inanimate nature in opposition to humanity, an interpretation ever held by the early church in its purest days.

AND WHAT IS THE PRESENT CONDITION

of the morally blameless creation? It is one of involuntary subjection to vanity and the bondage of corruption—subjected not willingly, but by reason of Him who subjected it; not Adam, not Satan, but God—subjected by a divine ordination, and not only on account of man's transgression, but for the benefit of fallen man. Present human toil is a part of the curse, and yet that toil is, under the circumstances for the benefit of man. Still, it is no less a part of the curse, for nature's energies are perverted and repressed. "Cursed is the ground, for thy sake. In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Thorns and thistles shall it bring forth unto thee. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the ground out of which thou was taken, for dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return." Thus was the earth condemned. Thus did "Vanity" smite through Cosmos, which, but shortly before was Chaos, only to reduce it to Chaos again, from which a regenesis shall at last recover it, to more than pristine beauty.

"So shall the world go on
Under her own weight, groaning, till the day
Appear of respiration to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked: at return
Of Him, the woman's seed foretold,
Last in the clouds to be revealed
In glory of the Father."

"Subject to vanity" is creation's present law. Held in the "bondage of corruption" is creation's present doom. And both on account of man's sin. The curse has struck through the whole framework and vitals of Nature, entailing the untold sufferings and groans of the whole animal creation, its mutual ferocity and slaughter, the stinted and thwarted development of the vegetable kingdom calling on every side for human help and culture, the pestilence of the air, the convulsions of sea and land. In the eloquent words of Ellicott, creation is subjected "to purposelessness, to an inability to realize its native tendencies and the ends for which it was called into being, to baffled endeavor and mocked expectation, to a blossoming and not bearing fruit, a pursuing and not attaining, a searching and never finding"—and all on account of man's sin. Science, in the hands of some men, alleges, in disproof of the great truth here affirmed, the evidence of destruction and death among the inferior orders of creation, written in the rocks ages before man's creation, and exults in the supposed demonstration of the operation of ruin prior to the inspired date of the earth's subjection to vanity. Granting the scientific fact, has science won a victory over revelation? Not at all. The Bible is still true. For the inspired declaration as to the earth's subjection to vanity by reason of man's sin relates to nothing anterior to the fall of man, while, at the same time, the Bible leaves room for the operation of destruction and death ages before man was created, or fell. It tells us of a chaos out of which cosmos came. It describes a genesis of the present order and constitution of things, and it is to this present order alone the doctrine here discussed refers. It describes a new creation from the ruins of a previous world—ruined for what cause we are not told—a creation effected by the same Spirit that, one day hence, will restore the planet again. It tells of a superadded calamity that followed the reconstruction of the planet after chaos had became cosmos—a "vanity," a "bondage," judicially inflicted, for man's sin, and whereby the fair fabric was marred, and all its energies paralyzed after it has risen to beauty from the hand of God, and been pronounced "very good." Science and Nature, alike, confirm the Bible declaration that ever since the last genesis, vanity, disease, and death have reigned. It is only the Bible, however, that can explain to us why it was that a new and fair creation has been so degraded. Nor may we ever allow any science to contradict the clear averment of the Scriptures, or assume that man, in his holy estate, was planted in the region and shadow of death, or that human death is a natural law and not a judicial infliction, or that the curse now resting on earth, in the present order of things, is without a moral cause, and only the effect of an unutterable, primal law ingrained in the very texture of all existence; and so rob "the whole creation" of its expectation of deliverance and enjoyment of future glory. I read, in the scriptures, that the date of creation's present disaster coincides with the solemn hour.

"Of man's first disobedience and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world and all our woe."

That fatal hour, when

"Earth felt the wound, and Nature, from her seat,
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost."

Since then, what land has not borne thistles and thorns; what soil has not been filed with the graves of men and beasts? What signals of distress has not the planet displayed? Through all its veins the effect of human transgression has gone, by no fault of its own, but by a divine ordination, binding the guilty tenant and his mansion to the same doom. It is precisely here is found the secret of that repressive and negative power which cripples all its heaven-born energies and baffles all its best endeavors, so that, even under the best culture man can give, the result is only imperfection and decay. An incubus sits upon its bosom, a deadly vampire, a nightmare, horrid and fiendish, troubling its dream. It cannot awake. It is doomed to perpetual inability, effort without power, the victim of bondage, aiming to realize its inborn virtue, yet never succeeding, re-attempting to rise after a thousand defeats, yet always falling, struggling for a fairer bloom, and more luxuriant and undying verdure and fruitage, yet perishing in corruption and death. "Vanity of vanities!" "The creature was made subject to vanity."

AND WHAT ITS PRESENT ATTITUDE?

Agony and expectation. It groans and it waits. The Apostle uses a bold personification. Agony, because it is the victim of vanity, and plagued with the curse of man's sin. Expectation, because subjected, not willingly and conscious, as it were, of something within itself worthy of redemption. "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." It is a common distress. It waits for millennial glory when all its groans will cease, its sighs be hushed, and its chains be broken. Sometimes, indeed, a smile plays upon its cheek, as on a somnambulist's face, while memory goes back to paradisical innocence, when, as Pollock says:

"The wolf dwelt with the lamb,
The leopard with the ox, in looks of love,
The tiger and the scaly crocodile,
Together met, at Gambia's palmy wave."

But it is only momentary. Patches of sunshine here and there, but then come clouds and the dark thunderstorm, the cyclone, the angry tempest on the sea, the tidal wave, the sirocco, hard inclemency, pestilence stalking at noonday, famine, fear and death. Her features wear a solemn look even in her serenest hours. If night is nature's sleep, it is also nature's sigh. It was more than poetical genius that made Goethe and Schlegel both say that the starry canopy puts on the aspect of loneliness and bereavement. There is a solemnity in the nightfall when the tall mountains, draped in dark shadows, seem to come down from their pride and kneel for prayer, as heaven hangs out its lights for evening worship. Old mother earth, wrapped in the patch-work of torn and soiled garments, is weary and in bondage. She groans. Too long her energies have been plied in vain. Too long her bosom has been made the graveyard of her children, over whose tombs even the flowers grow sick and die. Too long unnumbered calamities beset her. The sun seems tired of shining on so many sin-stricken souls, and plague-smitten bodies, and the night winds moan over cities crowded with luxury and guilt, ensanguined battle-fields, dens of corruption, and cemeteries piled with the dead. The glazed eye of the dumb brute as he falls exhausted on your streets is a speechless prayer for pity. The dead dog, faithful and true, is a silent appeal for compassion. Poverty and crime, hunger and nakedness and cold, distress and misery, where shall they find relief? The very plants, dissatisfied with their fading fruitly, languish back to the ground as if in despair. Thistles and thorns too long. From every department of Nature, Nature's groaning ascends, begging for redemption. And she groans not alone. "We, too, who have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we, ourselves, groan within ourselves," burdened with sin, smitten with the same vanity in all our effort, that makes Nature a petitioner with us at the throne of grace. Sin within us, sin without us, vanities of head and heart, bereavements, afflictions, losses, crosses, wounds, pangs, and griefs, multiply the accents of complaint from day to day. And how often is our groaning too deep for expression!

But Nature "waits," as do all who believe. She waits "in hope." And what is her hope? Heaven? Yes, but heaven on earth, and earth made heaven. It is her own deliverance she seeks—the complete reversal of her vanity and subjection, her complete emancipation from the bondage of corruption. The figure in the text is impressive, more so than Longfellow's Evangeline. It is that of some one in a posture of intense anxiety, in which, as in theatrical act, the expectant stands gazing with bent body, out-stretched neck, and strained vision, her eyes all beclouded with grief, watching with supreme interest some object in the distance on which her heart and hope are set. So Nature, in pain, yet looks with unflinching gaze into the future, her mournful eyes dazzled with the gleam of the oncoming glories of the restitution of all things; amazed and wondering as she looks at the rising transformation of her own form into more than primeval loveliness and perfection. It is a vision that inspires her with courage. And equal to the intensity of her hope is her generous effort, even now while in anguish, to realize her destiny. Your diamond from the mine is common charcoal wrought up to translucent splendor by her own unaided force while under the curse. What will she not do when the curse is removed? Your moss rose, so beautiful, is a rude flower from the hedge, that culture has charmed to another than itself. Your crystals and pearls and gems and silver and gold are shining dust and glorified slime. Your costliest marble is common earth, manufactured by Nature's hands. I could tell you of the help science has brought, and the auguries she gives of still greater wonders. But what tongue can describe the splendor of that result when the Deliverer himself shall come to "make all things new," and Nature, straining no more in painful gaze, shall experience her own resurrection, and the life of Christ, mingling with all her forces, shall wake her to immortal beauty and glory—when every effort she has made during all her long travail shall be seen to have been but a prophecy of coming redemption from all her woes, and of recompense for all her toil.

"If it be not, then, a poet's dream,
An idle vaunt of song—
Such as beneath the moon's soft gleam
On vacant tombs throng,
Which bids peace in heaven and earth,
In all things fair around,
Strong yearnings for a new birth
With matchless glories crowned."

The time when Nature's expectation will be realized is the date of the event at which Nature stands gazing while looking at her own transformation. It is called the "Adoption," and this is immediately explained to mean "the redemption of the body." It is when the "blessed and holy" are waked to share with Christ the royalties of the coming kingdom on earth. Whatever deliverance God's children attain to, then, as to their bodies, Nature attains to the same, for "the creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God." The resurrection-life of Christ, that penetrates the bodies of believers shall penetrate the planet. Then begins the planet's "regeneration." It is when the heirs and inheritance are united—when Christ proclaims the welcome: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world"—an inheritance of glory "reserved in heaven," at present in the counsel of God, but "ready to be revealed at the last day"—kept back just now, but soon to be apocalypsed. Adopted, indeed, all believers have been from the first moment of their spiritual life, when their filiation began. Yet it was only an adoption in mystery, not in maturity. But raised from the dead, and openly acknowledged before the world, the mystery of their concealment is exchanged for the maturity of their manifestation, and their adoption is complete with the resurrection of their bodies, redeemed from frailty and the corruption of the grave. Receiving their heritage, then, in maturity, they are said to receive their "adoption" in the same sense, becoming a visible priestly royalty on earth, the "purchased possession." They "shine," then, "as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Their inheritance is an "inheritance of the saints in light," They are "manifested," or "apocalypsed" (as the original word is) at the "appearing and kingdom of Christ." They are the "children of the kingdom," just because they are the "children of the resurrection," and being invested with spiritual bodies, as was Christ at his own resurrection, are "equal to the angels." Their glory is complete. Their estate is in possession.

THE TIME OF THE FIRST RESURRECTION.

Into this "liberty of the glory of the children of God" Nature finds admission. Subjection to vanity and bondage of corruption are gone. Set free and reinvigorated by supernatural power, the earth will spontaneously yield her increase. The animal world will be in harmony with itself. "The wolf and the lamb shall lie down together." The vegetable world will put on beauty richer than the rose of Sharon; riches surpassing what Eden knew. Blessed will be the condition of the Bride, the redeemed church gathered around her Lord. Her God will be to her an everlasting light. Blessed the nations that walk in the light of the holy city, and bring their glory and honor into it. The clear gleam of Zion's brightness shall attract their admiring gaze, more lustrous than the Shekinah when it shone in the tabernacle or temple of old. A deluge of the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, under the Spirit's power, shall cover the earth as the waters do the sea. Mountains and valleys will echo with the Redeemer's joy. The planet, clothed in her Sabbath dress, and adorned with innocence and purity, shall beam again as first she did when angels sang for joy, and "the whole creation," strung and tuned for sweetest harmonies, like an Æolian harp, will breathe its heavenly music, Christ first, Christ middle, Christ last, Christ all in all, on every string. Such are some of the things in bright reversion for all believers and the whole creation—blessing for the curse, life for death, plentitude for vanity, satisfaction for hope, liberty for bondage, the throne for the grave, and, for corruption, glory. It is no fancy sketch. It is a reality, beyond what eye has seen, or ear heard, or man's heart conceived, but which the Spirit of God has revealed in the Scriptures. It is this hope that is the church's hope, the hope of Christ's "appearing and kingdom," the "hope of the resurrection," which Paul calls "the hope of the righteousness by faith," the righteousness he has celebrated so much in this epistle. The early martyr church lived with this glorious hope shining full in its face.

Paul tells us we are "saved in hope," one of the most beautiful expressions of the Bible. "In hope." What is it? Faith always terminates on the Word of God. Hope always terminates on the good thing promised in that Word. One on the word, the casket; the other on the thing in it, the jewel. If faith is the foundation, or substructure, of things hoped for, the evidence or clinching demonstration of things not seen, then hope is the superstructure reared upon words believed, the anticipation of realities not yet possessed. Invisible is our salvation as yet. It is still in mystery. Invisible is our inheritance also. Working from within outward, from concealment to manifestation, from mystery to maturity, from spirit to body, and from body to planet, all that we possess of salvation to-day is its first degree within, and unseen. It is a hidden life with God. But we are saved "in hope." The second degree is realized at death, when our sanctification is complete, and our souls pass to the glory of heaven, while our flesh yet rests "in hope;" the spirit above still waiting for its final mansion. The last degree of salvation is at the second coming of Christ, the resurrection of our bodies. Then, hope dissolves into fruition, and the believer's long waiting into eternal satisfaction. What a dignity now! What a reward then! "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God! Therefore, the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Loved ones, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he [Christ] is pure." No words are more precious. The expectation of the coming of Christ in visible, personal glory, to fashion our vile bodies and enter on his kingdom, has a sanctifying power, and is a means of grace far more than even the contemplation of heaven.

The term of the believer's hope is the term of Nature's travail and expectancy, and that is the term of the church's groaning. The limit for both is the resurrection of the just. The groaning of the church and the groaning of Nature synchronize. And how long already that groan? "Until now," said Paul, A. D. 57—the year he wrote the epistle to the Romans. From man's fall till then, 4,000 years. And we may say, too, "until now"—1,800 years more, for creation's groans are not stilled. Nature's agony has been uttered in one unbroken groan for near 6,000 years.

"Long, loud, deep, piercing, dolorous, immense." And believers have blended their groans in all ages with hers. Nor will a time ever come before Christ, the stiller of Nature's groans, comes, when any minister of Christ will be privileged to say, "Brethren, time once was, ages ago, when Nature travailed in pain, and groaned, and believers did too, but now the curse is gone. Nature groans no more, and believers share her liberty. Centuries ago, Romans viii. 18-24 was true, but it is not true now!" Never! Nor will the terms of Christian discipleship ever be changed. Up to the last hour, and all the way through, they will be, "Deny thyself, take up thy cross, and follow me!" "Whoever will be the friend of the world is the enemy of God!" No! Your fancied millennial kingdom of universal holiness, righteousness, peace, joy, victory, and glory, before Christ comes, is a delusion. It is not God's Word, nor can one syllable to support it be found in all the pages of that blessed volume. "We shall reign with thee on the earth!" but only after the seventh trumpet has sounded, and the mystery of God is finished, the kingdom of Antichrist overthrown by catastrophe and judgment at the "appearing and judgment" of Christ, the heirs raised from their tombs, and the forfeited inheritance restored in more than original glory. Up to the last hour the command "to resist the devil" will be in force—a mockery of a command to believers, if Satan is already chained, shut up, and sealed in the abyss 1,000 years before Christ comes; a double mockery, if, while professedly shut up, his great instruments, the beast and false prophet, are still alive and reigning! God's Word is simple and true. It mocks us in no such way. Until "the redemption of the body" comes, the church groans, and the whole creation groans in pain, and the time of that redemption is the resurrection of the just, the beginning of the glorious kingdom of Christ on earth. So we sing, and have sung so often, as the millennial glory has been anticipated:

"In thy blest kingdom we shall be
From every mortal trouble free;
No groans shall mingle with the songs
That warble from immortal tongues.
* * * * * * *
O long expected day begin!
Dawn on this world of woe and sin,
Fain would we leave this weary road,
And sleep in death, and rest in God."

It is the "day" that comes after the close of our intermediate "rest" in heaven and "sleep" in the grave.

IS YOUR URBAN BEING BURDENED?

Every believer on earth will do the same until Nature's groans are stilled at the resurrection. Do you try to pray, and not know how to pray or just what for? Your mute supplication, all troubled and seeking to break through, is the Spirit's intercession. If it falls back upon itself, ending in an inward groan, it is the same. Are you a sufferer? Remember the sum of all your sufferings is not worthy to be compared with the apocalypse that awaits you. It is, at best, a light "affliction," heart agonizing though it be, the momentary puncture of a pin in comparison with the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" that is coming. Are you unable to interpret your groaning under suffering? God knows it all. He interprets. Your bitterness of heart, your injuries and wrongs, bereavements and afflictions, struggle with self, sin, the world, that inarticulate agony, crushing, burning, unendurable, that throbbing pulse and pain, those hot tears and anguish, that convulsion of spirit and strain, like Laocoon writhing in the serpent's folds, until, sometimes, but for God's grace, life seemed to you scarce worth resisting the temptation to discharge it—all is an eloquence in the ear of God more powerful than your best ordered words could be. For he is the searcher of hearts, and knows what is the mind of the Spirit who is in and behind your groaning, and who is all the while making intercession for you according to the will of God. It is he who prompts your dumb expressionless expression. Are you a true believer? a true child of God? a son? a daughter? an heir of God? joint heir with Christ? Look up. Predestinate, called, justified, sanctified, and soon to be glorified, all things are working for your good. Fix your gaze where expectant Nature is looking, and let her longing for the coming of him who groaned in spirit at the grave of Lazarus, and cried, "Come forth," encourage you.

I commend to you a difficult duty, but one in which God will help you, if you desire it. Let God weave the web of your life according to his own high pattern, not yours. He will look after all your injuries, wrongs, sorrows, pains, and bottle all your tears. You see only the reverse side of things now, as you sit beneath the loom, while the shuttle flies swift, from side to side, in the hands of the great Weaver who sits above, working out his bright design. But when, in the resurrection, you are raised to see the upper side and behold the work complete—what wonders of love will dance and play in the vision! What a figure of beauty and glory whose texture tried your every grace! A compensation more abundant for every tear, an overpayment of delight for every groan.

Brevity of Time.

Time is winding us away to our eternal home. Life is but a winter's day journey to the tomb; time like an ever rolling stream bears us on to the great ocean. O time how few thy value weigh! How few will estimate a day! Yet how fraught with solemn import each moment as it passes by. How should we improve it? Since every beating pulse we tell but leaves the number less; and how true, whatever we do, wherever we be, we are traveling to the grave. Again, on what a slender thread hang everlasting things! And it is a fact worthy of our most serious consideration, that time determines what our state and condition will be in eternity. For it is emphatically declared in God's holy Word that whatever a man soweth that shall he also reap. If we sow to the flesh we shall of the flesh reap corruption, but if to the spirit we shall of the spirit reap life everlasting. So here we sow what we there shall reap. Oh, what will the harvest be? And let him that is unjust be unjust still, and he that is holy be holy still, Rev. xxii. 11, referring to the future state, which will be irrevocably fixed.

In view of this solemn fact, surely it is a serious thing to live, to think, to speak, and to act. What then is time worth to us? And how should we redeem and improve it. Just think in the morning when you rise, we lay the moulding hand on our destiny; when this is done we have left a deathless impression upon our character, moreover it is not fiction to say that all we do is photographed; we shall see our earth-life again, our influence, too, is immortal, and where will it end? Indeed, all the more impressive, for as we are mingled with men in their only state of probation when character is in its formation state, and our influences and life will tell for good or for evil, oh, we are overwhelmed. Who is sufficient for these things? Oh, for the blood that blots out a guilty past, and for grace to earnestly pray with an inspired one to teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

"There is a time we know not when,
A point we know not where,
That marks the destiny of man
To glory or despair."

The Coming Hour of Trial.

Will some of the brothers give us a short discourse on Rev. 3:10

Permit first an exact word-for-word translation of the passage: "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of the trial, 'the hour' about to come upon the whole hab. itable [globe,] to try those dwelling on the earth." Note that the phrase "about to come" the Gr. grammatically connects with "hour," not with "trial;" also that the word our E. V. renders "temptation" is the noun of the verb E. V. renders "to try" just below.

What is this hour of trial? We may have thought reference was had to the persecutions which all must suffer, "who wish to live godly in Christ Jesus." 2 Tim. 3:12. But then it had rather been said, I will keep thee from the trials of this life. The reference is here explicitly made to a specific time of trial about to come. And so we must look for something definite and specific in time. And something more general and extensive than any of the calamities or trials, that in ages past have overtaken our globe.

Is such a time of universal trial coming? I believe it is. There is a time when the righteous shall be taken from the earth, called away by that Keleusma, word of command (not "shout") of 1 Thess. 4:16. "Two shall be in one bed, the one taken, the other left. Two working in the field, the one shall be taken the other left." Luke 17:34 35. What awaits those left when the righteous are thus removed? The salt of the earth taken away: corruption, sin in every form, is unrestrained. So much property of former Christian owners left exposed to plunder, but inviting to greater lawlessness—human selfishness, socialism, communism, robbery, war, running riot—it is a veritable pandemonium. Is this foretold in prophecy? I think it is. Read Jer. 25:29-33.

And how does the Lord propose to keep his patient, waiting ones from this hour of trial? He calls them up away from the earth to a place of safety with him, "to meet the Lord in the air." Notice the sequence of events in Isa. 26:19-21. First, the resurrection of the just; then the call, "Come, my people, enter into thy chambers * * till the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish," etc. (Read the whole passage.) The closing of this time of trial is when the Lord's people come out of "their chambers," and descend with their Lord to take with him "the kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven." Dan. 7:27.

The duration of this time of trial, I am inclined to think, is the interval between the 1290 and the 1335 prophetic days (i.e., years) of Dan. 12:11, 12; between the end of the present kosmos and the grand consummation, the setting up of our Lord's kingdom, to which the one waiting is said to be "blessed." While thus the saints are waiting above learning the order of the kingdom, and being appointed their station, ("our polity is in heaven," Phil. 3:20,) below, on earth, the fearful problem of unrestrained sin is being worked out, as a terrible warning to men and angels through all succeeding ages. Yet not entirely unrestrained. It has its limit. "Except those days be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened,"—for the sake of the elect of Israel (see Isa. 65:8, 9,) of whom "two parts shall be cut off and die, but the third part shall be left, brought through the fire," and "I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God." Zech. 13:8, 9.—Chas. L. Ives.

A Scripture Coincidence.

Dr. Burt, in his book The Far East, thus notes a remarkable Scripture coincidence:

The tourist in Egypt looking for Bible illustrations, is likely to be disappointed when he finds no bulrushes or reeds answering to those spoken of in the history of the infant Moses. No sign of flag, reed or other aquatic plant appears, either along the Nile or elsewhere.

Yet there must have been such plants, in former times. The monuments depict them in great variety—the lotus being a favorite. And the rolls of papyrus found in the tombs testify to the existence of such plants, the papyrus having been made from the bark of the paper reed.

How interesting to the Scripture student to find that the disappearance of these plants was specifically predicted by Scripture writers! Says the prophet Isaiah: "The reeds and flags shall wither; the paper reeds and flags by the mouths of the brooks, and everything sown by the brooks shall wither, be driven away, and be no more."

But the question comes why do not aquatic plants now grow in Egypt? Are not the physical conditions now in existence in this country the same which have always prevailed? And does the Divine that now resist natural laws, for the fulfillment of prophecy?

I answer that aquatic plants, which as Herodotus testifies, were extremely valuable, were reared, in the time of Egypt's prosperity, by artificial means—involving the preparation of reservoirs and brooks. Thus too by means of ponds and sluices, the fish were multiplied. And the prediction of Isaiah relates to the destruction of the nice arrangements of artificial life, on which depended the country's high prosperity.

And how entirely natural that the bathing place of Pharaoh's daughter should be a cultivated garden bordering on the Nile, where seclusion could be had.

Innocence and Virtue.

There is a wide difference between innocence and virtue. Innocence has never had a battle; virtue has had many a victory. Innocence is embryonic—it is like a fragile seed; easily torn and blown away; virtue is like a gnarled oak, with the tempest in its limbs, but rooted in the right, wrestling with the storms, and still standing the stouter when they have swept by. Innocence is a gift; virtue is an achievement. Ever since Eden, virtue, in place of innocence, is the destiny of man. It is easy to remain innocent, if no assaults are made upon our passions. But it is quite impossible to acquire virtue without such assaults. How, for instance, can a man make an act of patience, who is never crossed? How can a man make an act of trust, except he be smitten with bereavement or disaster? How can a man make an act of meekness toward his brother, except he be provoked by gainsaying; or of sweet humility towards God, except he be plunged into those mortifications that stir the pride? The virtues only grow strong through exercise and antagonism. When a question of destroying Carthage was debated in old Rome, Scipio Africanus counselled against the measure; for "though she was the implacable foe of the Roman commonwealth, her arms," he urged, "would serve as a whetstone to Roman valor." If poor man had the adjusting of affairs, he would abolish and destroy all temptations. But the wise Father knows better, and leaves undestroyed that which seems harmful, overruling and wielding it, on the other hand, to the good of His creatures. Far from being despondent at temptations, the Christian should hail them as his glorious opportunity. He should shake off the deadly sin of sloth, and break through their ranks as they beset the hillside he is clambering, realizing that he shall grow stonger as he mounts. He should, indeed, "count it all joy when he falls into divers temptations."—F. G. Buer.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

There will be a conference at Dixon, Ill., to commence June 20, 1879, at 7:30 o'clock, p. m., and will continue over Sunday, composed of northern Ill., and southern Wis. A general invitation is extended to all who wish to attend. Come, brethren, come out to meeting and see each other once more and talk about the things of the kingdom once more, and encourage each other to continue in the good work and gain the things promised to the faithful ones. Ditweiler on the Illinois Central and the Northwestern railroads. Those coming by rail will enquire for John Anderson or Julius Anderson and they will be cared for.

By order of conference,
J. B. ARNOLD.

The Lord willing the semi-annual meeting of the Christian Association will be held at New Hartford, Butler county, Iowa, in connection with the tent meeting to be held there, commencing June 19, and holding over the second Sunday. We are informed brother E. V. Reed has promised to be there. A general invitation is extended to all who love the appearing of our Lord to be present, and it is hoped by the order of the board that all will come prepared to provide for themselves so that the new brethren in the immediate neighborhood of the meeting may not be overburdened.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Strong Government.

In the days of these things shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. Dan. ii. 44.

The expression "a strong government" is a popular one, and often used by politicians in their political discussions; it is frequently applied to the Russian empire, to the throne of Great Britain, to the German Empire, and has sometimes been misapplied to this government, which is, perhaps, one of the most purile and weakest governments on the face of the earth. If corruption and fraud, the prevalence of vice, intemperance and wholesale robbery in high places by its officials, as well as in the lowest dens, are sufficient cause to make it so. Her own politicians, her own press, are crying out shame, shame, every day, for some infamous act of which her officials are guilty. If righteousness exalteth a nation and sin is a reproach to any people, then most certainly this country lies under the fearful ban of that reproach, whatever it may consist of, and awaits the impending doom. We need not go through the governed—I might say ill-governed—masses of the people to see fearful crimes and cruelty, to behold scenes of degradation, vice and woe, to see various grades of dishonesty and deception, lying, stealing, knavery. But watch the department of state. Look at those who have control of the government, those who administer it unto the people, from the head center at Washington down to the smallest municipality, see the abominations that are daily perpetrated, notice, barely is there an act ever passed in the interest of the weak and the poor. In all their proceedings, in all their legislation, there is a want of equality and a lack of impartiality. The laws that are made are mostly oppressive to the masses, and are applied but with little regard to justice. The city of Constantiople, the seat of the Turkish empire, with polygamy, I believe, to-day stands on a higher plane with respect to justice in her courts, with respect to morality, temperance, truthfulness and honest dealing among themselves and others, than the city of Washington, the seat of this government; and I venture nothing against the truth to say that in the day "when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ," that, it will be more tolerable for Constantinople than for the city of Washington, notwithstanding her many church spires peering in the clouds, and her shining coin with the pious inscription "In God we trust," which is downright hypocrisy unless there is such a thing as both trusting in God and being in league with the devil.

The blessed Master has settled the question that we cannot serve God and mammon both at one and the same time, and David asks the question, but by way of affirmation, "shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee which frameth mischief by a law?" Psa. cxiv. 20. If God judged by the surface of things there might be some hope, but as judgment is to go down deep beyond the surface to the very bottom of the case, and as every work is to be tried as by fire, for the fire shall try every man's work as well as nations, kingdoms also (1 Cor. iii. 13-15). The chances of escape will be slim, if we are to pass through a flaming ordeal like this.

A strong government! We look around to-day, and look in vain to find one on this groaning world of ours, and we may only find it in promise there revealed on the prophetic page of God's word. And we do not find it in the golden head of the Babylonish empire, nor in the heart and arms of silver of Media Persia, nor in the belly and thighs of brass of Greece, nor in the legs and feet of iron and clay of Papal Rome, nor in the toes of this symbolic image signifying ten petty kingdoms, but we find it in its germ state, in its more incipient stages like the insignificant little grain of mustard seed (Matt. xiii. 31). It is found in the wonderful mystic stone, taken or produced without hands, that is, it had its inception, origin and outcome from God alone, it being no work or scheme of man.

At first sight this may, to many, appear the very picture of weakness, but the seed is planted in the ground, the ground is watered by the showers from heaven, the sun shines down upon it, it germinates, becomes the greatest among herbs, becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches, etc. Observe this is the work of God; so is the kingdom to which the similitude is drawn.

Again, the stone rolls on, it levels everything before it, grades the mountains, fills up the valleys, makes the crooked straight, and the rough places smooth; it moves onward breaking in pieces and grinding to powder all opposing powers, observe, "For he must reign till he put all enemies under his feet." 1 Cor. xv. 20, until it becomes a great mountain, and fills the whole earth. And the only reason we can assign for this wonderful work, that God is in it. We have often heard of a freak of nature, but this is (I say it with all due reverence) a freak of divinity sublime! Hallelujah!

Viewing the governments of earth from a human standpoint, taking in our scope of vision all their immense armies, their heavy and light artillery, their solid structures of defence, their magizine forts, their stores of amunition, their inconceivable material for war, their great generals expert in war, their great land forces and their potent navies, their countless number of horses and chariots, it would seem that none but a strong government would be able to cope with these powers—would be sufficient for the hour to overcome "the strong man armed." Luke xi. 21; Rev. xx. 1, 2. And it would be a hopeless case if God was not the motor power. Our sufficiency is of God who worketh all things according to his own good pleasure, and none can hinder. He taketh up the isles as a very little thing; all these nations and kingdoms to him are but as a drop in the bucket, and less than vanity, and in a moment, were it his pleasure, he could dash them to pieces like a potter's vessel. When that hour comes, when God takes to himself his great executive powers that have been suspended so long a time, these nations who think themselves somebody in the scale of strength and grandness, will be found to be nowhere, and their nobles and kings and mighty men will seek to hide themselves with shame from the presence of God's awful majesty, when he ariseth in the greatness of his might to shake terribly the earth. Isa. ii. 19; Mic. vii. 16, 17; Rev. vi. 15-17.

A strong government is a comparative term; in the general acceptation of the expression, however, it means a government of more than ordinary power and prestige, but it does not follow but what there is a stronger, as in the case of the strong man armed, representing all human governments and opposers to Christ's kingdom, but there is represented one coming that is stronger—the Lord Jesus in his kingdom—and overcomes the strong man.

Now, when we speak of God's government as being a strong one, we must understand it as being infinitely so from the simple fact that it is based upon the essential truth, righteous equality and justice. Hence it can be no stronger, leaving no room for any additional force. It will be impregnable to all extraneous forces and foreign bodies, strong as the pillars of heaven, firm as the rock of ages, lasting as the unnumbered years. The kingdom will be an everlasting kingdom. "Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever," etc., Psa. xlv. 6; cxlv, 13; Luke i. 33. Its king will be strong in the strength of the mighty God of Jacob. Observe, "And the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted and the branch that thou madest strong for thyself. . . . . Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, upon the Son of Man whom thou madest strong for thyself." Psa. lxxx. 15, 17, comp. 0, 12. See Rev. xix. for a display of the powers and strength of the king mounted on his white charger in his conquest over the nations.

It will be strong for the co-rulers and those that shall constitute the official department of the government—will be strong in the Lord and the power of his might—They will be clothed with power from on high, endowed with immortal energy, so that one shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight; a little one shall become a thousand and a small one a strong nation. Isa. xxx. 17. They shall bind their kings with chains and their nobles with fetters of iron; they shall execute the judgment written. This honor have all the saints. Psa. cxlix.

As the associated rulers with Christ will be especially of those of the overcomers who have kept his works unto the end, they will—as the promise—be invested with special divine prerogative and authority so as to have power over the nations, that if necessary for so harsh and vigorous discipline, they shall rule them with a rod of iron, and if the case should call for such treatment—"as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers," etc. Rev. ii. 26, 27.

This is a graphic exhibit of the irresistible strength of the incoming government. We see further where its power and majesty is brought to view as described in Psa. xl., where Zion's king is divinely enthroned. The word "set" here signifies not the act of anointing, as this occurred centuries ago with a view to this set time (Psa. cii. 13; Acts iv. 27; x. 38), but its legitimate effect—his installation, inauguration solemnly and publicly, acknowledged, qualified to fill the office. And here we see though the kings of the earth set (or band) themselves and the endless lake, counsel (or combine) together to oppose or attempt to frustrate the divine purpose, yet every such attempt must and will prove abortive, for God that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh, the Jehovah shall have them in derision, and they are exhorted to be wise and obedient to the throne or perish by the way, etc. Psa. xlv. is synonymous with this, where the Messiah is instructed of Jehovah to "gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O, most mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty; and in thy majesty ride prosperously because of meekness and righteousness, and thy right hand shall teach the terrible things. Thine arrows are sharp in the hearts of the king's enemies, whereby the people fall under thee," etc.

The 68th Psalm is another that points us to the day of Jehovah's power. It treats particularly upon the power which will be displayed in the removal and cleaning out of every kingdom, king and people which stands opposed to the reign of Christ. It refers us to the scenes of Sinai and other events of sacred history, when the Almighty scattered kings, and when kings of armies did flee apace, etc., when Jehovah did march through the wilderness, when the earth shook, the heavens also dropped at the presence of God; even Sinai itself was moved, etc. This Psalm is eminently prophetic in its character and closes with an exhortation to "Ascribe strength unto God; his excellency is over Israel and his strength is in the clouds (or heavens, marg.). O God thou art terrible out of thy holy places; the God of Israel is he that giveth strength and power unto his people. Blessed be God." Psa. lxxii. is synchronological with Psa. ii. but gives a more full and ample description of the strong government, and reveals the fact that a government to be strong is not so much in the matter of its material order and arrangement as it is of its moral and religious power, its intellectual, and the equal, just and righteous principles upon which it is conducted. These are the principles that underlie the whole fundamental structure which is essential truth, they being the so many varied hues like the varied hues of the rainbow, but forming only the rainbow.

"Judgment and justice is the habitation of thy throne, mercy and truth shall go before thy face." Psa. lxxxix. 14. This is another element which shall temper justice—the divine attribute of mercy. "In mercy shall the throne be established." Isa. xvi. 5. You will observe this Psalm opens like Psalm ii. with the investure of the Messiah with both judical and regal powers, and he proceeds at once to exercise the functions of his office. "He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and the poor with judgment. The mountains shall bring peace to the people. . . . He shall judge the poor of the people and save the children of the needy, (i. e., he will adjudicate the cause of the poor especially, and see that they shall share in equality of the immunities and blessings that a strong government may offer, and this is what the world is groaning for, but has not yet—a poor man's government,) and shall break in pieces the oppressor. . . . In his days shall the righteous flourish and abundance of peace." This is a condition of things that awaits the incoming reign of Messiah when he shall have dominion and when kings shall bring presents and offer gifts and fall down before him in reverential homage, and when he shall deliver the needy when he crieth, and the poor and he that hath no helper, and when he shall save the the poor and redeem their souls from deceit and violence, and precious shall their lives be in his sight.

Where have we a government to-day that is governing after the order and principles as here laid down, that takes this as its model and is copying after this picture as here drawn out? On the other hand are not all the governments in every existing form, the big's towering empires to the smallest republic, governing in the interest of the rich, the aristocracy, the monopolist, the capitalist and the millionaire? And, further, are they not all ruling in their own interest and for their own self-aggrandisement without any regard to the people's—ruling to sustain, maintain and perpetuate their own tottering, corrupt and rotten thrones and kingdoms, while the people are groaning with the oppressive burdens, the heavy tithes and taxations imposed upon them by these funguses, sponges and leeches upon the human race, who grind down the faces of the honest poor of the people into the dust.

O, has not the time well nigh arrived when the world is to be delivered from the impositions and ravages of this great confederate band of robbers and thieves, robbing under the garb of royalty and the false assumption of the divine right of kings; robbing them not only of their equal part of the earth and heaven's precious productions but of their varied rights in the scale of humanity; destroying their sense or proper conception of their co-equality one with another of the human family, reducing them in their own estimation to serfs and menials, and that they, the rulers, as a class of privileged and superior order of beings; and that this abominable system of robbing and thieving is not only confined to the civil governments and rulers, but it runs through all the ecclesiastical hierarchies on earth, and the people are still worse imposed upon by heavy burdens being laid upon them, and their souls are still worse in bondage in this—a religious—aspect, than in a civil or political point of view, and an unholy and hireling priesthood is doing as much to-day to curse the world as the unrighteous and ungodly governments; and of this we have an equal if not a larger share of it in this boasted land in which we live.

But enough, let it suffice. We can decipher plainly the writing on the wall. The days of these great evils are numbered. "Mene, Mene, Tekel Upharsin." The effect of every vision is at hand. The hour of deliverance draws near. The great Emancipator comes to knock off the chains from the people, and set the captives free. Jerusalem, which is in bondage with her children, is soon to burst at liberty. Zion will soon awake from the dust and sing aloud unto God. Judah will take down the harp from the willows along Babylon's dark stream, and centuries of silence will be broken by the revival of a sweeter melody than ever flowed from the musical tongues of angels on the memorable night of the annunciation, and Israel will return and come to Zion with songs of joy and gladness, and sighing and sorrow shall flee away. The dark clouds of a long night of degradation will be dispelled by the resplendent sunshine of God's shekinah glory. The waste and baren places shall become fertile and very fruitful. The dry and thirsty land where no water is shall become springs of water and the parched ground shall teem with verdant beauty for "He shall come down like showers upon the mown grass." "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad . . . and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose; it shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it. The excellency of Carmel and sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God."

The desolations of many generations shall be renewed and restored back to their more than primeval beauty and loveliness. In a word the glory of the the Lord shall be revealed and all flesh shall behold it together, and the saints of all ages with an innumerable company of angels and the church of the first-born which are written in heaven, with the people that are saved out of every tongue, kindred and nation will join in the mighty choir, and with one accord in heaven's organ peals will sing forth the joyful and heart-thrilling anthems of the word's grand jubilee.

Enthusiasm, Fanaticism and Freeman.

There is not a more melancholy object than a man who has his head turned with religious enthusiasm. A person who is crazed, though with pride or malice, is a sight very mortifying to human nature; but when the distemper arises from any indiscreet fervors of devotion, or to intense application of the mind to its mistaken duties, it deserves our compassion in a more particular manner. We may, however learn this lesson from it—that since devotion itself may disorder the mind, unless its heats are tempered with caution and prudence, we should be particularly careful to keep our reason as cool as possible and guard ourselves in all parts of life against the influence of passion and diseased imagination. Fanaticism may be defined as such an overwhelming impression of the ideas relating to the future world as disqualifies for the duties of life. From the very nature of fanaticism it is an evil of short duration. As it implies an irregular movement or an inflamed state of the passions, when these return to their natural state it subsides. A fanatic, religious or political, is a subject of strong delusions. Nothing that is violent will last long. The vicissitudes of the world and the business of life are admirably adapted to abate the excesses of religious enthusiasm. In a state where there are such incessant calls to activity, where want presses, desire allures, ambition inflames, there is little room to dread an excessive attention to the objects of an invisible futurity.

In the recent case of enthusiastic religious fanaticism by Mr. Freeman, of Pocasset, allusion has been made by some of the clergy, as well as scoffers, to the rash vow by Jephthah, recorded in the eleventh chapter of Judges, as giving sacred sanction to the religious superstition of Freeman, and justifying the barbarous murder of his innocent child in these words: "Then shall it be, that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering." The text in the original is vehayah Layhoorh; vehaalihihu oloh; the translation of which, according to the best Hebrew scholars, is this: "I will consecrate to the Lord, or I will offer it for a burnt-offering"; that is "if it be a thing fit for burnt offering, it shall be made one; if fit for the service of God, it shall be consecrated to him." That conditions of this kind must have been implied in the vow is evident enough; to have been made without them must have been the vow of a heathen or a madman. Suppose a bullock had met him, this could not have been made a burnt offering according to the Jewish laws; and if his neighbor or friend's wife, son or daughter had been returning from a visit to his family, his vow gave him no right over them. Besides, human sacrifices were an abomination to the Lord; and this was one of the grand reasons why God drove out the Canaanites, because they offered their sons and daughters in the fire, that is, made burnt offerings of them.

That Jephthah was a good man appears in the whole of his conduct; and that he was well acquainted with the law of Moses, which prohibited such sacrifice, is evident enough from his expostulation with the King and people of Ammon, verses 14 to 27. Therefore it must be granted that he never made that rash vow which many suppose he did, nor was he capable, if he had, of executing it in that most shocking manner which many modern Christian ministers are contending for. Those who contend that Jephthah did sacrifice his daughter attempt to justify the opinion from the barbarous usages of those times; but in answer to this, it may be justly observed that Jephthah was now under the influence of the Spirit of God (verse 29), and that the Spirit could not permit him to imbrue his hands in the blood of his own child, especially under pretence of offering a pleasing sacrifice to God, who is the Father of mankind, and the fountain of love, mercy and compassion. Jephthah could have redeemed her for ten shekels of silver, six dollars and twenty-five cents of our money (Lev. xxvii. 4, 5). Her father was greatly distressed to think his daughter, who was his only child, should be prevented from continuing his family in Israel. He might therefore well be grieved that his family was to become extinct in Israel. She cheerfully told her father to let her alone two months, "That I may go up and down the mountains and bewail my virginity;" or, in other words—to pay each of my friends a visit before I am shut up in the tabernacle. From verse 39th it appears that Jephthah's daughter was not sacrificed to God, but consecrated to him in a state of perpetual virginity; for the text says: "She knew no man, for this was a statute in Israel," tetchi chak beyishrael, viz., that persons thus consecrated to God should live in a state of unchangeable celibacy. Thus this celebrated passage is, without violence to any part of the text or to any proper rule of construction, cleared of all difficulty, and caused to speak a language consistent with itself and the nature of God. The case of Isaac before the giving of the Jewish law is irrelevant, for Isaac was not sacrificed, and it was only proposed to prove Abraham, or as a trial of his faith.

The Mishna, or traditional law of the Jews, is pointedly against such a sacrifice. "If a Jew should devote his son or daughter, his man or maid servant, who are Hebrews, the devotement would be void; because no man can devote what is not his own, or whose life he has not the absolute disposal of." Jephthah could not have even devoted his daughter to celibacy against her will, as it is evident from her history she was held in high estimation by the daughters of Israel for her filial duty and hapless fate, which they celebrated by a regular anniversary commemoration four days in the year. Judges xi. 40. I shall not attempt to answer any sneers by infidels, as answering sneers is like answering the wind; but I wish to express my sincere regret that the learned men in the pulpit have not endeavored to instruct us laymen in harmony with revealed knowledge contained in the old and new dispensations; but many of them have either wilfully or ignorantly misapprehended the Scriptures, while others have labored hard in the vineyard to make sectarian capital out of the insane vagaries of a poor, deluded, ignorant, crazed, superstitious fanatic.

There is a cypress tree at Somma, in Lombardy, Europe, which is said to be the oldest on record on the continent. There is reason to believe this tree was in existence at the time of Julius Cæsar, forty-two years before Christ, and is 1,911 years old. It is 166 feet high, and measures twenty feet in circumference at the height of one foot from the ground. When Napoleon made the great road over the Simplon he deflected the line to avoid injuring the tree.

THE RESTITUTION.

A. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 18, 1879.

ONE HALF the current year is nearly gone. We hope times will improve financially with the ingathering of a promising harvest, and that our patrons will not forget the pressing wants of our paper.

SOME conference reports are entirely too lengthy. We hope our brethren will take the size of our paper into consideration, and so condense communications of this nature as not to extend beyond the space of a column.

FROM the dissatisfaction that numbers of our brethren express in regard to controversial and speculative articles, we shall be compelled to ask our contributors to write on subjects of a practical nature, calculated to benefit the living. The Judge of all the earth will take care to do right in the case of the multitudes who have died without a knowledge of the gospel. Let us do as did the apostles—expend our time, means, and energies, in trying to persuade men and women of our own generation to embrace the gospel and be saved.

The Ministry.

We find the following pungent and truthful remarks at the conclusion of an article in the Bible Banner. They are specially applicable to many in our own times. A worldly, godless ministry is the bane of our age:

"An unrighteous ministry is a dire and deadly curse, and the putting men into such an office that they may eat a piece of bread, or earn an easy living, entails the bitterest fruits. Wolves in a flock of sheep are not more destructive than godless and graceless ministers in the church of Christ. The pulpit swarms with men who cannot preach only as they steal the thoughts of others, and who devour the substance and divide the energies of the church while faithful and godly laborers are unaided and uncared for. And this ceremony of "ordination" which entitles a man to wear a white cravat and pronounce a benediction, and disqualifies him for sawing wood and digging potatoes, has made the ministry a place for drones instead of a battle ground where mighty men of God, valiant for the truth, can war a good warfare, and win lost souls as trophies of the Savior's grace.

O man of God, preach the word! But if you have not the word to preach, plant potatoes and raise corn. A good hill of beans is better than a poor sermon; and a bushel of potatoes that men can eat, is worth more than a dozen sermons which they can neither understand nor digest, and which lack the nutriment of the word of God."

The Kirwin Letters To the Right Rev. John Hughes, Bishop of New York.

LETTER IV.

Transition from Popery to Infidelity—Inquiry awakened.—Abstinence from Meats.—The Mass.—Confession.—Transubstantiation.—Religion vanishes.

My Dear Sir,—In my last two letters I have stated to you some of the causes of my early misgivings as to yours being a true Church, and as to its holding the true faith. These causes I might multiply indefinitely, for you well know it to be a law of the human mind that, when its confidence is once shaken, it sees causes of suspicion even in things true and honest. In my first letter I stated to you that, when I deliberately rejected the authority and teachings of your church, I became an infidel, and my object in the present letter is to reveal to you the process through which my mind passed in its transition from popery to infidelity. I believe that your reverence will pronounce it a very natural one.

On reaching the years of maturity, my mind was a perfect blank as to all religious knowledge; and if instruction is ever given by your church or priests, my advantages were peculiarly good for receiving it. Indeed, I was even talked of as a candidate for Maynooth. While my mind was filled with superstitious notions concerning meats and penances, and external observances and legends, it was utterly ignorant of the Bible. With my Missal I was somewhat familiar; I said the Catechism when I was confirmed at the age of nine or ten, and that was the amount of my religious education. At the age of eighteen years the Catechism was forgotten and the Missal was neglected; and as my conscience was uneducated, and my mind unfurnished with religious principles, the only test of truth left me was my common sense. I then became the associate of companions of Protestant education, who would sometimes ask me the reason of this and that observance, and not being able to give any, as none were ever given me, I was frequently put to the blush. I candidly state to you that it was in this way I was first led to bring to the test of my common sense, then my only standard, some of the doctrines and rites of your church; and this reveals the reason why your priesthood is so intensely concerned that Catholic children should be guarded from all contact with those of Protestant education. The spirit of inquiry is contagious, and Pope, bishops, and priests fear it worse than the plague. Its indulgence, you know, either is, or leads to, mortal sin. Let me briefly state to you some of the effects of this spirit of inquiry upon me.

From my youth up I was taught to abstain from all meats on Fridays and Saturdays. Why on these days more than any other I was never told. And if by mistake I was involved in the violation of this law, I felt a burden upon my conscience of which confession could only relieve me. Circumstances led me to inquire into this matter. I saw good papists eating eggs, fish, and getting drunk on these days, but this was no violation of the law of the church! Yet, if these persons should eat meat of any kind, or use gravy in any way, their conscience were troubled, and they must perform penance! This led me to ask, Is this reasonable? If I may eat meat on Thursdays why not on Fridays? Can God, in things of this kind, make that to be a sin on one day which is not on another? I saw, also, persons for whose moral worth I had the highest regard, eating meat on those days, and without any injury! And I came to the conclusion that your regulations upon this matter were unreasonable, and rejected them. And, as far as I now remember, this was my first step toward light and freedom.

Whether our course is upward toward the region of light, or downward toward that of darkness, one step always prepares for another. Devoted to reading at this period of my life, I perused, without discrimination, every thing that came in my way. Some book or tract, now forgotten, gave rise to some inquiries as to the Mass. I asked, what does it mean? I could not tell, though for years a regular attendant upon it. Why does the priest dress so? What book does he read from when carried now to his right and now to his left? What means those candals burning at noonday? Why do I say prayers in Latin which I understand not? Should I not know what I am saying when addressing my Maker? Why bow down, and strike my breast, when the little bell rings? What does it all mean? The darkness of Egypt rested upon these questions. I thus reasoned with myself: God is a spiritual and intelligent being, and he requires an intelligent worship. What worship I render him in the Mass, I know not. My intelligent worship only is acceptable to him, and is beneficial to me. I am a rational being, and I degrade my nature and insult my Maker by offering to him a worship in which neither my reason nor His intelligence is consulted. Having come to this conclusion, I gave up the Mass as a superstitious form, well enough fitted for an idol, but unfitted to be rendered by a rational being to the Infinitely intelligent Jehovah. I have never been to Mass since, save out of curiosity to see how an ignorant people can be edified by what seems to me the most unmeaning and farcial of all the rites that ever man has devised; and you know, sir, that, with all devotion and honesty, a Catholic may wait on your masses until his locks are as white as your surplice, and then pass into eternity without one single spiritual idea upon the subject of religion, resolving it all into external observances. To test this point to the satisfaction of a friend, I recently asked an aged Irish papist, with whom I was acquainted, some questions as to the way to be saved, and no South Sea Islander could exhibit more entire ignorance on the whole subject.

When I came to the above conclusion on the subject of the Mass, I experienced no great difficulty as to other matters which passed rapidly in review before me. Must I go to confession? My prejudices said yes; my reason said no; and my logic was simply as follows: If I truly repent of my sins, God will forgive me; if I do not the priest can not absolve me; and I spurned as unreasonable, and as an insult to my common sense, your terrible doctrine that "every Christian is bound under pain of damnation, to confess to a priest all his mortal sins, which after diligent examination he can possibly remember; yea, even his most secret sins—his very thoughts; yea, and all the circumstances of them which are of any moment." I ask you, sir, if this dogma of the Council of Trent is not a horrible dogma? It suspends upon confessing to a priest what a bible suspends on believing in Christ! Do you, sir, believe it? It is too monstrous a dogma to impose on an ignorant people.

With yet greater abhorence I gave up the doctrine of transubstantiation. As explained by Dr. Challoner, in his "Catholic Christian Instructed," chap. v., it means "that the bread and wine are changed by the consecration into the body and blood of Christ; and are so changed that Christ himself, true God and true man, is truly, really and substantially present in the sacrament." With this doctrine in view, I went to witness the administration of the Eucharist, as you call it. I went to Saint Peter's, in Barclay street. The communicants drew around the altar upon their knees. With a little box in his hand, the priest passed from one to the other, taking a wafer smaller than that used in sealing a letter, from the box, and placing it upon the extended tongue of the communicant. I was always taught that the teeth must not touch the wafer—that it must melt upon the tongue. This I find to be the law of your church. I witnessed the ceremony, as I had often done before. I retired from the scene asking these questions: Is that little wafer the real body and blood of Christ? Does the priest, in that little box not as large as a snuff-box, carry two or three hundred real bodies of Christ? Do these communicants, each in their turn, eat the real body and blood of Christ? My dear sir, I cannot express to you the violence with which my mind rejected the absurdity. Look at it in what light you may, it is abhorent to our common reason; it gives the lie to every sense with which God has endowed us. It is a wicked imposition. It is an impious priestly hoax, which, if practised by a juggler, would subject him to the penalties of the law against blasphemy.

Having gone through this process, not with a light and trifling, but with a serious mind, my prejudices rising in stormy rebellion against my convictions, I raised my eyes and behold my religion was gone! The priest was a juggler and his religion a fable! Every thing that I had ever learned from parent and priest to esteem as religion was now rejected as false; and not knowing but that this was all of religion that was in the world, I had no alternative but infidelity. I had no test of truth but my reason, and when I brought your system to that, I was compelled to reject it, not only as false, but as a monstrous absurdity, and with it all religion.

Nor have I, dear sir, any hesitation in saying that the process of my own mind from Popery to infidelity is that through which multitudes of minds have passed and are now passing. To an inquiring mind, which knows nothing of the Bible, infidelity is the fruit of Popery. Hence, in Papal countries, while the masses are superstitious and immoral, the intelligent and educated are infidel. If they sustain the vulgar religion, it is for reasons of state. Hence the infidelity of France, of Spain, of Italy. At the present hour, the mind of these countries is more infidel than Papal; and this is true of every country on the globe where your religion prevails. It makes the masses superstitious, and the intelligent infidels.

And permit me to say, my dear sir, in reference to yourself, that I have far too high a regard for your intelligence to admit for a moment that you believe in the absurd doctrines which your church teaches. Like the ancient priests of Egypt, you must have one class of opinions for the people, and another for yourself. Will you say that this is harsh and uncharitable? None knows better than yourself that history affirms it of Popes, Cardinals and Bishops that have lived before you. Men far higher than you in your church have laughed all its doctrines to scorn, and do so at this hour. They remain Bishops, Archbishops, or Cardinals for the sake of the loaves and fishes. On no other ground can I possibly account for your remaining an hour in the Roman Catholic church.

"As the Stars for Ever and Ever."

The men and women who have been God's light-bearers in a world of darkness shall be his lights eternally. The fame and glory of Apostles and prophets, evangelists and martyrs, reformers and confessors, and the honor of those who have stood, labored and suffered for the truth of God in every age, shall never wane, never pass away. All the mysterious changes of the day of judgment will only increase their exaltation and make their names the more illustrious. Every minister, missionary, teacher and instrument of the enlightenment and the lost if faithful on earth, is to have eternal place in heaven, luminous as the stars and for ever beyond all the vicissitudes, defilements, disasters or accidents of time. Oh, the glory, the sublimity, the untold dignities and honors to be inherited by the humble and self-denying teachers of salvation! To be set by God's own hands in God's own heavens! to shine as everlasting stars! to sparkle as illustrious gems in the firmament of Jehovah's power! to be the glory-bearers of his eternal excellency! to shine his radiance through celestial spaces! to be God's imperishable lights for heaven itself, his stars for ever and ever! What a portion to be put within the reach of poor feeble children of the earth! How the objects of this world's ambition dwindle and shrink in comparison! What toils, what sufferings, what sacrifices of self is it not worth! What is all the joy, comfort, honor, wealth and glory that can possibly be crowded into this brief earthly life which it would not be a blessed privilege to lay down for such a destiny! To be but a fragment, a jot a particle of the firmament of God is a glory fit to be purchased at any price; but to be its eternal stars, the very jewels of the realm of light, the objects of undying interest and admiration in supernal worlds—here is a wealth of magnificence by the side of which all other greatness is as nothing.—Dr. J. A. Seiss

The Leap into Niagara.

The Buffalo Courier gives some interesting particulars of the recent bold leap of H. P. Peer from the new Suspension Bridge over the Niagara River. The many spectators, it says, saw before them a neat-looking man attired in marine hose and a suit of tights with blue trunks. Fitting tightly about his hips and close to his body and passing up just under his arm-pits was a funnel-shaped, inflated rubber life-preserver, constructed after an arrangement known only to himself. Strips of cotton cloth were tightly banded around his hips and loins. A broad sponge covered his mouth and nostrils, and his ears were filled with the same material, the sponge being first moistened with spirits. Over his shoulders was a leather sling or brace, which passed behind in the form of a loop, having a small brass ring in the centre. When all was in readiness the signal was given to the boatman in the river below to get ready, and then Peer adjusted his sponge protectors, and crept over the rail upon his scaffold, where he sat down for a brief time.

After a paper bag had been flung to the breeze to test its force, Peer lowered himself between the two boards of his scaffolding, and hung first by both hands and then by one. The suspense probably will never be forgotten by those who were waiting for the drop. After a moment's delay Peer again took hold with both hands, straightened himself out and with a "good-bye," let his hands drop close to his sides, and went down like an arrow. The people, who had been reclining on the ground, jumped to their feet, and stood fairly transfixed with mingled feelings of dread and suspense. Peer shot directly down with almost lightning-like velocity, and looking like a small boy to those above, disappeared with a great splash feet foremost, beneath the river Niagara, sending the water three or four feet into the air above the line where he entered.

The feat was gracefully performed. With all the strain on one's nerves it was a pretty sight, and immensely interesting. He did not re-appear so quickly as was expected, and the people exclaimed, "He's gone! He's killed!" However, within four or five seconds his head and then the upper part of his body appeared above the water, and with his hand he flung off the balance wire which had become entangled about his face. He came up about fifty feet below the place where he entered, and, starting to swim, went down a short distance below the bridge, was picked up by Thomas Conroy, the guide, and two other men who were in a boat.

When asked what sensations he experienced he said: "None in particular as I went down; nothing more than if I had jumped ten instead of one hundred and ninety-two feet. I think I must have gone down about eleven feet into the water when I encountered the under current, but I did go into it. As it caught me, it threw me flat on my back, and in that position I was carried very swiftly about twenty-two feet between the two currents, and the feeling to my back was just as though I had been drawn quickly over a rough board table, but no evil effects followed. I had my eyes open, and looking up could see the bridge through the water. My life-preserver saved me after I went under the water. Realizing that I must be about my business I threw up my hands, paddled a little and instantly rose to the surface."

Baron Lionel Rothschild, the head of the great Jewish financial house, died June 3d. He was a grandson of the founder of the business. The City of London several times elected him as its representative in Parliament, but for many years he refrained from sitting, because he could not conscientiously take the oath, which contained the words "On the true faith of a Christian." In 1858 these words were omitted from the oath and he took his seat. He was born in 1808.

CORRSPONDENCE.

Report of Quarterly Meeting.

Pursuant to notice the brethren assembled at the Antioch Meeting House, five miles south of Plymouth, Marshall county, Ind., on Friday, June 6, 1879. Preaching on Friday by Brother H. Barnhill.

Saturday morning the meeting was called to order and listened to a discourse by Brother J. M. Stephenson. Saturday afternoon Brother J. L. Wince gave a lesson in practical Christianity, followed in the evening by Brother A J. Eychaner in one of his "talks" to the brethren.

Sunday the time was occupied in the forenoon by H. V. Reed, in the afternoon by Brother W. J. B. Fennimore, and in the evening by Brother D. T. Halstead.

About one thousand people were in attendance on Sunday. The weather was all that could be wished. Refreshments were spread in the grove about the house. The best of good feeling prevailed, and when the parting hour arrived, all felt that the meeting had been a resting-place on the journey of life, and resolved to press forward with new vigor and life—giving God and His Son Jesus Christ the glory. Three witnessed the good confession and were baptized Monday morning.

The Annual Conference will be held at Rensselaer, Ind., in August, of which due notice will be given.

Conference Report.

The twenty-first annual conference of Michigan was held at Hammond, Kent Co., from May 20, to June 1. The meeting was called to order at 7 o'clock p. m. Thursday, May 29, by Brother E. Miller, when Bro. D. T. Halstead from Rensselaer, Ind., read from the 30th verse to the close of the xv. chapter of 1 Cor.; after offering thanks he gave an interesting discourse from Phil. iv. 8. He was followed by Bro. Miller, who spoke to the point upon Christian character. The congregation, though small, was much edified by the two exhortations.

The social meeting of an hour and a half which was held every morning at nine o'clock, was well attended and the time profitably occupied with cheering testimonies for the truth.

The preaching was divided between brethren Halstead, Kendall and Miller. In the absence of Bro. E. Chesebrough, president, Bro. B. Woodward, was elected president pro tem, who appointed as committee of arrangements brethren L. Chesebrough, H. C. Hammond and K. Woodward.

Friday, 10:30 a. m., Bro. Halstead read from Luke xviii. and gave a discourse on the subject of prayer.

1 p. m., Bro. H. R. Kendall preached from Rom. iv. 11.

7:30 p. m., Bro. Miller gave an exhortation to the brethren to make their calling and election sure, and to the unconverted to come to Christ that they might have life.

Saturday 10 a. m., Bro. Kendall spoke a short time from John vii. 37, when the business of the conference was taken up. The secretary and treasurer made their reports which were accepted and adopted. Bro. E. Hoyt as state evangelist made a brief report of work performed by him, which was accepted. The officers elected were B. Woodward, president; D. F. Spencer, secretary; Wm. McGrodon, treasurer; executive committie, E. Hoyt, E. Miller, J. A. Simonds, H. H. Chamberlain, M. Daniels, H. C. Hammond, J. Lemmon, G. W. Coats. It was voted that Bro. Hoyt preach the opening and Bro. Simonds the annual discourse at our next annual conference.

1 p. m., Bro. Miller gave his annual discourse, the subject being the warfare that God would rage against the nations subsequent to the return of Christ, using Israel as his battle-ax in subduing them politically, but not morally, hence the work of the saints teaching them righteousness during the thousand years after which Satan is loosed for a little season, a short conflict ensues but is soon ended by fire from heaven. Now God's purpose is consummated. Sin is blotted out, the righteous shine forth like the sun at noonday. His proof was Psalms ii.; Ezek. xxxviii.; xxxix.; Zach. xii.; xiv.

7:30 p. m., Bro. Halstead showed from Heb. xii. 23, 24, 25, that when Christ returned he would reign on David's throne, as foretold by the prophets. He was followed by Bro. O. R. L. Crozier, who spoke to the point in regard to the threats made against the Bible by skeptics in these last days.

10:30 Sunday, Bro. Kendall spoke on the authenticity of the Scripture. The subject was creditably handled and gave general satisfaction. His text was Heb. i. 1. The ordinance of baptism was next attended to, when one brother and six sisters were planted in the likeness of Christ's death and arose to walk in newness of life.

7:30 p. m. Bro. Halstead gave a discourse from Col. i. 18, confuting the idea of the pre-existence of Christ. His argument to the minds of many, was conclusive. The meeting was concluded by the breaking of bread in remembrance of our Lord's death.

The conference was well attended by brethren from all parts of the state, and was in every way harmonious, and the hospitable manner in which every one was provided for, reflects credit upon the four families of believers who bore the burden of it. Our acquaintance with Bro. Halstead was indeed very agreeable. From his genial manner and Christian deportment we learned to esteem him as a worthy brother, and an able exponent of the truth. At a meeting of the executive board Bro. B. Woodward was appointed state evangelist, and any one desiring his labors in that direction will address him at Hammond, Kent County.

D. F. SPENCER, Secretary.

NEWS ITEMS.

Intelligence received from Irkutsk, Russia, the 2nd inst., states that the Amoor River and its tributaries have overflowed. Much damage had been done, and it is thought that a famine will ensue.

Official reports from Cashmere say that it is impossible to exaggerate the distress the famine is causing there. The Maharajah of this Province, at the urgent request of the Viceroy of India, is proceeding to Serinagur, the capital city of Cashmere, to superintend the organization of relief. Three thousand five hundred tons of grain are now in transit to the valley of Cashmere.

The latest accounts from Singapore state that the volcanoes in both the eastern and the western districts of Java are in full activity. A broad river of fiery lava was flowing from the crater of Smeru down to the southern coast, illuminating all the neighborhood at night with its ruddy light. The Gedeh mountain was ejecting an enormous amount of cinders, which were completely covering all the surrounding district.

Religious Liberty in Siam.—The King of Siam has proclaimed religious liberty in its dominions. This proclamation is described as all that one could wish. No obstacle to the profession or propagation of Christianity is to be tolerated. No similar proclamation in modern times, it is said, has been more complete, and in no country is there a more open door for the truth than in Siam. This is the first instance of a heathen nation proclaiming religious liberty.

PARIS, June 11.—The Prince of Orange, heir apparent to the throne of the Netherlands, who has been for some time ill in this city, died here about 11 o'clock this morning. The Prince of Orange was born on the 4th of September, 1840.

GENEVA, June 13.—The Great Council of Geneva has refused to discuss the re-establishment of capital punishment. Not a single voice was raised in its favor.

LONDON, June 13.—A Paris dispatch says a rumor finds currency in Cairo that the Khedive is inclined to abdicate. The correspondent considers the rumor not surprising, as the Khedive would thereby secure the succession to his son, and a pension to himself.

The waters of the Po in Italy are still rising. In the Merandola district 13,000 hectares have been submerged, and 500,000 quintals of grain, 600,000 quintals of forage and 5,000 head of cattle destroyed. Inundations on the Adda are also threatened. There have been destructive hail storms in the north of Italy.

Freshets in the upper part of the Magdalena, New Grenada, S. Several shocks of earthquake occurred in Costa Rica, Central America, on May 29, and at 1:30 a. m., on May 30, which seemed to have been general throughout the republic. No damage was done in Punta Arenas, where the buildings are of wood. In San Jose the cathedral was partially destroyed and several other buildings damaged. At Greica the building of a sugar estate was blown down. In Aspinwall and Panama slight shocks of earthquake were felt on the 29th ult.

More than 100,000 pilgrims visit every year the monastery at Kiev—the richest and most famous of Russian shrines. It was from the monks of this monastery that Alexander I., during his wars with Napoleon, borrowed 1,000,000 roubles, giving for the loan his personal bond. When his son Nicholas came to the throne, he soon visited Kiev and was presented by the monks with this bond, but he begged them with much emotion to preserve the valuable souvenir with the greatest care.

POETRY.

Not as Men Judge.

L. M. BURGESS.

Not as men judge, judgeth He
Whom our hearts adore,
He who knoweth all our thoughts
Pardons evermore.
Tho' so stained with guilt we be,
Tho' despised of men,
He can pour His royal blood
And wash us clean again.

Not as men judge, judgeth He,
Blessed be His name!
He has borne all suffering,
Has endured all shame.
All our weaknesses are His,
For He takes them all;
All things possible with Him,
Ne'er in vain we call.

Not as men judge, judgeth He,
Gracious, loving Lord;
He can in the vilest see
Something to record.
With His gentle loveliness,
Still can He receive
Those who every hour of life
His sweet spirit grieve.

Not as men judge, judgeth He!
Well for us 'tis so.
All our weakness and despair
He doth fully know.
He can turn with pitying love
Where men would but derice,—
Lift us out of deepest woe,—
'Twas for this He died.

The Good Confession—A Commandment, 1 Tim. vi. 14.

J. P. WEETHE.

In these days of change and show, when many divine injunctions are becoming obsolete, we do well to keep the one named at the head of this article. Paul gave it to Timothy who was commended to observe it without spot, unrebukable till the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

That confession was first made by the Savior, before Caiaphas and the Jewish council, under the procuratorship of Pontius Pilate. "And the high priest answered and said unto him. I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ the Son of God. Jesus saith unto him. Thou hast said; nevertheless I say unto you, hereafter shall Jesus the Son of man sitting on the right hand of Power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Matt. xxvi. 63, 64.

By this it would appear that the answer was given under oath. Mark's record is as follows: "Again the high priest asked him, and said unto him. Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am; and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Mar. xiv. 61, 62.

This Confession contains two elements: 1st, the avowal of his character—I am the Son of God: 2nd, I am coming again as the judge of the living and the dead, to establish my kingdom. For this profession he expired on the cross. The element most offensive to the Jews was: "Ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of Power and coming in the clouds of heaven; for it taught them that he assumed to be that personage seen by their prophet Daniel. "One like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him, and there was given unto him dominion, glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan. vii. 13, 14.

2. Timothy's Confession, was evidently a repetition of Christ's profession, as will appear, by investigating 1 Tim. vi. 12, 13, 14. To Timothy the declaration of Jesus was glad tidings, with his two chief elements brought to view; 1st. Its faith, Jesus is the Son of God. 2d. Its hope, his coming again, as Judge and King, to demonstrate the truth of his profession. Paul commanded Timothy to combat the good combat. Of these two elements of the gospel, (faith and hope,) which brings conflict and persecution?

Demons declared their knowledge of the Savior's character. "Jesus, we know thee, who thou art, the holy One of God." But this avowal of his Sonship, though exceedingly offensive to the Jews might have been tolerated, had it not been followed by his claim to the kingdom on his return, to be governed in all coming ages by Jesus of "Nazareth," (out of which there could arise no prophet) was too degrading. Our Messiah will not be a Nazarene, consequently cannot be this "Fellow." Our Christ will be of Bethlehem.

Earthly potentates care but little whose Son Jesus is, so that he lets their dominions alone. They are willing that the "Nobleman" should have a kingdom, if he does not return to claim any part of the earth. The idea that Jesus will take to him his great power, and reign is exceedingly offensive.

The stone kingdom is filling the whole earth, on the ruin of all other monarchies, is the dreaded, the hated event. Timothy's combat was about the hope of the gospel, the return of Christ to assume universal dominion. This will appear from Paul's further injunctions. "Lay hold on eternal life where unto thou art called." The element of eternal life is to be given at the return of the Messiah.

3. Command. Our translation of 1 Tim. vi. 12, reads: "And hast professed a grand profession before many witnesses." και ωμολογησας την καλην ομολογιαν ενωπιον πολλων μαρτυρων. Macknight has the following: ωμολογησας, being the second person of the first aorist of the indicative, it is put here for imperative; as is evident from the preceding clauses, which are all in the imperative mood. This our translators have overlooked." Timothy was to profess the good profession before many witnesses; he was to fight for, and keep this commandment, with its unpopular element, (hope of the gospel) pure, and himself and successors "unrebukable" till that glorious epiphany.

Paul urges Timothy to combat this good combat. He was to declare before all men, the character and coming of Jesus.

4. History of the commandment. In the Apostolic age, and to the middle of the second century, the character and coming of Christ were dwelt upon, as two cardinal doctrines of Christianity. Having but recently ascended, with the promise that he would return, that coming was their hope. On the first day of the week, in the loaf they were reminded of his advent.

The confession of Jewish and Gentile converts were necessarily unlike. The Jewish nation was looking for a Messiah. His character had been fully defined by their prophets. So soon as one of that nation was convinced that Jesus of Nazareth by his words and deeds, filled the prophetic enunciation, he confessed his full conviction that he was the anticipated Messiah. The Jews were well instructed in the Messiah's royalty, they had overlooked this humiliation. The confession required of them an abandonment of Judaism.

The Gentiles had no instruction in the Abrahamic promise, except such as become Jewish proselytes, these had been educated in the faith of the Hebrew family, and had, therefore, Jewish ideas. The Gentile mind, not previously taught the Jewish notions, became convinced through another process. Their ideas were new, and mostly elementary. They heard the testimony relative to Jesus of Nazareth, what he said and did, and being convinced that he arose from the dead, that he ascended, and that he would return and set up a kingdom, they received him as their risen and coming Lord. These cardinal doctrines they then advocated. No Gentile, (except Jewish proselyte) made the confession of Jesus "THE CHRIST." "The Christ," was a term of identity for Jewish converts only.

To the Jew it was the confession of identity, as if he should say: Our prophets taught us to expect a Messiah—a deliverer. Our Divine ritual instructed us in the same truth. The time is come for his manifestation. Now, from what I learn relative to Jesus of Nazareth, I believe that he is "the Christ"—the one anticipated. Who but a Jew, or one educated in Hebrew ideas, could make such a confession?

During the Apostasy.—As the apostasy grew, and assumed control of the Christian's ideas, the desire for Christ's return declined, till, in the dark ages, this primitive hope of the church ceased to be proclaimed, or known. The Bible being taken from the people, the priests of the apostasy were the only teachers. Worldly interests kept back the hope of the coming of our Lord.

In the Reformation.—The Bible being restored to the people, this great cardinal doctrine or the Advent began its new life. Still it has never fully recovered from the effects of the apostasy. A large class of the Protestant membership has never allowed the blessed hope to have its primitive influence over their lives. Having no such hope to purify, nor any love for his appearing, they have substituted a new watch-word (more venit—death is coming) instead of the ancient one (Dominus noster venit—our Lord is coming.) During the present century, an attempt has been made to restore primitive Christianity in its spirit, doctrines and forms. The form propounded to the candidate for immersion is the following: "Do you believe with all your heart that Jesus Christ is the Son of God?" This question is put to persons of all ages, and of various degrees of intellectual and moral development; to children of nine and ten years, and to others equally uninstructed. To this practice we object; not because we desire to fix any limits to God's forgiving power, but simply, for the reason, that it is generally, without meaning; and, under the circumstances, without Scripture authority.

"Jesus Christ is the Son of God."—Who among our children or youth has given this great question a serious thought? It is a doctrine taught us from our infancy. Our minds have never doubted it. Jesus of Nazareth is a house-hold name. God and his Son are among our first thoughts. They are the foundation of the Christian temple. No Jew was ever more faithfully taught the character of their coming Messiah than our children are taught the character of Jesus of Nazareth. When a candidate, thus instructed, is asked if he believes (fully—with all his heart) that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, what can hinder him (wicked as a demon) from answering, I do? I have always been taught it, and have never called the truth of it in question; what lack I yet? Everything that constitutes a Christian. Demons went that far—"Jesus, we know thee."

Jesus and the apostles reasoned with the Jews out of their Scriptures. Christ taught them that he was the Christ, that was predicted by their prophets. He appealed to his words and his works as ample proof. That they might not stumble over his humility, he pointed them to his future coming and glory; and on the holy mount, made known to a few his future power and Divine manifestation.

After the resurrection and ascension of Christ, the disciples first taught the Jews, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ—the Messiah of the prophets. The Jewish nation had put him to death as an impostor. He is now reported as risen, and they are now commanded to believe that the person that had been put to death on the cross had arisen and was truly the Son of God. When convinced of the truth of the message, it required an entire change of their views and affections, an abandonment of Judaism, their former faith and the religion of their fathers; the confession that Jesus of Nazareth was the promised Messiah, and heir to David's throne; and that he would return again to raise the dead, subdue his enemies and establish the age kingdom. To them the confession became the hope of the promise (Acts xxvi. 6.) The confession required a Jew to abandon his religion. This he would not do unless thoroughly convinced of its error, and of the truth of the message of the new religion. This confession contained the leading thought—Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ of the prophets, the hope of Israel, the person in whom all the promises centre.

He would become a new creature, with new hopes, and new desires. Instead of having hope in a coming Messiah, it is, in Jesus of Nazareth the come, and the coming Messiah. He that had this hope purified himself. The good confession made and to be handed down without any spot on its face, which Paul enjoined on Timothy, very evidently had in it the blessed hope—the coming of the Savior. This will fully appear by reading his epistolary instructions. Timothy had been taught as a Jew. The Hebrew expectation was fully known from his grandmother Lois, and his mother Eunice. From a child he had known the sacred Scriptures (Old Testament) which foretold the character of the Messiah, his miracles, doctrines, death, burial, resurrection, ascension, priesthood, return and reign. Being taught by Paul, Jesus of Nazareth, as the true and anticipated Messiah, the Son of God, he became a convert, and a full and intelligent confession was the result.

Timothy was carefully taught the Jewish hope—a Messiah to restore all things! He now professes faith in the Restitution to take place under Jesus of Nazareth, on his return.

The hope of the "promise" assumes vitality in Christ the Son of God, and Timothy is commanded to fight for it, and hand it down without spot, and unrebukable, till hope expires in the blessed epiphany.

The ancient confession, therefore, contained the two elements of the gospel, its faith and its blessed hope.

Does the modern confession contain these gospel elements? Has the profession, as now given and accepted, within it, the ancient Jewish thought—the hope of the promise?

Much is said of faith as a saving element of the gospel. Modern pulpits are vocal with what is termed the faith of the apostles, while their hope is seldom taught or heard in private; not mindful of the fact that faith, without hope, is lifeless.

The "blessed hope" is now the neglected gospel element. It is the element of martyrdom, hated by the nations, and forsaken by the masses of professed Christians.

Here comes a modern candidate for Christian baptism; a gay young girl of sixteen summers, gives her delicate hand to a minister, unmarried and foppish, it may be, for such ministers are abundant. After some remarks she is told to arise and make her confession—the good confession. The minister, taking her by the hand, says in an authoritative tone: Do you believe, with all your heart (fully) that Jesus Christ is the Son of God? What idea does this young lady attach to the expression Jesus Christ the Son of God? What instruction has she received? Has she been blessed, like Timothy, with a faithful mother and grandmother? or has she grown up without any instruction, as to what kind of a person Jesus Christ the Son of God is? There may not be one apostolic thought in her head; yet, since she has made the confession in the form of the injunction, she puts on Christ by immersion.

Our objection is not so much against the form as it is to the subject and administrator.

What meaning does the administrator attach to the confession? Does the profession contain the "hope of the promise?" has it any hope? Has he instructed the candidate in the "blessed hope?" Has she its love in her heart? has either the desire for the coming of Jesus Christ, the Son of God?

With the masses received into the Christian church, the hope of Christ's appearing to take unto him "great power and reign," is the "great unknown" (terra incognita) of the blessed gospel.

The modern confession that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, is without a hope. It may see the cross, but the crown is out of view. Such a confession may suit the "evil servants," and "the foolish virgins" that see neither the coming Master nor the bridegroom, but it does not meet the wants of the "faithful servant," nor "the wise virgins." The hope of the advent and crown, is an inspiring, a purifying element. It "looks for" and "earnestly desires" Christ's return. It "loves" his appearing; it is the patiently waiting element. Our age is one of pleasure-loving; it utilizes worldly things. It feeds the mind on husks.

The hope of salvation is our helmet; faith is our shield; by these the intellect and heart are protected. Without these we are exposed to the corruptions of the world. We must have the hope of the gospel. We must live for, and in the age to come.

The apostasy is no where more distinctly seen than in the utter neglect of Paul's command to Timothy. Where is now the love for, and earnest desire of Christ's coming? Banished from the masses of modern Christians. True, they may admit that Jesus will return, but "quickly" is expunged. To love Christ's coming is a thought now obsolete with the many. The command to Timothy is not understood, because the love of it has disappeared.

Who among us are faithfully carrying out Paul's injunction to Timothy, "Fight the good fight of faith?" Has our faith in it, any unpopular element? "Lay hold on eternal life." The world with its allurements is drifting the treasure out of reach. To secure it is the object of our being. "Profess this good profession, before many witnesses." Speak it in private, and in all your assemblies. Keep it within, and astound your heart. "I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things and (before) Christ Jesus, who, under Pontius Pilate, (before Caiaphas, and the Jewish council) witnessed the good confession (την καλην ομολογιαν) that thou keep this commandment (the good confession) without spot, unrebukable (the doctrine kept pure) and handed down from generation to generation, till Christ appears. Which appearing in his own season, the season which he himself hath fixed, the blessed and only Potentate in the universe, will show, even the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who alone hath immortality." Macknight.

The modern confession is the Jewish confession without their knowledge and hope. Those only who keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, are giving meat in due season.

The Yoke of Jesus.

Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

The world's yoke is a heavy one. Its servitude is the servitude of sin, galling, painful and deathward. It may be gold and enwrought and elaborate taste and skill, but it is not easy, it is not light, it brings no rest. It weighs with crushing force on its burdened bearers. Their aching hearts beat longing and dissatisfied under silken robes and sheeny vests. They riot in luxurious living in palatial homes and seek for bliss in the wild rounds of gay society, but peace hides her face and flees away: she will only abide with those who wear the yoke of Christ.

"Take my yoke!" Oh, blessed invitation! Come ye burdened ones! fling the yoke of sin away. Give up your slavery to gain, to appetite, to pleasure. Let the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes and the pomp of life hold you no more. Bind yourselves to Christ! bring every thought into subjection to him. Bind yourselves by obedience: take the yoke. All other burdens will fail, and you will go singing on your way, your eyes fixed on the everlasting hills.

The yoke of Jesus is easy and his burden is light. December becomes as pleasant as May. Learn of Jesus! Take the yoke, and then learn to bear it! Submit, as he did, to the Father's will. He was meek and lowly in heart: so meek, so lowly that the father's will, not his, must be done. He bore the yoke, though it led him to the cross. The reward is a crown.

You are sinful and condemned. How can you hope to be saved if you will not take the yoke—if you will not learn of Jesus? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Eternal life is in God's son. As many as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ."

Put on the yoke, that you may be Christ's, Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise.

DIED.

BOICE—June 4, 1879, at Hastings, Mich., J. A Boice, aged forty-nine years.

He long contended with the fatal disease, consumption, but without avail. For seven weeks he was confined to his bed. During that time he was a great sufferer, but bore it with patience. Thirteen days he lived without food save a few spoonfuls of of broth. On the morning of the fourteenth day he was called to meet man's last enemy, death. Thus is a brief period, the only daughter, husband and father have been laid in the silent tomb, waiting the arch-angel's trump, while an afflicted family mourn their loss. A discourse by R. Hoyt, of Grand Rapids, from 1 Cor. xv. 26.

When we saw the King of terrors
Pierced on his pallid brow,
How we wept o'er man's errors—
But we in submission bow.

The family circle now is broken,
And our hearts are lone and sad,
But the words our Lord hath spoken
By our faith bids us be glad.

Change of Address.

Brother A. B. Magruder has changed his address from Winchester, Va., to Newtown, Frederick county, Va.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

There will be a conference at Dixon, Ill., to commence June 20, 1879, at Stoyock, N. C., and will continue over Sunday, composed of northern Ill., and southern Wis. A general invitation is extended to all who wish to attend. Come, brethren, come out to meeting and see each other once more and talk about the things of the kingdom once more, and encourage each other to continue in the good work and gain the things promised to the faithful ones. Direct to or via Illinois Central and the Northwestern railroads. Those coming by rail will enquire for John Anderson or Julius Anderson and they will be cared for.

By order of conference,
J. M. ARNOLD.

The Lord willing the semi-annual meeting of the Christian Association will be held at New Hartford, Butler county, Iowa, in connection with the tool meeting to be held there, commencing June 19, and holding over the second Sunday. We are informed brother H. V. Reed has promised to be there. A general invitation is extended to all who love the appearing of our Lord to be present, and it is hoped by the order of the board that all will come prepared to provide for themselves and the brethren in the immediate neighborhood of the meeting may not be overburdened.

POETRY.

Light in Darkness.

He knoweth the way that I take. Job xxiii. 8-10.

I know not—the way is so misty—
The joys or the griefs it shall bring,
What clouds are o'erhanging the future,
What flowers by the roadside shall spring;
But there's One who will journey beside me,
Nor in west nor in woe will forsake;
And this is my solace and comfort—
"He knoweth the way that I take."

I stand where the cross-roads are meeting,
And know not the right from the wrong;
No beckoning fingers direct me,
No welcome floats to me in song;
But my Guide will soon give me a token
By wilderness, mountain, or lake;
Whatever the darkness about me,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

It is true that I cannot perceive Him;
If backward or forward I go,
He hideth himself; but he tries me,
That more of his love I may know.
And oh, that the gold may be purer,
For the trouble that comes for love's sake!
I am not afraid of life's sorrow,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

Who knoweth? the Father who loves me,
The Savior who suffered for me,
The Spirit all present to guide me,
Whatever the future shall be.
So let me have hope and take courage,
This truth shall my joy-anthem make,
The Lord is my strong tower of refuge,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

And I know that the way leadeth homeward,
To the land of the pure and the blest,
To the country of ever-fair summer,
To the city of peace and of rest;
And there shall be healing for sickness,
And fountains life's fever to slake;
What matters beside? I go heavenward.
"He knoweth the way that I take."

COMMUNICATIONS.

Quarterly Assembly.

The Quarterly Assembly of the Church of God met according to announcement, near Mt. Zion, in Washington county, Md., on Friday night, the 23d of May, 1870. The One Faith was well represented from Virginia, both in person and by letter, thus presenting Christian salvation to the brethren of like precious faith in Maryland; and that we be distinguished as a peculiar people, zealous of good works, putting a difference between the clean and the unclean, and to put an end to an ordeal through which the Church of God in this part of the habitable have been passing, for some time past, caused by some who were baptized in the belief of an immortal soul and three kingdoms (using their own words) a Satanic kingdom, a kingdom of heaven which was at hand, (as they said ten years after they were baptized) eighteen hundred years ago, and the inheritable kingdom where they expected their immortal souls to go at death; and they having been courteously treated by the brethren of the One Faith, in the hope that they would take the advance step as all of the true students in the Lord's school have done and are doing, in order that their faith be made perfect, by being baptized after coming to understand the things of the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ. But, instead of thus proving their fidelity to the whole truth, whenever they hear of any one who has been baptized in the name of Jesus Christ coming, and submitting to a gospel baptism, after being convinced that they were not in the faith when baptized, they resort to a routine of abuse, saying that it unchristianizes them; also saying that, if we preach that faith in the things of the kingdom promised to the fathers, and name of Jesus Christ, is prerequisite to baptism, it is another so-called gospel, and calling the same a hobby, etc., and still claim recognition by the household of faith, therefore, before entering upon the important duties of the occasion the matter was duly and Scripturally considered by the assembly, and the decision was unanimous that the parties implicated were not in the faith when baptized; and that they be admonished in the spirit of Christ if they wish to work with us, to go right to the water, and have the saving name named on them according to the gospel of God in proper order—God being a God of order—and that the decision be included in this report, so that if they were not disposed to submit to the decision, as Abraham said to Lot, that there be no strife among us, the land is before us, etc., if one will go to the right the other can go to the left, as we claim that the polls will not close until the election is over. The party came into the community where the meeting was held, and, on hearing of the decision of the assembly, made an effort to disturb the meeting by making new arrangements for a meeting in the woods, and to keep up appearances, got an old man to be immersed, who did not know truth enough for to see that it made any difference in the order of the gospel whether one is baptized before or after having the faith of Abraham; but, as the Apostle Paul said, "None of these things moved us," such being a development of the character of the two women that are grinding in the great mill of time, and these will continue to grind until one is taken and the other left. The meeting was conducted in order until over Sunday in a new house of Brother Berkhit's, which was fitted up by him and a Brother Wolf, expressly for the purpose. These brethren seem to be willing to make any sacrifice in the bounds of reason for the glorious cause we profess. May they, and all in their midst who love the truth in sincerity, be found worthy to enter into that rest which remains for the people of God, when he comes whose right it is, to take unto himself his great power to reign.

The time was spent by the writer in discoursing on the exceeding great and precious promises made of God unto the fathers, by reading a portion of the first Epistle of Paul to the Church of God at Corinth, calling special attention to a portion of the second chapter, beginning with the ninth verse, as it has been perverted by being quoted to prove that man is not required to understand the things which we, as a people, contend for before baptism; which is what is revealed in the Holy Scriptures constituting the faith of Abraham, must become faith with us before baptism. We showed that to read (as they and all who are ignorant of God's righteousness do), just the one verse, would give a seeming support to the position that "eye hath not seen," or cannot see (as they would have it read), "nor ear heard; neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him," but just read as was done, much to the edification of the assembly, the next verse, which says, "But God hath revealed them unto us by his spirit." Here it was made plain that these holy men of God, as ministers sent forth from God, to minister to those that shall be heirs of salvation, spake plainly of the glorious doctrine of the kingdom of God to be established upon the earth, through the administration of which the eternal purposes of God in creating this earth and placing man upon it, would be fully developed; and while dwelling upon the purposes of God in the light of the glorious gospel, we were often made to exclaim—which I believe is the case with every child of God, "Who has tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come," that "eye had not seen nor ear heard; neither had it entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him," until it was revealed to the holy men of God who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit; as it is written by the Apostle Paul that God, by revelation, made known to him the mystery which in other ages was not made known to the sons of men as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the spirit; whereby when ye read ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ, which things were not spoken in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, comparing spiritual things with spiritual; or, as were clearly seen, with us it is comparing Scripture with Scripture, the word of God being spirit and life, that we might know the things which are freely given to us of God before baptism. Many infallible proofs were adduced to establish the position, such as, "I (Paul) am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, for therein is the righteousness of God revealed, from faith to faith," etc., and "the invisible things from the creation are clearly seen." And, again, "After ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation, and after ye believed (not before ye believed) ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, the eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." And, to cap the climax, this same faithful and true witness said the grace of God was given unto him that he should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery which, from the beginning, had been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ.

We have reasons to believe that the meeting will result in the glory of God by the little body in that part of the habitable as elsewhere, becoming established in the faith once delivered to the saints. Some say, owing to the disposition which has been made of the issue, that they have learned more than they ever knew before; others, that it has made them stronger than they ever were, fully demonstrating that ever consoling declaration, that "all things work together for good to them that love God." Notwithstanding, as in all wars, there are some deserters who give encouragement to the enemy, yet the conclusion of the assembly was, that it would be a poor government that would let a few ripples hinder its administration, instead of which they determined that they would, by the grace of God, keep their banner unfurled, and sailing as the old ship of Zion, until it reaches the haven of eternal rest. In the soul-inspiring language of the poet,—

When for eternal world's we steer,
And seas are calm and skies are clear,
And faith in lively exercise
And distant hills of Canaan rise.

With cheerful hope our eyes explore
Each landmark on the distant shore,
The tree of life, the pastures green,
The golden streets, the crystal stream.

The nearer still we draw to land
More eager all our powers expand;
With steady helm and free best sail
Our anchor drops within the vail.

SELECTIONS.

[The Christian Herald and Signs of our Times.]

JERUSALEM—HER FUTURE.

A Lecture Delivered by the Rev. Dr. Newman at the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, New York, May 20th, 1870.

The Total Destruction of the Temple—An unbelieving Englishman—The Present Condition of Jerusalem—The Restoration will be a Literal Restoration—There are to be Geographical Changes—The Mount of Olives to be Cleft—A New River to Break Forth—The Preservation of the Jews Remarkable—The Whole World has Persecuted Them—Their Present Eminence in Wealth and Power—A New Nationality Indispensable—The Central Position of Jerusalem—Their Present Indisposition to Return Accords with the History of the Race—the Completeness of their Present Organization—Their Adaptability. The Effect of their Restoration on the Rest of the Earth—A Stone found with a Remarkable Inscription.

At the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans the temple was set on fire, and that magnificent pile became a heap of ruins. It remained a ruin for seventy years. The whole city was destroyed and laid waste, except a portion of the western wall, with one or two towers which were left standing as an evidence of the strength of the city and a proof of the prowess of the Romans.

After the lapse of seventy years the Emperor Hadrian rebuilt Jerusalem, but the temple area he ploughed up, thus fulfilling the prophecy of our Lord, that not one stone should be left upon another. You remember the occasion of the utterance of that prophecy. The disciples had drawn the attention of Jesus to the beautiful stones of the temple, and Jesus said (Matthew xxiv. 2): "Verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

I met an Englishman, when I was in Palestine first, who had come all the way to write a book against the Bible, supposing he should there be able to find evidence of the failure of its prophecies. He pointed out to me triumphantly five courses of stones one upon another, and said, "Behold the utter failure of your Master's prophecies! There are five courses of stone regularly laid, twenty-five feet in length, not isolated heaps. Where now is the value of your Master's prophecy, that not one stone should remain upon another?" Well, it was one of those moments in a man's life when he feels a challenge has been thrown down which he must accept; but I did not know what to say, for there were the stones, each one bearing an imprint I could not deny was proof of their date before Christ. I did the best thing for us always to do under like circumstances—I turned to the passage and read it over again. There I found that our Lord was not speaking of the wall of which these stones clearly formed a part, but of the temple itself.

Hadrian ploughed up the temple area, and right there where the magnificent fane of Solomon had stood, there he erected a temple to Jupiter and there he placed a statue of himself. After him came Constantine and his mother Helena, who discovered what she believed to be the site of the holy sepulchre, and reared the structure which commemorates that event, as well as another structure on the Mount of Olives. Afterwards the Holy Land passed under the rule of the Persians, then of the Saracens until it was rescued by the Crusaders, then under Saladin's rule, and since his day the crescent has floated over the Holy City.

The city has at the present time a population continually increasing, and the majority of that population are Jews and Christians. The Turks rule, but they are outnumbered both by the Jews and the Christians, and on Mount Zion stands a Christian church.

But our subject is Jerusalem in the future, not in the past; and here we find three theories. The first, that the restoration of the Jews is a spiritual one, and which will be fulfilled at their conversion. The second, that the Christian Church of all nationalities constitutes the Israel of God, and to that Israel belong the promises. The third theory is that of a literal restoration. I am inclined to the second theory; but this is not a matter for inclination, but must be settled by the word of God. The text is unmistakable in its teaching, it points to a literal interpretation; it predicts a literal restoration, and I follow it.

Jeremiah said (Jeremiah xxxi. 38, 40): "The city shall be built from the tower of Hananeel to the gate of the corner: it shall not be plucked up or thrown down forever." So it shall be the last city, and it shall stand forever. You cannot apply this to the Jerusalem of the past, for the Jerusalem of the past is torn up. Isaiah is equally clear, for he says (Isaiah lxii. 4). "Thou shalt no more be termed forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate," etc. And again (Isaiah ii. 2). "It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it." That means, that Jerusalem shall yet become the metropolis of the whole world. It is the city best fitted by its geographical position for the centre of railroad communication, and to be the centre of general communication for the east and the west; to be, in fact, the metropolis of the whole world.

But I take it there are to be considerable geological changes, especially in and about Jerusalem, before that takes place. Zechariah has said (xiv. 4), "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem, on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south." Now mark with what accuracy the prophet speaks: he says one half shall remove toward the north and one half toward the south. Had it been toward the east and west the division would involve the destruction of the city. That such a convulsion is possible, we know; for it is not long since that a very similar event took place in Armenia. Bear in mind, too, that this prediction is confirmed both by Joel and Ezekiel.

After this we are told an immense river will break forth which will flow from the Jordon to the Mediterranean Sea. This too is possible, for in the Armenian convulsion to which I have previously alluded there sprang up in one night a mighty river; and in one of the geological convulsions of South America there sprang forth with equal suddenness a new river which is flowing to this day. When, too, it is remembered that the soil of Jerusalem is limestone, the possibility of this sudden appearance of a stream of water will be seen.

It will be remembered that all the water which was used in the temple had to be brought into the city from outside the walls. Solomon constructed an aqueduct to supply the temple; I followed it mile after mile, and it would be no discredit to this city or any other city of the present day, to receive and store the water thus brought. A sea or large reservoir was constructed under the temple. It was cut out of the solid rock, with the pillars to support it left intact. This reservoir was 670 feet in circuit, and was capable of containing three million gallons of water. Out of this reservoir, or sea, the priests obtained the water required for the temple ceremonies; and you will find, if you read your Bible, that a very large quantity was needed for that purpose. It was drawn up in buckets by the priests or their assistants.

The amazing fertility of the soil, which is over and over again predicted as a sign of the approaching consummation, has been the subject of examination and experiment by eminent chemists, and when I was in Palestine I met an Englishman who explained to me how the crumbling of these mountain-tops and various changes continually going on were preparing a soil which at the appointed time would cause even the desert to rejoice and blossom as the rose (Isaiah xxxv. 1).

It is clear that the prophecy, "The Lord shall set his hand the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left" (Isaiah xi. 11), has never been fulfilled. Only once has the Lord done that, and that was in the time of the return from Babylon. But this time the recovery is to be not from one country, but from the four corners of the earth. Read the list of countries mentioned in this eleventh chapter of Isaiah, and you will find that in those countries at the present day there are a large number of Hebrews. Indeed, go where you may, you find the representatives of the race. They are the most ubiquitous portion of the whole human race.

It is not remarkable that the Jewish people should have been preserved, for there are peoples still in existence as old or older than the Hebrew. The Chinese is one among others. The significance is not therefore in the mere fact of their preservation. Nothing is wonderful that is common. But the remarkable fact is that the people should have survived notwithstanding that every people under the sun have been their enemies, and have endeavored to effect their extermination. What a magnificent military history is that of the Jews! If they had a Gibbon to write it, as Gibbon did the decline and fall of the Roman Empire, how the world would admire and wonder! The nations of the whole earth combined against them. No nation has ever been so proscribed, persecuted, and outraged. There is not a country except your own in all Christendom whose garments are not red with the blood of the slaughtered Hebrews. Seven times have they been driven from France. Eight hundred thousand were driven out of Spain. Edward the First banished them from England. At the coronation of Richard I. of England the Jews in large numbers were slaughtered in honor of the coronation. The black plague which devastated Germany was attributed to the Jews, who were falsely charged with having poisoned the wells of water, and they were gathered together in squares and publicly and deliberately burned. Russia would not allow them to enter any honorable profession. Even Switzerland, the land of Tell, drove them from her Cantons.

In Rome the Pontiff consigned the Hebrews to particular quarters of the city, and compelled them to wear a badge whenever they went abroad, in order to ostracize them and to injure them in the eyes of the Christian citizens. And when the Pontiff went in state to Saint Peter's to celebrate Christ's entry into Jerusalem, the Jews were stoned by the populace. Thus though the preservation of the Jewish race is not remarkable in itself, it is remarkable in the fact that they have survived in spite of the opposition of the whole world.

They have survived in numbers, in influence, and in wealth. They can boast of Rothschild in finance, a Montefiore in charity, Mendelssohn in music, Rachel in tragedy, and the statesman who beyond all others is foremost in the world's eyes and exercises the most potent influence in her councils, who possesses the confidence of his queen, a queen whose subjects are everywhere, and the sound of whose drums keeps march with the procession of the sun in the heavens, who has his hand on the key of every palace in Europe; that statesman—Disraeli—makes a boast of his Hebrew origin.

God loves a touch of poetic justice in his dealings, and in the present powerful and influential position of the representatives of the Hebrew race after nineteen centuries of persecution that poetic justice is fulfilled. Like an olive, the race seems to be indestructible. You know if you cut an olive down to the ground you do not kill it; it will sprout again from the root and grow into a stronger tree than before; and so will this people; they will yet arise in strength, and from being the persecuted and downtrodden they will become the rulers of the earth.

The man who first lifted a voice in behalf of the Jew was an American. Do not let us forget that significant fact; that man was Benjamin Franklin. So the beginning of their emancipation was in this country. Then followed Lord John Russell, and then Daniel O'Connell. The time of their humiliation is well nigh over; the prophecy "they shall have no rest" has not failed, but it is exhausted.

Then, too, consider that a new nationality is indispensable for the reformation and reconstruction of the east. The prophecy runs, "I have set Jerusalem in the midst of the nations round about;" that is, she will occupy the middle line, the meeting place between the civilization of the east and the civilization of the west. For such a mission her geographical position is eminently adapted.

She occupies a tract of land which is the only natural site for a city, a place fitted by nature to be a great commercial and railroad centre connecting the valley of the Euphrates, Egypt, and Asia Minor with Europe and the west. Thus it will become a very Pharos, a light political and religious for the whole earth.

There must be a new nation in the east. The whole region demands it. The east is exhausted; the Levant is exhausted; there is no future for the Greeks; years ago I cherished the hope that the Greeks were the coming nation and would eventually possess Constantinople, but the years that have intervened since then have demonstrated conclusively the fallacy of the hope. The Turks are exhausted, or ought to be exhausted, even if they are not, for they are the very worst specimens of humanity we know of outside of perdition.

A new dispensation needs a new people, and this people will be produced by the Almighty when the new dispensation is introduced. This new people are to come from Elam, from Egypt, and from the isles of the sea.

Strange to say, the Hebrews manifest no desire to return; but when we look to their history the mystery is explained; it is not strange at all, for they have always been a stiff-necked and obstinate people. They did not want to go out of Egypt, nor out of Babylon, and when Ezra went up, only 43,000 went with him. A large number remained behind, and their descendants are there to this day.

It is my belief that they were chosen for this very thing, that Jehovah might show his power in a stiff-necked and gainsaying people. The Almighty does not consult a nation or a person about his purposes. When he wants you as an instrument he will employ you nolens volens. Had these Hebrews migrated to the moon and the Almighty in his purposes desired to use them, he would bring them back.

Their organization at the present time is more thorough than it has ever been before. In every land they now have a correspondence bureau, and they hold national conventions which unite them for any practical purpose they may form. These national conventions not long ago sent delegates to a world convention in Paris, and there every language under heaven was represented. Thus scattered over the world they form the singular spectacle of a nation without a country, a people without a place.

The Hebrews possess another trait of character which is worthy of remark; they more readily than any other race adapt themselves to the habits of the people among whom they are thrown, and yet without losing an atom of their originality. In this city the men and women sit together in the synagogues, showing that the western estimate of women has entered into their minds, thus giving her her proper place in the society, and which she loses in the eastern mind. In Cincinnati there is a Jewish college, where the highest branches of learning are included in the curriculum; and there are Jewish schools in every city.

The present Jewish population of Jerusalem number 10,000; the entire population is 30,000, of whom about 9,000 are Mahommedans, and the rest Christians of different sects. The Jews have a beautiful synagogue and a cemetery on the Mount of Olives, but they are not permitted to enter the temple area. They gather at a place outside the old wall every Friday, and there, at their wailing-place, the cry goes up to God, "O Lord! how long?" The reply is "Not forever." They will yet come from Egypt, from Elam, and from the isles of the sea. Some will come for business, some will come for pleasure, some for devotion, and some for ambition, when Jerusalem becomes a metropolis and the joy of the whole earth.

The effect of their return on the rest of the world will be most marked, for, as the Apostle Paul remarks (Romans xi. 12): "If the fall of them were the riches of the world, how much more their fulness." Where could we find men so fitted for the evangelization of the world? They have been everywhere, and are the most polyglot people under heaven. There is no language on earth which has not been spoken by a Jew.

Jerusalem is a buried city. A city beneath a city. Under the debris, which has fallen in some places to the depth of one to two hundred feet, and which successive captures of the city have accumulated, there are buried fragments above three thousand years of age. On a stone which was dug out of a heap of this refuse recently, was this inscription: "The light of the world is Jesus Christ." That light will shine till this people and the whole world are saved.

The centripetal and centrifugal forces which govern the material world are not more certain in their operation than is the certainty of the fulfillment of God's promise, that the Son of man shall yet rule the world, and shall have the nations of the earth given to him for his inheritance. You and I may pass away—I with my Christianity, you with your infidelity; but this divine Lord will march on and on until the last hour of recorded time, when all the world shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord.

Since the occupation of Rome by the Italian government as the capital of united Italy, twelve Protestant churches have been built there, of which three are Episcopal, two Methodist, one Presbyterian, one Baptist, and one called the American Union church. The others are the Liberal church, the Waldesian church, the Evangelic, Military church, and the Apostolic Church of Rome.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates present belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Kingdom of God.

Then said he unto them, therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven, is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old. Matt. xiii. 52.

In our preceding article we have partially examined this subject in the light of the Old Testament Scriptures. It is a deep mine of wealth, and contains bright gems whose value is above rubies, and so with everything that relates to the kingdom of God, the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ and the glory that is to be had at his revelation. In the light of what we have written, in comparing the new with the old, or the beginning with the end of the ages from Adam to the end of the prophetic age, man did not improve in righteousness. Reforming men has become a hopeless business, as a whole; but a few have heard the word of the kingdom, have received it into good and honest hearts. What was the state and condition of things in the Hebrew nation and church? It was anything but creditable to a people who had been so highly favored of the Lord. Through their disobedience to God's commands they had been carried away captive by their enemies into heathen lands, and had apostatized from the Lord by learning the ways of the heathen. This needs no argument. We only have to read the Master's denunciations of their apostasy from the truth in his discussions with them.

The burden of the Hebrew prophets relates almost entirely to their own nation and people; but little in comparison is said of the gentiles, but enough, however, is recorded by the Sacred Historian to make known their true condition, and to warrant us in saying that, at the end of the prophetic age, they were no more in harmony with the mind and purpose of God than those who undertook to build the tower of Babel on the plains of Shinar. Can we say anything better of the Hebrew nation which composed the church as well as the kingdom of God, (the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God and the kingdom of Israel are synonymous terms, used interchangeably in the Scriptures), and, notwithstanding, they were the people of God's own choosing through whom the promised seed should come, (Gen. iii, 15,) a people highly favored of the Lord, yea, far above all other nations; (the rich man in the parable, if you please,) and if it were possible for men in mortal flesh to rule and walk in harmony with the divine mind, we certainly should expect to find such in, or among this people, but the sequel shows the opposite.

We have, in our investigations, passed rapidly down the stream of time to the commencement of the new, or the beginning of the gospel age. It will be well at the outset to understand God's purpose and the work to be accomplished in the dispensation of grace or favor to both Jews and Gentiles. The temple service with all its rites and ceremonies is to be laid aside, every man for himself, both Jew and Gentile on equal ground, each held responsible for the free volition of his will. No compulsion; these waters of life flow freely, and are offered to all without money and without price.

The commencement of the gospel age is, in some respects, like the ages that preceded it. Adam and Eve were made in the image of God, and put upon probation for eternal life, and could have won the prize if they had chose to do so. They had power to stand, but were free to fall.

Noah and his family (eight persons) were found righteous before God, and were saved from the deluge of waters to repeople the earth. So in Abraham's time, so in Moses' time a few are found in harmony with God and his plans and purposes; so at the beginning of the present age a few were found in the temple waiting for the consolation of Israel. A new era is about to be inaugurated; the Holy Spirit is to be given in large measure; the gospel will be a power for good; the Son of God is to be the leading star in the new galaxy, empowered with miraculous strength to perform wonders in the sight of men. The apostate Hebrew church is awe stricken; the Roman or Gentile world stand aghast; the literati are amazed and wonder; the few holy ones are elated with hope and electrified with joy, and exclaiming, "Now letteat thou thy servants depart in peace, for our eyes have seen thy salvation,' and are strong in faith that the good time so gloriously set forth by God's holy prophets, has surely come. A forerunner to herald in the new dispensation has appeared upon the mountains of Israel in exact fulfillment of the Hebrew prophets. Isa. xliv. Balaam's star is seen in the east; the Magi follow its guidance to the plains of Bethlehem; a multitude of heavenly hosts are in attendance; a shout goes up, "Peace on earth and good will to men." What need we of further proof? God's Messiah has indeed come. Redemption in Israel is a foregone conclusion; but, oh, how blind and how dull of comprehension are both the Hebrew and the Gentile churches to understand many of the plainest truths of the word of God! It is hard to tell which has made the greatest blunder in regard to the great scheme of redemption, the manner of Christ's first and second coming, of ruling the world in righteousness, by, or through the kingdom of God.

How very few, even in this boasted age of light and knowledge, understand or comprehend God's purpose in setting off a portion of time called the times of the Gentiles. It seems almost impossible that any people could have so egregiously blundered as have the Orthodox churches of the nineteenth century; that this is to be the last age of our beautiful world; that we are to have a millennium of 1,000 years, in which the world or race is to be converted to Christ by the gospel under its present arrangement, and that all men have immortal souls that fly off to heaven when they die. What then? According to Wm. Miller's theory, the world is to be burnt up, and a new heaven and a new earth are created instanter by an act of physical omnipotence. This theory has no support in the Word of God, nor logical argument, nor common intelligence, and I like to have said common sense. We have considered some of the leading ideas in the negative, or the unscriptural side of this important question. We will present the positive in as clear and Scriptural manner as we are capable of doing.

Acts xv. 14, 15, 16, 17. Simeon or Simon hath delivered how God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name. Acts x. And to this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written. After this will I return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof and will set it up. That the residue of men might seek after the Lord and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. It seems hardly necessary for any comment upon so plain a statement of this utterance of the Holy Spirit through the inspired Apostles; James quotes from Amos ix., reference is made to Acts x., which gives a very clear statement of Cornelius and his household, the first Gentile converts to the Christian faith--this shows clearly God's purpose viz., to visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name. What do we understand by a people for His name; if we will turn to Exodus xix. 5, 6, and then to 1 Peter ii. 9, we will get a clear understanding of what James was trying to impress on the minds of the first Christian conference, and also God's purpose in his grace or favor to the Gentiles. The Jews were the first called and offered an inestemable boon upon conditions of obedience to his commands, but they were a stiff-necked and a rebellious people, uncircumcised in heart and ears, and thus that other Scripture "seeing you judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, do we turn to the Gentiles." Peter uses the same language and applies it to the Gentile Church washed in Jesus's blood. Does the Gentile church or the Church of God realize the high and holy calling, and the position which she is to fill as joint rulers with Christ in the government of the world? Are we indeed, a peculiar, a holy people. I stop--I reflect and tremble, and ask, are our hands clean and our hearts pure, realizing that such and such only will enter into the hill of the Lord. We learn from the record given of the early part of the gospel age, that superior light, accompanied by the pouring out of the Holy Spirit and the miraculous power with which Christ and his Apostles were endowed with, and the rapid spread of the gospel or good news of the kingdom with a large increase of converts to the faith; surely this was good reason for believing that the long looked for and greatly desired good time had come; but man seeth not as God seeth; a further trial is in waiting for the Church of God, the little flock; they must be purified made white and tried, as gold is tried in a furnace which is not very comforting to the old man of the flesh.

Alas, how sad the picture. After the two first centuries of the Christian era or Gentile age, the once united and happy body of believers the Church of God organized by the Apostles under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit; divided and subdivided, rent by dissension into fragments which culminates in the papal church or hierarchy; the man of sin, the lawless one; but the called out, chosen, and faithful little spartan band hold on their way and earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. Oh Lord save the scattered remnant gathered them into the kingdom, Amen.

The reformation under Luther incongregates a new state of things. The papal heart receives a deadly wound and dies a hard death, but strictly just after so bloody and cruel a career. A shudder of horror, our blood curdles while we read from the Encyclopedia of religious knowledge that fifty-six millions is a moderate estimate of the slaughter of God's saints by that lawless one. We shrink from any further statement of the fearful state of the church during the dark ages but with the Protestant reformation, hope revives; but only to be again disappointed; many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased; this prophesy relates to the time of the end, the end of the age or Gentile time, and he has had a wonderful fulfillment in relation to the arts and sciences and the improvements of many things that are beneficient to mankind, but how about morality and holy godly living? the text quoted from Daniel must not conflict with the positive teaching of Christ. Read carefully Matt. xxiv., and Luke xxi., compare the predictions of the Son of God with the moral condition of the world, and the apostasy of the churches and we are forced to the conclusion that as it was in the days of Noah and Lott, so will it be in the coming of him. Have we in our investigations overdrawn the picture of the first ages? we think not; let the reader carefully compare the beginning of the gospel age with its ends and he cannot escape the conclusion that instead of the church converting the world to Bible christianity, the world has converted the churches! hark a voice from the mountains and a crash from the hills; "the lion is come up from his thicket, and the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way and is going forth from his place to make the land desolate, and the cities shall be laid waste without an inhabitant," Jer. iv. 7. There are two very noticable prayer meetings recorded in the New Testament, one at the beginning, and the other at the end of the gospel age; the first was held by the Apostles and the infant church in an upper room in Jerusalem, waiting for the descent of the Holy Spirit; the other is at the end of the age, a very little way in the future, and will be much more numerously attended. It will be at the opening of the sixth seal. Rev. vi. 12-17. And now after a careful examination of the subject, what is the conclusion of the whole matter? we answer, first to take out a people for His name and not to convert or Christianize the world; and second at the end of this, as of the previous ages men would greatly Apostasize from the truth; and that there would be less holy godliness at the end than at the beginning. Our firm conviction is that the end is hard upon us; that Master may rise up and shut the door at any moment; and he that is unjust let him be unjust still, and he that is filthy let him be filthy still. In our next we shall treat of the age to come, the judgment age, the Restitution age and the reign of Christ in Millennial glory.

NEWELL BOND.

To Brethren B. Wilson, T. E. Adams and all others concerned, Greeting.

First of all by way of explanation I have been from home a long time, laboring, not as a copper smith, but to open a silver and copper mine, in Benton Co., Mo., and hope in a few weeks to have the thing fully developed. I had not seen a RESTITUTION till I got home.

Bro. Adams wants to know what we who claim the promises mean by the apostasy. I answer for one--just what the word signifies, as rendered in the King's Bible, and as Bro. Wilson has given it in the diaglott (interlineary).

The falling away. To my mind this falling away could not refer to the Jews, as Bro. Wilson's conclusions in RESTITUTION of Feb. 20, would have it, for they fell and were cast off before the Gentiles were saved. See Rom. xi. 11. By their fall the Gentiles have salvation. The Jews had been cast off because of their apostasy, and they cannot fall again before they are grafted in again, and this will not take place till the deliverer comes to Zion to turn away ungodliness from Jacob. Rom xi. 26. When the deliverer comes to reign, all the saints will be with him. Zech. xiv. 5.

Now, Bro. Adams, the fall that Paul speaks of must refer to the church. The man of sin is the result of this apostasy. But questions arise: Did all the membership fall, and how great was this fall? Did the church lose the faith entire or in part? Paul says that some would depart from the faith, and John says that all the world wandered after and worshipped the beast and the dragon. Rev. xiii. Bro. Wilson intimates that Paul's man of sin and this beast are one, and says I do not look for the coming of antichrist as the man of sin. Before the removal of the church (the apostasy) the departure. Well, but John says that this beast makes war with the saints and overcomes them. Now, if the church that is to be taken are not the saints who on earth are? If the broken off Jews are saints (holy ones) why is it that they are not taken? Will Jesus take a holy Gentile and leave a holy Jew in the clutches of the man of sin. Daniel was a servant of Jehovah and a believer in his Anointed. Then who are Daniel's people if not those who have the faith of Daniel? If the church is not made up of the saints of Most High it is because of the apostasy. The horn, the beast, the man of sin was to make war with, wore out and overcome the saints of the Most High, and this people is my people and their God is my God. Hence, I conclude that they are Daniel's people. But if Bro. W. is correct, the church is taken out and safely housed with the Lord before the man of sin arises. According to Paul two things was to take place before the Lord's day began, the falling away and the man of sin. But if the Lord's day does not begin when the Lord comes when will it begin.

Paul teaches that the Lord does come down out of heaven before the dead in Christ are raised, and they arise before the living are taken. The resurrection takes place in the Lord's day, and the man of sin was to be revilled before the Lord's days began.

Now, Bro. Adams, let's look at your questions ranting an answer in RESTITUTION of April 16. To those three questions you can find the answer in Rev. xiii. 3, 4. But Bro. Adams I have just read your warm exhortation headed "Faith, Hope and Charity," and have no doubt but you regard me as one of the opposition, but was not aware of having torn down anything. I did give in part my views to the readers of THE RESTITUTION on the promises relating to the holy spirit, and should have given them in full and met all objections, had not the editor told us that he was crowded with MS. Having hope in God that what he has promised he is able to perform, I abide the issue. But dear brother, let me ask you to reconsider, for your conclusions in regard to the time, show those gifts were to fail, cannot satisfy all minds. The perfect things that Paul speaks of did not come when John finished the book of his prophesy. He says "for we know in part and we prophesy in part, but when that which is perfect is come then that which is in part shall be done away." This, then, fixes the point of time. Now, hear him in verse 12. "Now I know in part, but then shall I know also as I am known,"--the then of this verse is the when of verse 10. When that which is perfect is come! Did Paul know as he was known when John finished his prophesy. But if gifts of the spirit was to cease by limitation why does Paul for the third time in this letter exhort his brethren to desire these gifts. See chap. xiv. 1, 39; xii. 31. Who are Paul's brethren and to whom does this exhortation refer. Unto the church of God at Corinth, to them who are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called saints. With all that in every place call on the name, &c. chap. i. 2. To all in every place he gives the exhortation to desire and ask after these gifts. Who is Paul's brother, if not the one that has the faith of Paul. The same rule that restricts the promises relating to the spirit to the days of the apostles, will limit every precept and promise made through them to the same period. It doesn't meet the issue to say that none of the sects have the spirit power. The fact that these conflicting sects exist is evidence of the apostasy (like mother, like daughter). But Bro. Adams wants a demonstration and not argument. Well, the brother is a man of much patience and can wait, and in the meanwhile let him study the sure word of prophesy, that he may understand the last day signs as demonstrations.

Now, brother, I was not aware that those whom you denominate of the opposition, had discarded water baptism. For one, I believe it is just as essential to-day as when instituted, and believing this I believe that a promise coupled with the command is just as good as when made. Lest some should misunderstand and thus misrepresent, I believe that the body of Christ, the bride of the lamb's wife is one. Each member of this one body receives a measure of the one spirit. The giver dispenses the gifts as seems good to him. Each member is anointed, renovated, baptized, in the one spirit. The one spirit was in prophets and holy men of old. It was given to Jesus the head of this one body: not in measure, but to the number in measure, meted out according to rank, fitting each for his work. That it was lost by the Jews because of their apostasy from Malichi and onward till Jesus was about to appear amongst them. It was given to the church as her helper on Pentecost to remain with her during the age, if she remain loyal.

But lawlessness was at work in Paul's day, and culminated in the apostasy, and the apostate church gave birth to the man of sin, that the sects of the world are but so many parts or members of a unit body, and that body is antichrist. That men are in the apostasy just in proportion as they hold her doctrine and practice her precepts. That the spirit will be poured out upon those who prepare themselves to receive it in the closing days of Gentile times, and the holy spirit will convict the great whore before she enters into judgment.

Bro. Adams, on the rock I take my stand to abide the issue. But I must bid good-bye to THE RESTITUTION and its many readers for a few weeks or till I get that silver mine opened. May peace and love abound, for love fails not at any time--prophesy, tongues and knowledge, all vanished in the fog of the apostasy.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

U. Mann: Words have double weight when there is a man and character back of them.

Archbishop Whately: When people have resolved to shut their eyes, or to look only on one side, it is of little consequence how good their eyes may be.

Be trustful, be steadfast, whatever befide thee,
Only one thing do thou ask of the Lord,--
Grace to go forward wherever he guide thee,
Simply believing the truth of his word.

While condemning enthusiasm, did you ever quite get rid of a feeling that, however unfit it was for life, it would be far from an undesirable state to die in? The truth is that by enthusiasm men mean the being more religious than themselves.
